Mr. Carl Laemmle,
Universal Film Mfg. Co.,
1600 Broadway
New York City.

My dear Mr. Laemmle:

The Heart of Humanity is an achievement. It is big. Big in many ways and for many reasons. Too many reasons to state here. However, to Mr. Holubar and Universal I must express my congratulations and gratitude. Gratitude because as a Frenchman I noted with sincere admiration Mr. Holubar's acceptance and introduction of the strong French technique. This is the first indication of the American director's incorporation and blending of this technique with the ingenuity of American production.

The result speaks for itself.

Cordially,

Capellani

Mr.John H. Kunsky,
Madison Theatre Building,
Detroit, Mich.

My dear Mr. Kunsky:-

Your inquiries of February 28th and March 10th regarding our initial production "VIRTUOUS MEN," starring E. K. Lincoln, have been received.

My delay in answering your letters has been due to the fact that I did not wish to make any statement in regard to the picture until it was finally assembled and titled so that I could see it in its completed form.

Appreciating that you are a leading exhibitor with extensive theatre interests and knowing that your success has been due solely to sound judgment, - I wish to call your attention to the fact that in the making of this picture our first consideration was that it should contain all the basic elements of box office value.

Now that I have seen the picture on the screen, I can say with real conviction that under the masterful hand of Ralph Ince, this exacting standard has been fulfilled.

Combining a powerful story, a notable cast, elaborate sets, perfect photography and last but not least,- a wonderful title, it leaves nothing to be desired to spell success and make it the biggest box office clean-up of the year.

We know that we have a great picture and we would like to have you see it so that you may decide whether you will book it in your Madison Theatre for one week, two weeks or longer.

Very truly yours,

Herbert Lubin

President.

P. S. - I forgot to tell you that in one scene over five thousand people appear.

Rosie Mendelsohn of Ludlow Street and New York's tragi-comedy East Side—and Charles Howard, the hungry, homeless young author. Love and romance; youth that finds happiness in each other's arms. And the great Law of Israel to build a wall between them.

Here is the sweetest and most human love story Madge Kennedy has ever had, as well as a happy, wholesome, laughter-giving comedy. Advertise this to your patrons as "the story of people you love to meet." The public is going to say "we like this better than any other Madge Kennedy picture."

"BOLSHEVISM ON TRIAL"

OF all the specials ever offered to the nation's exhibitors this is the most timely, as it reaches the theatres at a moment when the fate of the entire world seems to hang upon the progress or the downfall of Bolshevism.

In this great photodrama is shown what might happen to an American community if it should be dominated by a Bolshevistic leader. It is a story which enthralls and fascinates from start to finish.

"BOLSHEVISM ON TRIAL"

is not propaganda—is not a preachment—is not "made to order"—is not inspired or projected by any person or group of persons as a moulder of public opinion. It is a photodrama only, but a photodrama whose theme and central interest happen to be the most interesting topic of the civilized world today. It is entertainment of the sort which grips and thrills, which amuses and terrifies, and which never fails at any moment to entertain.

is ready for immediate presentation. The production will be kept before the public by a consistent campaign of advertising and publicity.

This feature is adapted from Thomas Dixon's great novel, "Comrades," with continuity and titles by Harry Chandlee. The story was produced by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Isaac Wolper, President, and is presented in six reels.

The Eternal Magdalene

By Robert H McLaughlin

One of the most important motion picture productions of the year.

First released April 20 as an Easter-season Special production, "The Eternal Magdalene" is being booked by the leading first run theatres and behind it every exhibitor is devising and carrying out one of the biggest publicity and advertising campaigns that he has ever made on a motion picture.

A panorama-drama of the hunted woman in ten thousand towns; in your town and my town. A story of love and loyalty; of temptation and redemption; a story of human hearts and hypocrites. A plot of the present moment about men and women and boys and girls with whom you rub elbows every hour of your life.

GOLDWYN

The S. R. O. Sign Is Out an Hour Earlier Than Usual at the Rialto!

This is what the latest remarkable Rex Beach production, made with the customary Goldwyn care and fineness of detail, is doing in New York, as well in all the larger first-run cities of America. All over America exhibitors are giving it extra playing dates and many are raising their prices.

More Verdicts of Important Critics

New York Telegraph: The S. R. O. sign is out an hour earlier than usual at the Rialto. Impressive and engrossing in plot describes "The Brand." Crowds stand in the rain waiting to get in.

New York Globe: A strenuous melodrama is "The Brand" told against a majestic Yukon background of snow and pines.

New York Times: "The Brand" at the Rialto has inherent force and beauty. It is one of Rex Beach's powerful stories of Alaska.

New York Post: Rex Beach's "The Brand" is a big, entertaining picture of the Alaskan country.

New York Tribune: The wonderful scenes in "The Brand" make you hold your breath and be thankful for motion pictures which have made such things possible.

New York Mail: A marvelous picture of Alaska is "The Brand," the week's headliner at the Rialto.

Chicago American: Another blinding glimpse of Rex Beach's Alaska, where man's blood runs hot and red. A great story of a strong man and a weak woman.

Chicago Post: It takes a picture like "The Brand" to show us how vividly the screen can present a story. Rex Beach always appeals to the heart and the eye.

"is running the leader a close race... His future is full of promise."

This is the Philadelphia North American's comment on the star of Betzwood's thrilling, dramatic "Speedy Meade." Of this picture it says: "A great advance over his other pictures."

"Here is the real Western picture; every reel crowded with action and Bennison to offer a great deal more than good looks," says the Philadelphia Press.

"Speedy Meade" is Louis Bennison's strongest, fastest, best picture," says the Philadelphia Inquirer. ' This star is a leader, right from the beginning."

"You'll see what a great actor Louis Bennison is the momen you see 'Speedy Meade'," says the Philadelphia Record. "He shows you the meaning of personality."

"Quite at his best—a breezy, ingratiating hero," says the Philadelphia Bulletin.

"Louis Bennison's feats in 'Speedy Meade' will give you all the thrills you will want or ought to have in a picture," says the Philadelphia Ledger.

The most conclusive and convincing proof of the popularity of "Smiling Bill" Parsons in Capitol Comedies is found in the presence of Capitol Comedies in more than 3,000 motion picture theatres.

By the greatest stretch of your imagination you will be unable to name more than six screen comedians appearing in one or two-reel comedies. Of this number three, at the outside, are able to offer twenty-six comedies a year. The others produce and offer less.

Therefore in 14,000 theatres, many of them with daily or thrice-a-week changes, three comedians are the reigning favorites of the American public, making a sustained number of appearances. Goldwyn's distribution and "Smiling Bill" Parsons' clean, laughable comedies have given him the actual leadership, based on the number of accounts served.

A WOMAN HATER'S ROMANCE

Dalion didn't care for girls,
Until a fair one shook her curls
Right in his face. Then this chap he Smiled knowingly.

He stowed away aboard a ship;
His transportation he had to skip;
For pockets had been picked, you see,
Quite ruthlessly.

Eight bells, and all is well!
Of this tale there's more to tell;
For this chap he just raised the dickens,
Once he developed a taste for chickens!

Firing furnaces, mopping a deck;
Then, from a girl to win respect,
He beats a bully who is yellow.

Suggestions for the Use of Press Cuts

Triangle Special Presentation

Taylor Holmes in "A Regular Fellow"

Herewith we illustrate two single and one double-column press cuts available at your local Triangle exchange on this special production. Thumb-nail and star cuts also are available. These can be used in numerous ways by the progressive exhibitor to sell " A Regular Fellow " to his patrons.

TAYLOR HOLMES IN
"A REGULAR FELLOW"

Poor chap. Men disliked him and he hadn't many friends. You see he despised women.

Not that he was born to hate the fair sex. All his life he had been pursued by a girl whom relatives had selected as a mate for him.

But gallantry overstepped the bounds of propriety when he finally fell for " the beautiful one."

And he found himself behind the bars of romance.

Then beauty reformed him and he became a regular guy.

3 days of wit and humor with this jovial star

It starts tomorrow

YOUR THEATRE

On this sheet two of the cuts have been arranged with copy, suggesting newspaper ads, ready for the press. The two-column cut is featured in an ad 5 inches across two columns, while a single-column cut has also been arranged with copy, as a two-column ad, 2½ inches.

We suggest the use of these cuts with this copy as ads that will pull results. But the wide-awake exhibitor who views this production before his performances can utilize all of the cuts in numerous different ways, perhaps adjusting copy from an angle that will make an original appeal in accordance with his own particular territory.

Remember that, while the copy or type " Taylor Holmes in a Regular Fellow " is a part of the cuts, this can be eliminated by your pressman and the cuts used as illustrations without type, if you so desire.

For instance, the single-column cut of Mr. Holmes in the life preserver might be used for decorative purposes where the line cut of type, announcing his name and the title of the picture, could be better placed elsewhere. Your pressman can remove this line of type.

This illustration, by the way, would be excellent for a throwaway or a circular. Its use is suggested as an illustration for a circular for your mailing list, in connection with the four verses of the little poem exploiting this show. You will find this copy used in connection with this series of ads or on the press sheet of " A Regular Fellow."

Use the press sheet on " A Regular Fellow." It contains suggestions for lobby displays, copy for program readers, long and short synopses, and many little stories for advance press publicity.

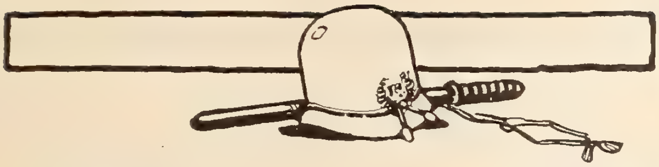
EDITORIAL

January 12, 1919

SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL'S resignation as Managing Director of the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres came as a surprise, ... Of course Mr. Rothapfel is not the only artistic exhibitor in the world, but he has certainly been a pioneer in placing exhibitions on a higher and ever higher plane. New York has him, more than any other man, to thank for the presentation of motion pictures in a way attractive to persons of taste and intelligence.

Mr. Rothapfel is creative. He not only selects the best photoplays available, and the most important topical and educational films, but instead of just showing what pictures he has, he builds programs out of his material, each of which is as harmonious a whole as he can make it. He was one of the first, if not the first to realize the power of music and setting to enrich a motion picture entertainment, and employing his own unusual abilities, and those of the most talented artists he could engage, he has made his programs richly effective. And in building them he has not been a slave to the idea that a photoplay must always be the cornerstone. He has had a venturesome initiative to build his programs around any film that seemed to him to represent a distinctive accomplishment of the motion picture camera.

The announcement of Mr. Rothapfel's departure from the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres caused a keen sense of regret until—and here is the important, encouraging fact that came with second thought—it was realized first that Mr. Rothapfel had established his theatres so firmly that they could go on without him, and second that he would enter some new field of motion pictures where he would probably be able to release energy and ability that cannot find expression in the management of theatres. This means that the public will gain by his change of work. It will still have the results of Mr. Rothapfel's work in a new field.



WILLIAM RUSSELL IN "BRASS BUTTONS"

By STEPHEN FOX

Directed by HENRY KING

P. S. Harrison, in Motion Picture News, March 1st issue, says of the last William Russell release:

"With 'Where the West Begins' Russell adds another good picture to the long list of his successes. The plot is full of action and it has been handled well. It holds the interest undiminished from start to finish."

LADIES will gasp at the way Russell woos and wins the society girl he thought a ladies' maid.

MEN will thoroughly enjoy the scenes in which Russell, as a New York cop, bluffs the gunmen of Sawtooth, Arizona, who had boasted that no sheriff could tame them.

EXHIBITORS will proclaim this picture one of the peppiest they ever screened and make arrangements to repeat it.

¶ Meeting the demand for something "new"--answering the problem of the exhibitor whose patrons are weary of hackneyed settings and time-worn locations.

¶ Starring HOUSE PETERS.

¶ All productions personally supervised by FRANK POWELL.

EXHIBITORS EVERYWHERE PROCLAIM IT AN EXTRAORDINARY SPECIAL

Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C. put some big pictures on the shelf to show it—read what they say in the Washington Star of March 16th:

> "The strongest alignment of film plays ever booked for premiere presentation in Washington has been set back to make room at the Rialto this week for the most human drama ever enacted before the camera."

Kunsky shelved a regular booking to play it a week at the Madison, Detroit, Michigan's exclusive picture theatre.

NOT since Camille has there been presented to the drama, silent or spoken, a role so rich in pathos so appealing to the sympathies, so compelling in the sublimity of its art as the part of Jeanne in "The Parisian Tigress".

Its lights and shadows are so wonderfully portrayed by the best of the screen's younger stars that we want you to see it first for your own delight and then with reference to its power over the patrons of your theatre.

SECURITY PICTURES

Fifteen five-reel productions are first class, up-to-the-second attractions, titled in the highest attainment of art, edited expertly and in some parts reproduced. They represent the difference between a reissue and a RECREATION—a difference you can see with your own eyes because it's there.

For Example, the first three releases are

"THE ETERNAL PENALTY"

With CHRISTINE MAYO and HENRY KOLKER

"ROSES AND THORNS"

With the brilliant Belasco star, LENORE ULRICH

"IN THE DAYS OF DARING"

With TOM MIX

And each carries a full line of lithographs, photos and other material, and press and display matter designed for first-class houses.

The SECURITY SERIES is being offered as a straight commercial proposition on business lines to the exchange that needs a sure output at a live-and-let-live price. It is offered by a man who is selling these productions in his own New York exchange—by a picture-wise exchange man, Nathan Hirsh.

The Navy Says:

It's a great life—if you don't weaken

The war is over. We and our allies have won the victory the good of the world demanded. Democracy, honor and justice were proved triumphant.

Some people seem to think we're all through.

We're not. It was, for us, essentially a war of preparation. Our dollars counted heavily and saved thousands of lives. The discovery that America would fight, fight with everything she possessed in men, materials and money, aided greatly in the collapse of Germany

It took a great many dollars, but that is infinitely better than a great many lives.

Some of the war bills have yet to be paid, and we have not finished our job until the account is settled.

Don't weaken now.

Because it's cleaning up our job, because our country needs the money, because victory and peace are ours, because we are thankful the war meant to us for the most part dollars rather than lives—let us "carry on," finish the task and subscribe to the

The Star and The Story

A PROMINENT magazine editor sends us, in confidence, a heated criticism of present production policies.

There are points in his statement open to argument, and, like many other writers, he is radically intolerant of present picture conditions because he knows so little of the causes of them.

If he knew these causes, and knew also that, excusable or not, they nevertheless exist and that the stage for instance went through a similar development, he would be more patient with the present and much more optimistic of the future motion picture.

At the same time his contention, though well-known undoubtedly to many picture people, is worthy of serious thought.

First—The Star System

HE attacks the star system—that is to say, the policy of making the star the fundamental if not the only production value and the resultant star contracts which are largely the basis of picture production today.

He relates that he submitted to a leading producer what was freely agreed to be a story of exceptional originality and strength. It was adapted in every way to picturization, "except," said the scenario editor in chief, "it doesn't fit any of our stars and we cannot use it at all."

"If you are making pictures on this basis," charges the editor, "then Heaven help the development of your art, and more practically, Heaven help your hold upon the public.

"If it is your sole ambition to photograph pretty faces and exploit pleasing personalities—then all well and good. You are going about it in the right way.

"But," he concluded, "I had a totally different conception of the motion picture, its field today and its future."

In the present star contract system the editor finds an answer for: "the many inexcusably weak or hopelessly mediocre pictures; the dreadful monotony in themes; the fact that the best writers of the day do not freshly create for pictures; the wild scramble and tremendous prices paid for vehicles which happen to fit the stars."

* * * * * *

Let's Think it Over

ALL of which is partly true, and not wholly fair—but decidedly a basic and serious matter for consideration.

The rise of the star is a very natural one.

In the beginning the motion picture gave to its personalities a quick and widespread circulation unprecedented and unapproached in the entertainment world.

Their continued appearance upon the screen would, within a limited period, make them known to millions of the public. They stood out, also, by contrast with the stories which in the earlier days were of little consequence.

This possibility of sudden and tremendous popularity with the public exists today—in even greater degree; though now the story and other production values have come to the front and we see stars made and unmade by these other values.

Again, in the earlier days and until recently the exhibitor did little advertising; he could not, as many now do, exploit a strong non-star picture and break his house records. He coveted the star picture because all he had to do was to feature the star's name before his theatre or elsewhere and the public knew and came.

There's a Demand—And a Supply

SO, because the market demanded star pictures, it was perfectly natural for the producer to stock up with stars; and so it is today, for the market still asks for stars, or we had best say, star values along with other values.

And in order to have and hold stars it is perfectly natural that the star contract system should come in being—and should still exist.

It was the more natural a few years ago—when the stars first loomed large in power and salary—because then the power of the story was not appreciated as today, and there were few scenario editors in chief of ability and discrimination. There were few producers, too, experienced enough in the making of photo dramas to create successfully and independently of the star's name and popularity.

Times are Changing

TODAY the situation has changed. The story has gradually grown important in the eyes of the producer till now the scramble for vehicles is about as intense as the effort to contract for stars.

This does not mean that the star value has lessened. It simply means that the story value has increased, has come into its own; and not merely the story in itself, but very importantly its development for and transmission to the screen—which is where supervision and direction, two mighty big values, too, come in.

Exhibitors know the value of the story today; so do producers and distributors—and also the stars themselves. No star is above story value. That has been proven. But since we know that stories make and unmake stars it would seem that the story, plus its true adaptation, is above the star value.

Editorially Speaking:

If this is true, will the story tolerate the star contract system?

Are stories to be created for stars and restricted to just that extent? And is it wise in any entertainment field to restrict creative effort? Or is it best to leave creative effort wide open—and therefore ever fresh, original, experimentive, and so appealing broadly and successfully to all kinds of human minds and emotions.

It would clearly seem that the story must precede all other values—that it must be the genesis of the photo drama, and the star, the cast, the adaptation, all of these selective matters based upon the story.

The stage went through the same star and story development.

Going Through the Cycle

THIRTY years ago saw the stage star contract system at its height. And then slowly and inevitably the situation changed. Producers grew up who built their business upon plays, not stars, and because of their success and increasing fame the plays came to them.

The selection of the play was the important thing; and then, as today, the successful producer found the personalities to fit the play. And so the star became second and the play was established. The star appeared largely, if not wholly, because of the play's acceptance and the star's adaptability to it.

A complete revisal of the earlier, or star contract stage.

Will the picture go through the same development?

Undoubtedly, not in a hurry on all sides, but slowly as with the economic corrections of the industry.

Today the situation is divided. Star value and story value are tugging for supremacy. The present is a transition period.

But the story will gain in power.

This is not only inevitable, but as it should be. It will be best for the motion picture art, best for the motion picture's permanent and growing hold upon the public and therefore best for the motion picture stars themselves.

Best, in other words, not only artistically but economically, for the entire picture industry.

* * * * *

Showing the Trend

W. W. HODKINSON announces Zane Grey pictures. Less than a year ago a star would have been exploited, not an author. The change is significant.

A previous announcement from the same corporation features the four values in pictures—author, producer, director, star. This, too, is an innovation, and also significant of the new order in production.

And the news and advertising pages of the trade press carry right along abundant evidence from all quarters of the fact that stars big or little, and producers big or little, are basing the strength of the picture upon the strength of the story.

The foreign market is an important factor here. Great Britain, for instance, places the story high and has for some time. The star counts as here, but the value of the story was sooner recognized, in all probability because of the system there of advance trade showings. The star without a story stands little chance of booking.

And now may we point out that the next important step with story value pictures is the supplying to the exhibitor of that advertising service to the public which the story must have, that emotional appeal advertising to which the story lends itself so well.

* * * * *

Lessons from the Field

A NEW booking circuit is reported to us from Northern California. Over thirty exhibitors in this section are said to have signed as members of the "United Theatres Association." The theatres, it is claimed, represent an investment exceeding two and a half millions.

By a coincidence there comes at the same time a report on the healthy status and growth of the Philadelphia Association, now embracing about eighty-five theatres and soon to be extended to one hundred and fifty.

The objects of these circuits are: Cooperative booking; the elimination of exchange evils; the up-building of a community interest among exhibitors to end cut throat competition, raise prices, and stamp out the illegitimate theatre.

"Here," says one letter, "is an answer to your slogan of fewer pictures, better pictures and longer runs. We furnish longer runs so that fewer and therefore better pictures can be made."

There are several lessons in these booking circuit enterprises.

One is to the exchange which doesn't cooperate with the exhibitor when such cooperation costs only the exercise of good business sense and an effort to please.

There's a lesson to the whole distribution system, insofar as these circuits are directly the outgrowth of their bad economics.

And finally there's a lesson to be constantly borne in mind by the members themselves of these circuits that they use their new found power not blindly and selfishly but with a live and let live concern for the other branches of the industry to which they belong.

Sailing Smoothly in New York

THE bills providing for local option in the matter of Sunday motion picture shows in New York have been favorably reported out of the Senate committee.

Similar good fortune is expected with the Assembly committee.

The prospects are bright. Here's hoping that when the bills reach the legislative floor they will not be the victims of bargaining due to the fact that liberal interests are also seeking Sunday baseball and legalized boxing at this session.

Which of the three "evils" would the reformers choose?

W. A. Johnston

Dealing in Personalities

'He Has Acquired Fred Warren"

WE used to laugh every time someone said "So-and-So will soon have important announcements to make."

The Hodkinson organization said it a few weeks ago.

But we are not laughing.

For right after the hint came the news that the Raver-Thomas-Baird-Irving product would be handled by Hodkinson. Then the signing up of the Zane Grey productions. And the word that two more big lines of product are to be announced soon.

On top of it all the acquisition of Fred Warren:

Is anything further needed to warn you to take a good look at this photo of W. W. Hodkinson now—because he is going to get a considerable share of every film man's thoughts during the coming year.

Look him over now—and watch his speed.

Harry Charnas, of the Standard Film Service, Cleveland, Detroit and Cincinnati, is in town. Expects to be here a week or so.

Saw Joe Brandt at the Astor on Wednesday. Guess the Universal executives will now be trouping in from Los Angeles one by one. Bob Cochrane won't be so lonesome.

Benny Schulberg dropped into the Astor grill the other day and soon was holding court, surrounded by half the film men in the room. Benny always deserved all the popularity he got—and these days it's coming with a rush.

Dwight S. Perrin, formerly of Goldwyn, is back in our midst after a sojourn on Florida's sands. Was nabbed for jury duty as soon as he got back. Will announce new connections as soon as "His Honor" says "Finis."

Jake Wilk dropped into the office Wednesday to say "Hello" after a trip through the midwest. Dropped some pertinent observations on pictures and picture conditions. We know that Jake is a shrewd film man because his ideas chime with our own.

Incidentally, Jake placed a few boosts for Charles Branham, until recently manager of Detroit's Majestic. Says he's one of the greatest showmen in the country.

And we agree with Jake, 'cause Bre'er Branham is a member of Motion Picture News Advisory Board and a frequent contributor to the Service Bureau.

S. Hopkins Hadley. We've just printed those words to see how they look. Our private sleuth informs us that a person with that monicker resides out in exclusive Kew Gardens, Long Island. And our sleuth suspects that it is the same old-timer we know in the film game as "Hopp" Hadley.

Frank Carroll is wandering around the country in parts unknown.

Paul Brunet dined the Pathe Home Office staff last week at the Beaux Arts, returning the celebrations they have held on his anniversary as vice-president and general manager. Those present were: Paul Brunet, Louis Landry, Fred C. Quimby, Tom North, P. A. Parsons, Jack Kyle, Randolph Lewis, W. E. Raynor, Harry Lewis, Lewis Innerarity, M. Ramirez Torres, Gilson Willets, Emanuel Cohen, F. R. Clarke, John Humm, L. S. Diamond, Frank V. Bruner, H. E. Genet, George B. Seitz, C. W. Allers, A. Werkmeister, Bertram Millhauser, G. L. Chanier, L. E. Franconi, C. A. Brady, Edgar O. Brooks, W. C. Smith, B. P. Egan and C. J. Fischer.

You ought to hear Joe Plunkitt enthuse over the new Mark house soon to open in Brooklyn. Some house—take it from Joe.

And here's a bit of news. The Strand performances, staged by Bre'er Plunkitt, will be transferred intact—soloists, 'neverything—to the Brooklyn house.

Al Lichtman is out of town for five days.

Bernie Fineman, manager of the Accessory Sales Promotion Department of Famous Players-Lasky, is swinging around the exchange circuit.

Other F. P.-Lasky news tells of the fact that Harry Day has joined the ranks of the benedicts, the bride being Miss Marquita Harriss, of Memphis, Tenn.

And of a dinner given last week by the office staff to the three who recently stepped to the altar rail—Pete Smith, Harry I. Day and Louis E. Loeb.

The Motion Picture Business Men's Club is coming along.

A meeting held at Sherry's last week found the following committee members present: C. F. Zittel, Adolph Zukor, Jules E. Brulatour, J. Stuart Blackton, P. L. Waters, Arthur Friend and Paul Brunet.

A sub-committee is now looking for suitable quarters. Present plans call for a suite of six or seven rooms in one of the big hotels.

A total of $20,470 was collected at the Brady dinner. Since then thousand dollar contributions have come from P. L. Waters, William Fox and Paul Brunet.

Membership is to be limited to one hundred.

Thomas D. Goldberg, W. D. Pacy and Milton Caplan, Baltimore exhibitors, are in New York this week arranging for the coming ball of the Maryland Exhibitors at the Lyric theatre, April 25th. Several prominent stars in New York have already promised to attend.

Have you heard about "The Big Five?" Not yet? Wait!

"Starting His Second Pathe Year"

PAUL BRUNET has completed his first year as vice-president and general manager of the Pathe organization.

And starts the second year with Pathe aiming to do bigger things than ever.

"Common Clay" started it.

By breaking records for long runs in theatre after theatre.

And now Pathe is going after the "specials" with a vengeance. With a top-notch organization headed by Mr. Brunet and containing such experts in their lines as Fred Quimby, P. A. Parsons, Tom North and Edgar Brooks.

"The Unknown Love" is the next of the "big ones."

Watch that organization wind up and go to it.

Vetoes Arizona Ripper Bill

PHOENIX, ARIZ. (Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS).—At the eleventh hour Governor Campbell vetoed the Waters Bill placing almost confiscatory regulations on film companies doing business in Arizona. The veto followed on the failure of the exhibitor sponsors of the bill to rally to its support before the Chief Executive. Previously the theatre owners had worked hard in both houses securing the passage of the legislation.

As exclusively told in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the bill was a wonder as a collection of stringent regulations that would have effectively halted the industry in Arizona. Film exchanges in Los Angeles had taken the decided stand that they would not rent films to any of the 108 theatres in Arizona had the bill received the Governor's approval.

The Waters Bill consisted of twenty-three sections, every one of which levied red tape upon the motion picture interests in order that it conduct these in Arizona, the most undesirable sections providing the following requirements:

If film company does business in the state, it will be necessary for the corporation or partnership to register there at an annual fee of fifty dollars, which registration gives the corporation commissioner rights to require audit of the books and accounts of the film company made at the company's home office and at the expense of the company.

Every film company doing business in the state must have a registered and resident representative.

Any film company registered in the state can be sued in any county court in the state, and failure to pay any judgment within ninety days is sufficient for forfeiture of registration license.

Film companies requiring an advance payment or deposit, required to deposit with the treasurer of state, amount equivalent to deposits made by the several exhibitors of Arizona. Minimum amount at any time not to be less than $5,000. There is no provision for interest on this deposit, or refund at any time.

Every film company to be required to place on file with the corporation commissioner duplicates of every contract made for the rental of pictures to anyone in Arizona.

Production of any film or portion of film would require that the company register as a corporation in Arizona, pay annual tax and permit audit of books and accounts.

Annual statement must be made June 1st of every year to corporation commissioner by all film companies doing business in the state.

Film company must have capital stock fully paid.

Violation of this act subject to $5,000 maximum fine and license revoked.

When members of the Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade learned of the Waters bill, and that it was before Governor Campbell for his signature, two special meetings were called. At the first, letters and telegrams were drafted and sent to all exhibitors of the 108 theatre owners and managers of Arizona urging that they telegraph or write Governor Campbell asking that the bill be vetoed. By wire arrangement were made for representatives of the Board of Trade to call on the Governor and present their objections to the Waters Bill. Their request was granted by the Governor, and a committee composed of Dave Bershon, Manager Universal Exchange; Charles Marley, Manager Triangle Exchange, and Michael Narlian, general counsel of the Board of Trade, were selected as a committee to see Governor Campbell. When the committee was received on Wednesday morning, March 19th, the Governor requested that they file brief containing their objections which was done later in the day.

Frederick L. Collins Sails for Europe

Frederick L. Collins, president of McClure Productions, Inc., and publisher of McClure's Magazine, sailed last Saturday on the "Adriatic" for Europe. He expects to visit England, France, Belgium, Holland and Italy and will be gone several months.

In addition to important business for his magazine, Mr. Collins will devote a large part of his time to consummating extensive motion picture projects, which are said to be of international importance. Mr. Collins has been busy upon plans for these enterprises for several months.

Mr. Collins has been preceded to Europe by a special representative of McClure Productions, Inc., who will transact the preliminary details for all the McClure motion picture activities abroad.

New Theatres Projected in Michigan

Many new theatres are being projected in Detroit and in Michigan. The Jefferson Theatre Co., of which George Harrison is general manager, plans a house to seat 2,000 on East Jefferson Avenue, one block from the present location. George Nichols, who operates the Superba and Isis theatres in Grand Rapids, is to build a 2,000 seat house at the rear of the Superba. There are quite a number of smaller houses that are being talked about and John H. Kunsky, it is said, will have a new theatre seating 3,000 in downtown Detroit

New Club Lays Plans

C. F. Zittel, Adolph Zukor, J. E. Brulatour, J. Stuart Blackton, Percy L. Waters, Arthur S. Friend and Paul Brunet met at Sherry's last week and decided on plans for the recently formed Motion Picture Business Men's Club.

Mr. Zittel appointed a sub-committee composed of himself and Messrs. Zukor, Brulatour, Blackton and Waters to secure quarters. In the interim a suite of six or rooms in one of the large hotels will be used. The membership will be limited to 100 resident members.

Committee members stated that the club has no connection or affiliation with any other club and should not be confused with the Motion Picture Club of America, recently organized, as noted, by Lee Ochs and others.

Contributions of $1,000 each were announced by Percy L. Waters, William Fox and Paul Brunet.

Reopens Theatre in Chelan, Wash.

R. C. Kelsey, of Omak, Wash., is reopening the Ruby theatre at Chelan, Wash. Chelan is situated on Lake Chelan, in the Wenatchee Valley, and is a noted summer resort.

Mr. Kelsey is new in the picture game, but as he is a shrewd business man he will assuredly have a great success. He will play the newest and best pictures.

Plans are being drawn for a first-class modern theatre, 500 capacity, for Oroville, Wash.

Chester Goes to Ottawa, Canada

C. L. Chester, producer of Outing Chester Pictures, left Friday for Ottawa to confer with a number of prominent motion picture men regarding the extensive use of Outing Chester Pictures throughout Canada. Since Outing Chesters deal entirely with nature studies whose province is international there is no restriction on their scope, and Mr. Chester feels that the Canadian field is so important that it warrants a special trip.

The success of Outing Chester Pictures in Western Canada is evidenced by a recent letter received from the First National Exhibitors Exchange in Vancouver in which their vice-president, Sam J. Coffland, writes that "we are very much pleased with the class of productions that you are turning out," and further states as his opinion that Outing Chesters should prove an excellent part of any program.

Christie in the East to Visit Exchanges

All exchanges releasing Christie Comedies in the east are to shortly receive a call from Charles H. Christie, who is leaving Los Angeles March 25th for a trip that will take him to all exchange cities.

Mr. Christie is particularly anxious to invade the eastern Canadian field, as he has been successful in doing in western Canada, and after a trip east which will take him through Denver, Minneapolis, Chicago, Cleveland, Philadelphia, New York and Boston, he will spend some time at Toronto. After completing his work in the east Mr. Christie will return to the coast by the way of Washington, Atlanta, New Orleans and Dallas. He anticipates the trip will require from four to six weeks.

Ball Game! April 13

The Lambs, Friars, Green Room Club, Motion Picture Club, National Vaudeville Club, Burlesque Club, Authors and Composers of America, Stage Hands Union, and every other prominent organization, will be on hand at the Polo Grounds on April 13 to root for their favorites at the baseball game between the Actors and Songwriters, which will be one of the many features of the Field Day which is being held on that date for the benefit of The Actors' Fund of America, of which Daniel Frohman is president.

Last Minute Coast News

William Desmond, Hampton star, and Mary McIvor were married in Pasadena on March 29th.

Oscar Price has arrived in Los Angeles and is in daily conference with William G. McAdoo and the stars of the United Artists Association. It has been decided that a Fairbanks subject will be the first release.

Albert E. Smith is visiting the Vitagraph coast studio.

Richard A. Rowland is here for conference with Maxwell Karger and an advance view of "The Red Lantern."

Sets Premiere of Sawyer-Lubin Film

The premiere of "Virtuous Men," the inaugural Ralph Ince film attraction, will take place at the Fulton theatre, New York, on Sunday evening, April 6. It stars E. K. Lincoln and was produced under the personal direction of Ralph Ince. It is said to be the biggest melodrama of the screen ever offered the photoplay public.

The presentation of "Virtuous Men" at the Fulton theatre will be surrounded with many distinctive features. A special musical score has been written in which are introduced several innovations. The musical setting is perfectly synchronized with the action, due to the composer spending several days with Ralph Ince during the making of various scenes. An extraordinary lobby display has been prepared under the direction of two experts in matters of this kind. Original paintings by Clarence Underwood, R. G. Morgan, Gustav Michelson and other well-known illustrators will have a prominent place in this display. Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, sponsors for "Virtuous Men," have also taken advantage of the extensive lobby of the Fulton theatre to display many other original pictorial effects and illustrations which have been prepared to accompany the picture.

Two Managers Resign in Ottawa

Two resignations of moving picture theatre managers were recorded in Ottawa, Ontario, during the week of March 17. On that date Manager J. T. Moxley, of Allen's Regent theatre, announced that he had acquired the lease of the Russell theatre, a legitimate house, which he proposed to convert into a moving picture theatre after improvements had been made. His association with the Allen Theatrical Enterprises was due to expire on March 26. The Regent at Ottawa is one of the best paying theatres controlled by the Allen interests.

Manager J. Lavois, of the National theatre, Ottawa, also announced that he was terminating his connection with the National on Saturday, March 22. He stated that he expected to secure the management of an important theatre in Montreal.

War Thriller to Boost Victory Liberty Loan

A war feature entitled "The Price of Peace," compiled from the official film archives of the government, photographed in the thick of battle, is shortly to be released in behalf of the Victory Liberty Loan.

The picture has been assembled and titled under the direction of Frank R. Wilson, director of the bureau of publicity of the Treasury Department, by Betty Shannon and Terry Ramsaye, with Joseph La Rose of the Rialto-Rivoli at the cutting table.

The material for the picture was selected from the film files of the War College, by permission of Colonel Weeks, and from the films of the Navy Department, the Marine Corps and other official sources.

Fred Warren Joins Hodkinson

THE big news surprise of the week was the announcement on Wednesday that Fred B. Warren had been elected a vice-president of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, retiring as vice-president and member of the Board of Directors of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

The change takes effect on April 1. In confirming the news Mr. Warren declared: "I have the friendliest and best of feeling for the Goldwyn organization. This is further evidenced by the fact that a few hours before my resignation I purchased additional Goldwyn stock on which I had an option."

Speaking on the acquisition of the new vice-president, W. W. Hodkinson declared:

"I think Mr. Warren shares my own opinions as to the necessity for the integrity of product and the improvement of relations existing between the exhibitor and distributor of motion pictures. I have watched his development in the industry and have felt that his previous experience as an editor and publisher of important newspapers gave him a sound base for straight thinking. After all, both the making and the selling of motion pictures is a publishing function, and the most successful publisher of pictures will be the one who rejects unfit materials in his search for the selective, finer materials upon which he can place his imprint.

"During the past year the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has proceeded with great deliberation to build an internal organization capable of doing the big things we have in prospect. We have not wished to expand too quickly, for that has been one of the big faults of the industry both in its business and production sides. I am now gathering about me both the men and the product that will make our company's name stand for a definite quality in production and service. And by service I mean our business relations with the exhibitor as well as the aids rendered the exhibitor in conjunction with the pictures he receives from us. I shall next week make a comprehensive announcement of the product that I have assembled for our new season together with some plans for a releasing innovation which I am certain will win exhibitor support immediately."

"My affiliation with Mr. Hodkinson is founded upon business logic," is Mr. Warren's explanation of his unheralded change. "My first reason is founded on the memory that six years ago when W. W. Hodkinson founded the Paramount organization and laid down the fine pattern and fabric on which it was built, the producer-distributor and the exhibitor were not engaged in a blood feud. They were not at each other's throats. They did not feel that there was any necessity for their being enemies. A thousand Strands and Rialtos and their equivalents in all of the large cities of the country are operating to-day because of the initial Hodkinson vision that pioneered in good pictures at decent prices, instead of contributing to the abundance of cheap melodramas that formed the prevailing motion picture diet of that period. The continuation of such product meant the continuation of converted store shows and five-cent houses."

"Mr. Hodkinson has always had a lesson to teach. He has been a pioneer and I like both pioneers and men who use their brains. He has had the patience to re-develop slowly. I believe in the things he is going to do and I want to help do them. I have the friendliest and best of feeling for the Goldwyn organization of which I have been a part since it was organized and that is further evidenced by the fact that a few hours before my resignation I purchased additional Goldwyn stock on which I had an option. I hope to be up to my eyes in work with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on April 1."

Samuel Goldwyn is at present in Los Angeles. No announcement has been made as to possible changes in the Goldwyn organization with the retirement of Fred Warren, who has been with the organization since its first days, earning considerable praise for the remarkable advertising and sales campaign that established the Goldwyn name in all parts of the world. Since December Mr. Warren has handled the distribution of the Ford Educational Weekly, making unusual records.

Fabian Plans New Theatre

A motion picture theatre seating four thousand people will be the permanent memorial and tribute which Jacob Fabian, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for New Jersey, and proprietor of the Regent and Garden theatres of Paterson, N. J., will erect there early this summer as his supreme exhibitor accomplishment and in recognition of the remarkable interest that local theatre-goers have shown for screen entertainment.

The structure will cost half a million dollars. It will have a frontage of two hundred and eighty-seven feet on Church Street and one hundred and twenty-five feet on Ellison Street. The auditorium will be one hundred and seventy-five feet deep by one hundred and twenty-five feet wide. The first floor will have seats for two thousand seven hundred and fifty people, while the balcony will accommodate one thousand two hundred and fifty.

In size and the magnificence of its appointments the Paterson theatre will be the equal of the new theatre which Mr. Fabian is about to build in Newark, N. J.

One Hundred Per Cent

Hamilton, Ontario, boasts of a one hundred per cent membership in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario. There are seventeen moving picture theatres in Hamilton and the association's active membership in the city is seventeen.

New Haven Film Men Organize Club

New Haven, Conn. (Special to Motion Picture News).—Film men, theatrical men and newspaper writers of New Haven have organized The Jesters, a social club to be limited to the fraternity. Officers are Henry T. Scully, state manager of Famous Players' exchange, president; Daggett M. Lee, treasurer Shubert theatre, vice-president; Morris Caplan, auditor of Paramount state exchange, financial secretary and treasurer; Henry C. Higgins, attorney, recording secretary, and George R. Gould, New Haven Register, sergeant-at-arms.

Among charter members are Morris Joseph, of Universal exchange; Frank J. Scully, Metro Corporation; Robert S. Hersley, director; L. S. Tobias, Mutual; Austin Interrante, Goldwyn; Israel Lavine, Select Pictures; John V. Pavone, Herman Rudnet, Benjamin Simon, Famous Players; J. C. Lleighton, Boston Photo Play; Nathan Furst, Fox; Geoffrey Whalen, Boston; and Poli staff members as follows: Lewis D. Garvey, Frederick Valles and Walter Griffith.

Walter Betts Resigns

Walter Betts, manager of Keeney's theatre, Brooklyn, for the last five years, has resigned from that position to take a rest. Mr. Betts has been in ill health for some time and on different occasions has had to take time off. He will recuperate at Lake Placid.

Latest National News of Censorship

Buck Bill is Favorably Reported

Illinois Censorship by Small Group Comes Nearer Against Protests of Exhibitors—Campaign Is Prepared

LLINOIS residents who depend upon pictures for their chief amusement, in a few months will pay more for the privilege of watching the film flicker and will have those same films carefully slashed by a small group of men labeled "censors" if the bill of Senator Buck of Monmouth is passed. The measure was favorably reported to the upper house by the Senate Judiciary Committee and started upon the first lap of the process which will make it a law.

The same bill has been introduced in the house by Representative Havill, of Mount Carmel, but has not yet been advanced there.

Springfield motion picture theatre men are prepared to fight the bills and will take the lead in the statewide opposition expected. Harry Loper, manager of the Lyric theatre, characterized the bill as vicious legislation not wanted by the thousands of Illinois people who patronize the picture shows, and intended to place in the hands of a few men the right to decide what kind of films the people of the state shall see.

"The people want to be their own censors," declared Loper, "and such bills are not favored by one in a hundred of the people who enjoy a good motion picture."

The passage of the bill means more expense for the motion picture men and probably added cost as a result to the theatre patrons. The bill provides a tax of three dollars for each original film of 1,000 feet with a dollar tax on each additional thousand feet. The film before permission would be given for display, would be censored by a board under the control of the department of registration and education.

An amendment to the bill provides that Chicago may have separate and local censorship similar to that of the Funkhouser regime which acquired almost national notoriety. The amendment was asked by a small number of Chicago ministers who are behind the bill and two of whom appeared in favor of the measure at the first committee hearing given it.

The Chicago censorship will affect the State, Loper yesterday asserted, because of the majority of films coming to Springfield and other cities through Chicago where they would pass under the scrupulous scrutiny of a Chicago board.

The same bill was up last session and nearly went over.

It is significant, a local theatre man pointed out, that Buck who sponsored the Senate bill, and Havill who is author of the house bill, are from Monmouth and Mount Carmel, towns of about 6,000 and 2,000 where two or three second class picture shows operate and where Sunday shows are forbidden.

Shelved for Two Years

In at least one state where motion picture censorship has been recently advocated, it is safely shelved for another two years. The F. H. Peterson bill in Minnesota, providing for a state board, has been recommended for indefinite postponement by the Senate general committee on legislation.

Upon learning this, the National Board of Review, which is actively opposing censorship legislation in all states where it has been introduced, addressed the following letter to members of the committee voting against the bill (Senators Blomgren, Boylan, Conroy, Denegre, Gjerset and Putnam) and to Chairman Sullivan, who expressed himself as opposed to it.

Canada Protests Reel Tax of Fifteen Cents

Ottawa, the Canadian capital, was wellnigh the center of film interest in the Dominion on Wednesday, March 19, when Mr. Thomas Scott of Toronto invaded the parliamentary preserves as official representative of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario.

Mr. Scott, who is the secretary of the Ontario association, was a delegation of one to seek relief from the Federal tax of 15 cents per reel per day, which, he declared, was forcing a number of small exhibitors throughout the country to the wall. If he could not have the tax abolished entirely, he wanted consideration for the little fellows—but everybody in the film business was being taxed half a dozen different ways by every government that had the right to impose an assessment. He pointed out that the moving picture business was being taxed proportionately and comparatively twenty-five per cent more than its share.

In his statement of claims, Secretary Scott noted that the expenses of operating a moving picture theatre in Canada had increased 300 per cent during the war period. The theatres had been hard hit by the influenza epidemic.

Against Rorke Bill

More than one hundred motion picture men from all parts of Pennsylvania appeared in the House Chamber of the Capitol at Harrisburg to argue in favor of a bill introduced by Representative William Rorke of Philadelphia to exempt musical entertainments and motion picture shows from the provision of the ancient Blue Laws. They came in company with the Philadelphia Orchestra, which is supporting the same bill.

There was a lively opposition from the ministers and churchgoers, who pleaded for the retention of the obsolete laws.

Baker Appears Against Missouri Censorship

S. J. Baker, manager of the St. Louis branch of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit and former motion picture censor of Kansas City, Mo., appeared last week before the Judiciary Committeee of the State Legislature at Jefferson City and "showed cause" why the bill providing for the creation of a State Board of Moving Picture Censors should not be passed. Baker was delegated by St. Louis exhibitors and exchange managers to address the committee.

Exhibitors throughout the state are fearful that the drastic measure will be enacted. The fate of the bill will be known early in April.

Baker in his address said that his experience and his observations convinced him that the censorship of pictures in Missouri is unnecessary.

"While censor in Kansas City I looked at productions day in and day out for six months—often assisted by a committee of obliging ladies who represented the Parent Teachers' Association, the Collegiate Alumnae and others," Baker told the committee members. "During that period I reviewed 3,500 reels of film. Out of those I totally rejected only two pictures—both of which had been rejected four years prior, and the owners of which had tried at least once a year during those four years to exploit them, but without success."

Goldwyn Calls Attention to Censorship

At a luncheon given representatives of the Los Angeles press by Samuel Goldwyn, the producer took occasion to call to the attention of the newspaper fraternity of the west, the injustice of censorship bills introduced in the various legislatures for the so-called improvement of motion pictures, and emphasized a point heretofore overlooked by the film industry with respect to the far-reaching effects of censorship and the throttle it puts upon the public and press.

"Censorship will not prove half as undesirable to the producer ultimately as it will to the public," was one of Mr. Goldwyn's statements, "for in reality censorship takes away from the vast American public what it has shown it wants and likes, and therefore I claim that when politicians pass laws to say what the public shall see and read, they throttle the public. The producers may change their method of production, which may be a hardship for a time, but we can all continue to make pictures but maybe not the kind the public wants, and could have were it not for the satisfying of political greed in the passage of unjust laws of censorship." Mr. Goldwyn quoted statistics showing that fifty million people weekly attend motion picture theatres in this country. "To say that these people cannot attend a picture show and be harmlessly entertained on Sunday is taking us back to the blue law days."

"Every year there are attacks of one kind or another by the legislatures of the several states, and why?" he asked. "We are trying to produce clean stories that will help educate as well as entertain, and by so doing we are trying to foster a great industry that will perhaps make us a few dollars, but we want our rights preserved the same as the press, magazine and the novel. Why don't all three or four work together to educate the public that censorship is wrong in a democracy."

Vital Happenings for Exhibitors and Producers

Brady Heads Delegation at Harrisburg

The activities of the Legislative Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry were centered during the past week in Pennsylvania, where two important hearings were held at Harrisburg on Wednesday and Thursday.

Under the able leadership of President William A. Brady, the representatives of the industry attended a hearing Wednesday on the bill introduced by Representative Rorke, which would permit Sunday concerts, lectures and entertainments of an educational nature. President Brady received a tremendous ovation from an audience estimated at 3,000 which packed the House of Representatives, and his arguments were delivered in a forceful and most effective manner. He related in detail how President Wilson had commanded him to mobilize the motion picture industry for co-operation with the war program, and that motion pictures had rendered the most distinguished service during the war without any profit.

On Thursday President Brady continued his triumphant march through the legislative halls at the Pennsylvania state capitol through his appearance at a conference with Governor Sproul to consider the proposal for moving of offices of the State Board of Censors of motion pictures from Philadelphia to Harrisburg. He related the importance of Philadelphia as a first release territory, of its central location, exceptional transportation facilities offered, and that it would be mose embarrassing and very expensive to the motion picture industry to have the headquarters of the Censorship Board removed to the state capitol. Mr. Brady was complimented by Governor Sproul for having come to Pennsylvania and for the enlightenment.

Judge Defends Rex Beach Production

That the members of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors had overstepped their authority in refusing to permit the exhibition in Pennsylvania of the Rex Beach-Goldwyn production, "The Brand," was the expression from the bench used by Judges Rogers and Wessel in Common Pleas Court, Philadelphia, where Gabriel L. Hess, general counsel for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, had caused an appeal to be taken from the findings of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors. Morris Wolff of the law firm of Stern & Wolff represented the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

Judge Rogers himself interrupted the proceedings to put into the record his own statement that during a view of the picture given the two judges, in the Board of Censors' projecting room, just before the trial began, Mrs. Katherine M. Niver told him that no matter what changes were made, either in the picture or subtitles, it would not be accepted.

Buffalo Measure Stirs Picture Men

See in It Endorsement of Sunday Pictures — One Exhibitor Declares Public Against It

BUFFALO, N. Y. (Special to MOTION PICTURE NEWS).—Buffalo exhibitors are much stirred up over the introduction in Albany by Assemblyman Slacer of a bill amending the penal law by permitting any municipality to conduct motion picture shows for education and recreation on Sunday from 2 to 6 P. M. in armories, schoolhouses, any state, county, or municipal building, or in any hall or room furnished rent free, provided pictures are censored by a local board of recreation, serving without pay and appointed by the local executive authorities and provided there is no charge for admission.

Some of the leading exhibitors in commenting on this measure voice their sentiments as follows:

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, manager Shea's Hippodrome: "This measure is simply an indorsement of Sunday motion pictures. If the 'movies' are O. K. for the multitudes in special halls that haven't any of the modern improvements of the big picture house, where the pictures are presented in a delightful and cozy atmosphere, it is a foregone conclusion that they are equally O. K. in regular picture houses. The mere fact that no admission would be charged does not change the situation. If pictures are all right in armories on the Sabbath they are all right in theatres. I do not think the city wants to compete with regularly appointed photoplay theatres, which are now filling every need. If pictures are good for recreation from 2 to 6 P. M. they are also good from 2 to 11 P. M. At least almost 250,000 Buffalonians think so, as this number of citizens have to date signed petitions in favor of Sunday movies."

EARL L. CRABB, manager Strand theatre: "Assemblyman Slacer seems to have taken the side of the exhibitor in this bill, for it states that the city may show motion pictures for EDUCATION AND RECREATION ON SUNDAY. That is just what we have been maintaining all along that the motion picture is the ideal method to educate and amuse the workers of the country who labor six days a week and who demand this form of entertainment on Sunday. It is hard to imagine, however, just where there would be much 'recreation' in looking at pictures in a cold, dreary, military armory with no facilities for the proper presentation of pictures. We are indeed indebted to Mr. Slacer for seeing our side of the proposition."

JULES H. MICHAEL, manager Academy and Regent theatres: "Assemblyman Slacer certainly does not represent the sentiment of the people of Buffalo in trying to force a bill through the legislature providing for the free showing of motion pictures in big 'barns' about the town. Buffalonians want to see motion pictures on Sunday not only from 2 to 6 P. M., but from 2 to 11 P. M., and they want to see them in real theatres built for the purpose of showing artistic film plays in an artistic manner."

Lieut. William K. Howard Arrives from France

After nearly two years in the service, Lieut. William K. Howard is back from France.

He enlisted in Minneapolis, July, 1917, and was at that time manager of the Metro exchange for that territory. Previous to the Metro management Lieut. Howard was manager of Vitagraph's Minneapolis exchange, where he is said to have established a high record.

The transport Matsonia landed him in New York March 26, and he was nonchalantly strolling along Broadway when he was spied by a member of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS staff who had officiated as toastmaster at the farewell banquet tendered Lieut. Howard in Minneapolis, July, 1917.

He entered the signal service and after winning his commission at the training camp he was transferred to the Artillery division with a California contingent. Before locating in Minneapolis Lieutenant Howard was active in film circles in Cincinnati.

He seems to have grown six inches taller and eight inches wider and is as brown as a Southern cotton picker.

Think Governor Will Not Veto Bill

NEW HAVEN, CONN. — That Governor Holcomb will not veto the bill providing for Sunday motion picture shows, if it passes both houses of the Legislature, is the opinion of men here who are greatly interested in the provision. And that both legislative bodies will pass the bill is practically a certainty today. The State Senate went on record as approving the bill, only three members voting against it. Action by the lower house should be taken March 26.

Conditions in Connecticut have undergone a radical change since Governor Holcomb vetoed a liberal Sunday bill two years ago. The Governor has come to recognize the fact, his closest friends say, that every effort must be made to ease the masses of people who have been growing restive under restraint in the big towns. Motion pictures are generally conceded to have the power to partially quell unrest.

Another point that makes the passage of the Sunday bill fairly certain is the change in the leaders who are urging the bill. J. Henry Roraback, State Republican chairman, has charge of the work in person, it is generally known.

Sherwin Goes West for Goldwyn

Louis Sherwin, until recently doing special publicity for the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation from its New York office, left Thursday for the company's studio in California, where he will take up his new duties in the scenario department there. Mr. Sherwin resigned from the company about three weeks ago. Since then the new proposition was made him and he immediately accepted.

Mr. Sherwin was for nearly ten years dramatic critic on the New York Globe, where he earned for himself a reputation of being a keen analyst of play construction and a critic of sound judgment. He has already had some experience in the scenario writing line, preparing one continuity for a Select picture starring Alice Brady and one for a Goldwyn production not yet released.

Screen Club Wins Suit

Judgment was entered on March 24, 1919, in the Supreme Court of New York, by the Screen Club, through its attorney, Arthur Butler Graham, against its former landlords, William H. Cowen and Robert H. Davis.

The action was brought against the club for unpaid rent amounting to $2500. The complaint alleged that the club had been dispossessed for non-payment of rent and that the landlord had been unable to rent the premises to anyone else. The club defended on the ground that the dispossess proceeding had terminated the lease and that the club therefore owed no rent for the period that followed while the premises were vacant. The court sustained this contention and directed judgment for defendant.

Old Chinatown Setting for "Checkers" Scene

At the William Fox studio in Fort Lee, director Richard Stanton is said to have erected a most interesting set for "Checkers," the famous racing picture which Mr. Stanton is producing as a big special attraction. It is one showing the Chinatown of some years ago—the storied district of abducted girls, opium dens, dark alleys, Tong men, and mysterious underground passages.

The set was built under the supervision of Captain Hannon, of the Elizabeth Street police station, which has Chinatown within its jurisdiction.

Exhibitors Against Daylight Saving

Exhibitors of Western Canada are in high glee over the decision of the Canadian Parliament to shelve the daylight saving measure this year. The westerners were among those who had protested against the move. Not long ago the Winnipeg exhibitors placed a letter of protest against the adoption of a daylight saving plan with the Winnipeg City Council with a request that it be passed along to higher authorities. The western exhibitors complained that they did not want more daylight when night's shadows are not seen under ordiary circumstances during the summer before 9.30 P. M.

Charles C. Pyle to Enter Broader Field

After seven years as general sales agent of the Bartola Musical Instrument Co., Charles C. Pyle has sold his interest in the agency and resigned from the company to enter a larger field.

This will come in the nature of a surprise to the many exhibitors of the country with whom Mr. Pyle has dealt for many years and who have come to look upon the names Bartola and Pyle as synonymous.

Mr. Pyle has been in charge of the Sales Department since the inception of the Bartola Co. and has built up its business to a point where it stands second to none in the country.

While Mr. Pyle expresses a great deal of reluctance at leaving the organization, other matters of a far greater scope for his ability have presented themselves proving too alluring to permit of their passing by.

Mr. Pyle has not announced his new connection, but it is understood to be something presenting a vast field for operation. There is no question whatever it is it will be brought by him to success and he carries with him the best wishes of the many men in the business who have always found Mr. Pyle's judgment dependable and figure that he is entitled by his fair and square conscientious work of the past to a big share of prosperity.

Costume Company Leases Buildings

Lease was made last week by the Western Costume Company for the use of a seven-story building, 40 x 85, at 908 South Broadway, Los Angeles. The Western has heretofore been located at 719 West Seventh street, and in the past four years has grown from a masquerade costume company to the most important one of the west coast film industry, due to the very efficient manner of handling motion picture accounts by M. E. Burns, the proprietor. Recently Mr. Burns purchased the "property" business of Lee Powers, and this will be merged with the Western as a nucleus for his motion picture supply establishment which will furnish anything and everything required in the way of props and costumes for film making. Scene docks are to be built, and a furniture factory will be one of the important features of the new establishment.

Rivalry in Canadian Theatre Building

A highly interesting development has occurred in connection with the carrying out of plans to build new theatres in London, Ontario, by the rival Allen and Loew interests. The Loew people paid a deposit on a site for a theatre at Dundas and Wellington streets. The Allens then announced that they would build their theatre in another block along Dundas street. The Loew interests subsequently forfeited the amount which they had paid on their selected site and secured a long term lease on property immediately adjoining the location of the Allen theatre property.

New Theatre for Springfield, Illinois

It is announced that Springfield, Ill., is to have a new photoplay theatre. Rumor has it that a large Chicago corporation—Balaban and Katz—are back of the deal, and that Rapp and Rapp, Chicago architects, are now working on plans for the playhouse. The site selected is at Fifth Street and Capitol Avenue, half a block north of the Majestic theatre, and directly across from the Princess. The ground is now occupied by two dwellings, both landmarks in this city. The land is owned by Harris Hickox and the Miner estate. It is planned to build a large and magnificent theatre, with stores on the ground floor.

The seating capacity will be about 2,500. The location is off the beaten path for the picture business, being a block away from the principal thoroughfare. But as crowds flock to the Majestic and Princess, it is safe to assume that the new theatre will draw its share also. Three of the city's most important street car lines pass this corner, and the others make good connection for there. The manager of one of the theatres in Keokuk, Iowa, is slated to be the manager of the new house.

This is all rumor.

Series of Exhibits

The National Board of Review has been requested by President George A. Strayer, of the National Education Association, to arrange a series of exhibits on visual education for the national conference held by the association in Milwaukee the first week in July. This will include motion pictures and lantern slides now being used by the schools in departments of visual education. The interest expressed by President Strayer in this form of education is full of possibilities for the larger use of motion pictures in school buildings for the instruction of scholars and for the social activities of the schools through community centers, parent-teacher associations and neighborhood meetings.

Defense Society Endorses

The American Defense Society is reported to have endorsed "Made in America" because of its merit in winning the unqualified endorsement of some of the largest and most influential patriotic and educational societies in the United States. The Boy Scouts of America was the first national organization to officially recognize and endorse the series.

Its approval was closely followed by the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations.

"Lord Jim," By Bennison

The Betzwoon organization, producing the Louis Bennison pictures for release through Goldwyn, announces that "Lord Jim" will be the next Bennison production to follow "Speedy Meade."

Ira M. Lowry, who wrote the story and directs all of Bennison's pictures, says that the plot and scenes are laid in the United States and England.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

An Art with a Large Capital "A"

THERE isn't the slightest doubt that within the past two years there has been a more wonderful change come over the exhibition end of the motion picture business than it has known before in its history.

It has come because exhibitors have realized that selling each picture is a different proposition and that they have something else to do after they have built a fine house to get steady patronage coming to them.

They have found that the motion picture exhibiting business has become an Art with a very large capital "A." And when we use the word Art it should not be confused with the high brow, because there can be just as much art in presenting and exploiting a slapstick comedy as with a huge symphony orchestra.

And with Art comes Study—a study of your business. There is a tendency everywhere to putting every effort behind every picture to getting the most out of each one.

NOW there can be no text book of motion pictures. The man who tries to sell you a handbook and then tell you that you have the knowledge of the business or a particular branch of it is simply handing you bunk. The only study that you can make that is going to improve you is through the current developments of the business.

Motion Picture News realized this when this department was started. It realized that if there could be some forum established where the best work of the most enterprising exhibitors could be reviewed, intelligent and constructive criticism rendered and where every idea that was published first met the test of worth that a great deal would be established.

There was no plan that this should be set up as a teacher for you from the wisdom of the employes of the department, but that this real learning should come from the successful experiences or the failures of exhibitors everywhere. We have had scores of letters telling us how valuable the department has been, how this or that specific article or criticism brought money into the box office.

WE know that this department has done much and it has been largely on account of the splendid cooperation that has come from the exhibitors. These men, perhaps, have become more and more willing to contribute their experience because they have seen that their worthwhile efforts are not going to be set right against some piece of bunk offered by an armchair showman representing a producer who has something to sell.

Now the point that we want to make is that if this department could print every worthwhile idea that the exhibitors of the country use this would become the weekly text book of the showman's side of the business. At first many exhibitors held back because of lack of confidence, but this quickly disappeared. Then real modesty prevented many of them sending in their matter, and we fear that on the part of others it is simply a case of not being willing to do the little work that is attached to it.

You know how valuable the ideas that appear here are to you. You know that when you are able to use the plan of some other exhibitor that your business is helped. And you know that when your business and the other fellows' and all the rest are helped you are going to get the cumulative benefit.

So why not joint this forum?

This is your department and that of no other.

THERE is not a week that passes that there does not appear here some valuable article by a successful exhibitor telling you of some of the things he has done, how he has done them and what has been the result.

For instance, in this issue there is an article by E. O. Weinberg, manager of one of the most successful neighborhood houses in the country. The question of children's matinees is not a new one, but Mr. Weinberg has some new angles on it. Possibly you have found that such matinees have not been successes in your theatre, but possibly that has come because you did not get the right appeal over. You may find something in this article that will help you.

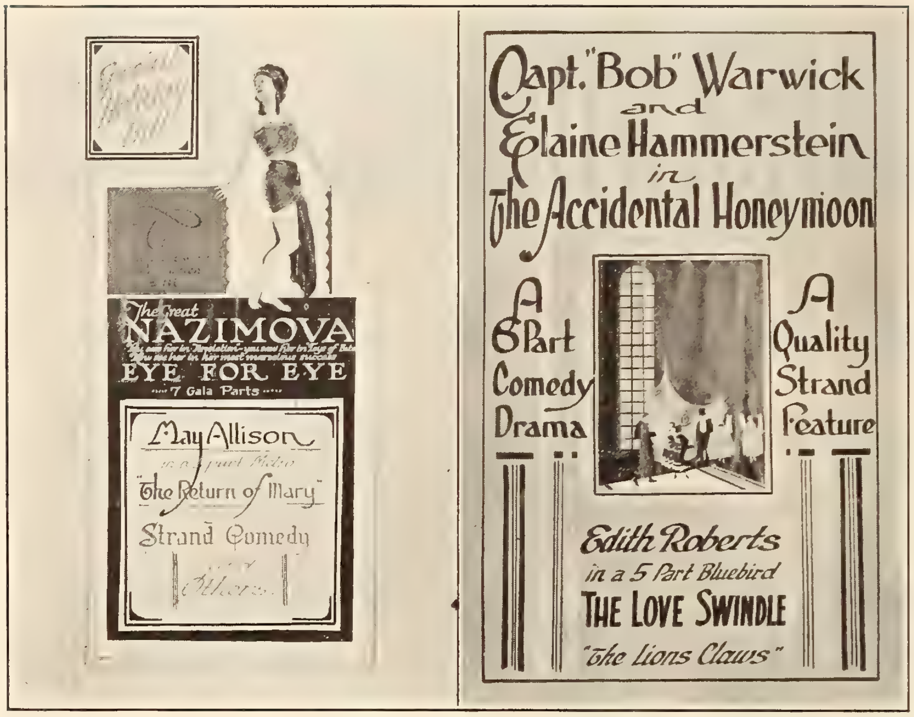
This reminds us that several months ago there appeared here an article by George E. Carpenter, manager of the Salt Lake City Paramount-Empress theatre, in which he gave some valuable pointers of these matinees. The value of it is shown, in that only a few weeks ago it was reprinted in a producers' house organ. And this is no criticism of that producer for he did the right thing to reproduce this valuable article.

And incidentally the other day another trade paper prints as an original idea a quotation from one of the contributors to this department, word for word the same matter that appeared here five months ago. Dozens of other cases of the sort may be cited.

But we are glad they do this. We know that this is recognized as the DEPARTMENT OF THE EXHIBITOR, because we have proven that it is.

We believe that we have the confidence of all of you. Now all that we ask is that you hesitate no longer in telling us the good things that you are doing.

AND DON'T FORGET THAT ANY SORT OF SERVICE, NO MATTER THE DEGREE, IS ALWAYS AVAILABLE TO YOU WITHOUT COST OR OBLIGATION.



H. C. Young, manager of the Strand theatre, Pittsfield, Mass., believes in collecting material for future use. Here is how he employs some of it in his attractive lobby posters

Young Gathers Material From Every Source For the Proper Exploitation of His Pictures

UP in Pittsfield, Mass., there is an exhibitor who believes in making just as strong an appeal as possible in his exploitation, and though his city belongs in the smaller class there is nothing small about the way that he goes after business. This man is H. C. Young, manager of the Strand theatre.

It was only a few months ago that Mr. Young took charge of the Strand, but he had something definite in view before he assumed he responsibility. He had studied the motion picture situation carefully and had decided exactly what he was going to do. In fact his experiences up to date reminds us a great deal of the accounts given in the Diary of a Successful Exhibitor, which was published in this department.

One of the first things he did was to change the name of the house, because he wanted to start fresh with the policies that he had in view. The place was practically made new and with this start he started out to let the people know about the house. He gave his earnest attention to advertising and it was through numerous letters that this bureau became acquainted with him. Mr. Young set out to get ideas. He found out through these pages who were some of the leading advertisers of the country and proceeded to get newspapers from those cities.

Mr. Young watches carefully the advertising pages of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and when he sees a striking design there he does not hesitate to adopt it. In several instances he has been able to secure cooperation from the distributors by getting the originals or mats of plates so used where they are adaptable to printing on newspaper stock. And he is getting his accessories well lined up by keeping after the exchanges. He is not satisfied to have one of them fail to send him the material he asks for and offer some excuse, but he takes steps to see that the next time he makes a request some attention is given to it.

However, he may take only an idea out of one of these newspapers or NEWS ad. displays and then prepares the rest of the advertising to suit his own purposes.

But one of the principal things that he has accomplished has been to get his local newspaper interested in motion pictures. The Berkshire Eagle is now cooperating fully and the sheet is a credit to the industry.

Clever exploitation is carried out in the lobby and here Mr. Young has his posters specially prepared for him. These are on colored stock and in colors, the illustrations being either especially designed or taken from photographs. Mr. Young is fortunate in having the services of a clever artist in doing this work, but if most exhibitors will look around their cities they can find someone who can do this sort of posters and get new attention to the theatre. The posters are 18 by 36 and are mounted in special glass frames that he has mounted in the Strand lobby.

Pittsfield is one of the cities that is cursed with the evil of double feature bills, but it will be noted that in all of his advertising Mr. Young picks one of the features to play up and then incidentally mentions the second. In other words, he does not appeal to quantity, but to quality. For instance, he picked "The Accidental Honeymoon" as the one to feature and kept it right up to date with the featuring of Capt. "Bob" Warwick. There was a fanciful ments of Bluebirds. illustration in colors for the center of this which was taken from one of the advertise-

In the case of the Nazimova picture, he featured the "Special Holiday Bill" on account of the season and then every bit of the display on "Eye for Eye" was taken from the Metro advertising, including the picture of the star, and then the display on the May Allison picture was lettered in, the whole being mounted on a bluish background.

We have seen a number of other specimens of these posters and in each case they show that Mr. Young gathers his material together carefully and makes use of all his opportunities. If he sees something in the NEWS or in some of the publicity sent out by the exchanges, in the regular paper or in heralds—no matter where—he files this away until he has occasion for its use. Mr. Young is not one of the exhibitors who is content to simply kick about the sort of material that he gets from his exchanges, although he naturally seeks to get the best that is available. But he is never caught in a hole, for he has his material on hand and in the comparatively short time that he has been conducting the Strand he has learned just about what he may expect on each brand of pictures and makes his preparations accordingly.

We have been repeating for the past two years here that every exhibitor should have a filing system and that he should accumulate there all possible material on the exploitation of pictures and not be content with simply following the ideas of the makers of the pictures. The number of those who are following such suggestions is increasing rapidly. It is simply a case of failing to grasp your opportunities if you fail to arm yourself for the sale of the pictures to your patrons.

BY PARCEL POST

Exhibitor Finds Picture So Shipped Saves Him Money

A. C. H. CHAMBERLIN, manager of the Opera House, Madera, Cal., and one of the live wires of the Pacific Coast, wants to know why exchanges cannot send pictures to the exhibitors by parcel post instead of using the express. He finds that it saves him a great deal of money. For instance, a ten-pound package from San Francisco costs 44 cents by express and only 14 cents by parcel post. These are small amounts, yet they count in the operation of a theatre in the course of a year. Mr. Chamberlin reports that he cannot induce some of the exchanges to use the parcel post.

Exhibitors should awake to their rights here. They should investigate and if they can get their films in as quick time and at a lower rate they should not hesitate to demand that policy. And if the exhibitor will sit down and write to this department it will at least be published here, so that the exchange will be on record and the home office is likely to want to know what is the matter. We wish as few troubles for the exhibitor as possible—but if you have them let us know about them.

Getting By-Product from Your Theatre

WELCOME OUR HEROES

"Welcome Home" display at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

YOUR theatre has a by-product value! Edwin O. Weinberg, manager of the Elmwood Theatre at Buffalo—the house that caters to absolutely the highest class trade in the city with an eminent degree of success—is the author of this declaration.

Weinberg is a living receptacle for quaint ideas that crystallize from drama form into practical money-making pleasure-producing steps.

His theatre is not open afternoons except on Saturday, Sunday and holidays. Naturally the big houses must play to capacity and draw those crowds within a few hours each evening.

This is where he has applied the by-product plan that has been such a boon to great corporations, making it possible for them to clear running expenses through a utilization of that which heretofore had been regarded waste.

Weinberg has infused the by-product idea into the theatre. This is a resume of his views on the subject and which WILL be helpful to any manager who must make his money in a few hours at night:

Childrens' Matinee

"The childrens' matinee has been considered by hundreds of managers as a waste of energy and money," said Weinberg. "All I can say is that he who passes up the children's matinee opportunity is not alive to the present-day demands—to modern advertising possibilities—to the magnitude of the theatre as a by-product producer.

"When you utilize your theatres during periods when it is not usually in operation—and manage to make those periods a paying proposition—that, I consider a creation of by-product. You are capitalizing waste time.

"For one year I have made Saturday childrens' matinees and often children's midweek matinees—produce a good margin of profit, when the week's total was summed up.

"Many managers will say: 'Bunk!' I can appreciate their feeling in the matter for that was my attitude for a long time.

Sentimental Advertising

"But time has changed. This is an age of sentimental advertising. Nowadays when a corporation advertises fire extinguishers it presents as an argument—a selling-point—a magazine or newspaper ad, showing how a man is saving his wife and little brood from flames with the patent extinguisher. The maker of automobile tire chains offers an ad showing how a father is trying to brush out of his mind an accident narrowly averted by him and which might have killed a small child through his not having tire chains. The ad pictures him dreaming of his own family in the same jeopardy.

"The insurance company pictures a family destitute because father made no insurance provision. The same sentimentalism has crept into motion picture advertising both by producer and exhibitor.

"And so on down along the line. Americans today think more of the comfort, safety and amusement of their wives and children than ever before. And the motion picture exhibitor can capitalize it through the holding of childrens' matinees with an appeal toward the family sentimentalism.

"The Elmwood last week Tuesday after-school played to 1600 children and several hundred grown-ups. That I consider a by-product. The attraction was a Humpty-Dumpty circus played by Marionettes with comedy films topping-off the bill. In other words, it was a modernized Punch and Judy show with films additional. We turned them away. The performance opened at 4:30 o'clock, after school, and ended in time so that the evening meal was not interfered with.

"My advertising appeal was made to fathers and mothers—that they allow their children to enjoy a Punch and Judy show with modern specialities. We pointed out what a bright spot it was in their lives when they saw years ago their first Punch and Judy show.

"Children never have been given such attention by parents as they get in this age. Naturally fathers after reading our ads suggested to mothers that they take the kids around to the Elmwood. And

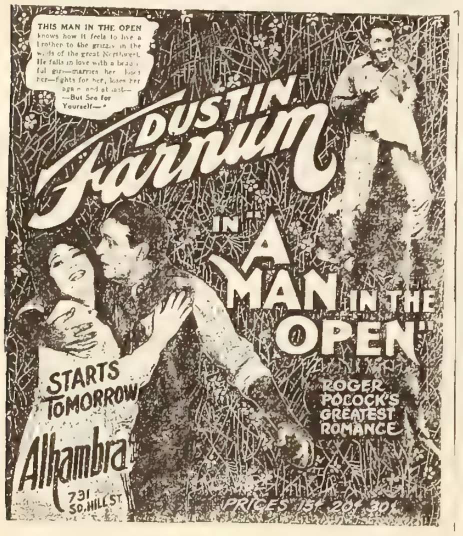
Your Idea and Ours

THIS quarter of a page display is excellent work for a theatre in a city where you can get good cuts made and where you can get good printing in the newspapers. It comes from the Alhambra theatre, Los Angeles. With one exception this is all plate stuff, but there is a welcome and effective relief with the mortise in the upper left hand corner and the type matter which gives the selling argument for the production: "This man in the open knows how it feels to live a brother to the grizzly in the wilds of the Northwest. He falls in love with a beautiful girl—marries her; loses her—and fights for her; loses her again and, at last—but see for yourself."



THIS MAN IN THE OPEN knows how it feels to live a brother to the grizzly in the wilds of the great Northwest. He falls in love with a beautiful girl—marries her—loses her—fights for her, loses her again and at last—

PRICES 15¢ 20¢ 30¢

The remainder of the display is devoted to a couple of scenes from the production, one showing Farnum alone and the other with the girl, the title of the picture, the name of the theatre, the date, the prices and the fact that the story is taken from "Roger Pocock's greatest romance." And we say, it is mighty good as it stands, but bad printing here would result in a terrible mess.

An entirely different angle on the same picture is taken by the Princess theatre, Milwaukee, in a six inch, four column display. Here there is an attractive cut of the star used as the attention-getter and then there are two questions asked: Does a hasty marriage turn out well? and Should a wife sacrifice a glorious career for the sake of her husband? On the opposite side of the question mark there is the statement that this is a stronger picture than "The Light of the Western Stars," the previous Farnum production. This is manifestly the curiosity arousing type of a display, but we do believe that the Alhambra selling argument is the better of the two because it appeals to the woman element with the winning of the woman and losing her, etc., and to the men because it suggests action.

Best jewel for you to wear is consistency.

WE do not like to see the superlative used in motion picture advertising—as you well know, if you have been following this department, and so we will resist the temptation to use it ourselves in this case. But that does not prevent us from saying that we have never seen better advertising, so far as getting the attention, than this full page display from the Modern theatre, Providence, R. I.

This splendid picture of Mme. Nazimova has been used to the very best advantage, and it is so appealing that it is going to cause everyone to stop and read all that is said about her. There is just one improvement that we would suggest and that is the omission of the "cap" line "Is at her best" under the title of the picture. It is slightly jarring in appearance there and is unnecessary because there is a better sales argument in the matter that follows and which tells something of the role in which she is seen. We would have much rather have devoted that much room to space between the name of the star and the title of the picture.

Out of the Fog is a screen adaption of the dramatic play Ception Shoals by H Austin Adams. Mme Nazimova is the star in the picture as she was in the play. The picture is highly dramatic and shows Nazimova at her best. The Russian Actress plays two roles—the mother and the child grown to womanhood

The Star of a thousand Moods

You Saw her as the fascinating girl of the French studio in Revelation—as Romany's light hearted daughter in Toys of Fate—and the wild child of the desert in Eye for Eye—now see her in Out of the Fog

Put yourself in her place.

If you were young eager and vibrant with life and you were caged like a bird with four gloomy walls between you and the sunshine—

If you knew nothing of books and still less of people, if you had never even seen a woman or a man other than a half crazed old grandfather—and then if suddenly out of the fog there came the light, piercing the gray of your fantastic life with hope and love in it—what would be your emotions?

Wednesday and Thursday—MABEL NORMAND in Sis Hopkins

DOWN in Jackson, Miss., there are a couple of theatres under the same management that are following just about our ideals of the correct advertising policy for a small city. These are the Majestic and Istrione theatres, located in a city with a census population of 27,000, half of whom are negroes and not admitted to the motion picture houses.

In the first place with the exception of a few week days displays these houses keep away from the syndicate idea. The displays of the two theatres are separate and generous, and the result is that they both get good positions, especially in the Sunday issues where the larger space is used. Still another commendable thing is that they place the emphasis on the first attraction of the week (there are no Sunday showings). This is true though the Istrione usually runs a picture only for a day and the Majestic for two days.

Evidently the advertising manager of these houses studies carefully the matter that he can get from the producers and this is used liberally, line cuts predominating. The theatres are able to get excellent cooperation from the papers and the half tones are used in the text columns so that the houses have a double appeal. But this press book matter is switched around so as to get the proper local appeal.

Now in the eleven inch three column display on "Happy Valley," the selling argument is largely taken from the press book, but instead of referring merely to Kentucky this is made a "story of the plain people of the Southland," which certainly brings it closer home to the people of Jackson.

Istrione uses ten inches double and here a mat furnished by the producers has been effectively used. We would have brought out a little stronger here that the story was by Booth Tarkington, but the designer has overlooked a bet and has let the name of the author go by in the small script as prepared by the producer. that there is just a line devoted to each of the other pictures for the week. The theatre does liberal daily advertising and will sell these pictures when it gets to them. That's the right idea.

Misery may love company—but not intelligence, enterprise and advertising.

THERE is some mighty good stuff in in this eleven-inch, triple-column advertisement of the Regent theatre, Cedar Falls, Iowa, but the typing could not have been much poorer and the result is that one has to look for the punch. The designer seems to have depended entirely on the picture of Mildred Harris to get the attention and then to have left the rest to the printer. This is certainly a case where a few inches more of space would have brought greater attention.

In the first place, the name, Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, should have been brought out at least four times as strong, and the title of the picture should have been played up better instead of using the open-faced type. There is a good line in "The girl who cornered the laff market," and we would have pushed the cut to one side and have used that line alongside.

There is another clever selling point in the use of Chaplin's feet, but this is so mixed up with the selling argument on the picture that it does not attract attention. While we are generally opposed to boxes, this is a case of matter which should have either been separated by the use of a box or brought right up under the name, Mrs. Charlie Chaplin. It reads: "Think of having the world's highest comedian smile at you across the table for 365 mornings out of the year. That is the lucky fate of Mildred Harris, who led the funniest (then the reproduction of the Chaplin feet) to the altar."

Keep the latchstring of welcome out and let advertising tell where the door is.

HERE is a mighty clever idea fo rthe exploitation of "The Heart of Humanity" if your local newspaper will let you get away with it. In this case it was put over by the Gaiety theatre, Springfield, Ill., by using a half page advertising display. You will note that through having the two cuts made in the shape of a heart, this gives over the full page effect to the picture and much more strikingly than would have been the case with a page ad. The week before the opening of the picture the Gaiety also used a total of half a page, half of that being devoted to "The Heart of Humanity" and in that issue it had another one of the heart-shaped cuts.

The heart effect is well carried out in the border of the display and in the center. We are generally opposed to the box effects in advertising, but here it has been well done, each referring to some different phase of the entertainment. The advertisement deserves commendation because it gives the big outlines of the picture and it shows the right sense of values on the prices, hours of presentation and the opinions of the New York papers.

SPRING IS HERE

Let's Get the Right Sort of "Fever" With It

SPRING is here, and there's likely to come along the well-known Spring Fever with it. But that's a disease that the motion picture wants to avoid this year. From all sections there comes good news, and it is up to the exhibitor to get out and try to do more for himself and his fellows.

It ought to be idea time for most of you. Time to think of things that you can do to improve your theatre and better your advertising and presentations. And for the benefit of others we are mighty anxious to record here the things that you do do.

And if there is anything that we can do to help—well, the Exhibitors' Service Bureau has been inoculated against the Spring Fever.

How New York Stages the Show

ALTHOUGH there is at times plenty of laughs and heart appeal in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" at the Strand theatre this week, the feature attractions at the New York houses belong rather to the tenser class of offerings.

At the Rialto the feature is Pauline Frederick in "The Woman on the Index," a story with a crook setting and a very strang drama. To offset this there is a Mack Sennett comedy, some more comedy thrown into the magazine and one of the quartet numbers is humorous, with most of the music of the lighter quality.

In addition to the latest D. W. Griffith picture the Strand is also showing the Sennett comedy, "Reilly's Wash Day," in which the various animals of the studio play a considerable part in the fun making. There is also a cartoon comedy included in the Strand Topical and, as has been observed, there are quite a few laughs in the feature, accentuated by the way that it is staged.

William S. Hart is appearing at the Rivoli in "The Poppy Girl's Husband," a very serious drama, and this is lightened by including a "Judge Rumhouser" cartoon in the Pictorial and with a Harold Lloyd comedy, "A Sammy in Siberia," as the final comedy.

Broadway featured the homecomng of the boys of the Twenty-seventh Division all the week. Mr. Kashin has a specially prepared feature which gives the story of the former guardsmen from the time they started to camp up to the present moment. This was started in at the regular Sunday opening and after the parade pictures of that were included. Pictures of the parade were used at all of the Broadway houses immediately after it was over.

Rupert Julian in "The Fire Flingers" is the Broadway feature.

Strand Theatre

MANAGING DIRECTOR JOSEPH L. PLUNKETT is getting some mighty striking effects this week with his presentation of the latest Griffith picture, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home." The battle effects are strikingly reproduced and the phonograph is used in a manner that delights the audience. Of course the use of the phonograph during a presentation is not a novelty, but in this case it has been done with a nicety that the audiences appreciate.

The lighter element dominates the bill at the Strand for though there is plenty of action and lots of tense scenes in the feature the humor stands out all the more by contrast and then there is one of the Mack Sennett comedies, with the lighter and more tuneful offerings running through the musical selections. Because of the length of the feature the usual scenic or educational picture is omitted this week and there is one double vocal number.

"Dance of the Hours" from "La Gioconda" is the tuneful overture and this is played with the lights all in gold. This is a selection that calls for the finer use of the various instruments, with little of it on the brasses, but the reeds and strings dominating. At the performance we heard it played the overture got an unusual hand.

Strand Topical opens with Universal Current Events pictures of London's welcome to the Scots Guards returning from the battlefields of Europe where they have been since the start of the war. The king and queen are shown reviewing the troops and the royal personages and the British soldiers get as much applause as if they were Americans. "London Scottish" is the most appropriate music which is played here. Then come Pathe pictures of the American battleship fleet at Guantanamo, the pictures this week being devoted to showing airships flying from a platform on the big guns of the battleships and how these machines were used to hunt out the U-boats. "Buffalo News March" accompanies.

There is a dash of humor brought in with Current Events pictures of delivering milk in Key West. Here the cows are driven in front of the residences and the householder buys the amount she wants straight from the course of supply. "In the Meadows" is played with these. Then comes some striking pictures from Pathe, showing scenes in Germany after the armistice. First we see the propagandists at work and making speeches and then actual warfare among the Germans come and we see machine guns commanding the streets and then the kaiser's palace riddled with machine gun fire. "Gethsemane Commadery March" is the music. Following these are Current Events pictures of the wedding of Princess Pat. Again from the volume of applause one would think that American nobles were being greeted and the soldier escort draws forth new enthusiasm. Excerpts from the magnificent "Pomp and Circumstance" add greatly to the effect.

Then there comes a novelty from Paramount Pictograph with "Out of the Ink Bottle." These are pen drawings by Maz Fleischer. First we see the artist seated at his desk and then he draws the head and upper half of the body of a clown and then on another portion the lower half. The two parts of the body do a dance before they unite. The clown gets a black eye but the artist repairs this and then restores his hat, the views on the screen alternating between the antics of the mannikin and the sight of the artist drawing. Toward the end there is a clever effect as the artist tickles the clown with the pen. Finally he throws water over the paper and the mannikin fades away. "Melody Caprice" was used here. As we saw the presentation on Sunday a specially made "Welcome Home" Cartoon for the boys of the Twenty-Seventh Division was used to the music of "DeMlay Trio," but later in the week motion pictures of the parade itself were included.

Malcolm McEachern, a basso with an unusually good voice then sings a double number, "The Floral Dance" and "Mary of Argyle." The stage is in red and the spot on the singer for this number.

Then comes the feature which is screened to the music of "A Little Song" until we have a view of the old Confederate soldier and here "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" is played, changing with the title "With the passing of a generation" to "Valley of the Poppies." For the first of the love scenes we have "L'Automme" when the Frenchman is claiming the girl and later in the evening with the American's appearance "My Paradise" is played and then with the title "A short time later" there is another switch to "Adieu."

This continues until the departure of the Americans. Then the organ takes up the music for five minutes coming back with "Now comes the day" and we have the calls on mited trumpets and then "French National Defile," played pp until the scene shifts to Germany where "Mother's Blessing" is used for the scene between the old woman and her democratic son. Then we have another change to "Faithfulness" with the title announcing America's entry into the war.

"Cutie Beautiful," the cabaret dancer, is introduced to the tune of "Laughing Eyes," certainly most appropriate fo the action of the picture and then when we see her trying the newest dance record we have the effect on the phonograph with the orchestra tacit. After the maid stops the machine we have "Sieste" and then with the title "The bright lights" there is accentuated humor with the playing of "Rockin' the Boat," This continues until the dance is over and here again the organ takes over the music for ten minutes, or until the scenes where Shipbuilder Grey is trying to get exemption for his younger son and then the orchestra comes back with "Military Tactics." When we see the result that military training has produced on the youth "I Hate to Get Up in the Morning" is played. Then we have the farewell dinner of the soldier and the girl and here the music is "Legend of the Rose" until the boy places the ring on her finger and then Grieg's "A Dream" is played. With the change of scene "Chant Elegigue" is used and then with the view of the marching soldiers we have the drums.

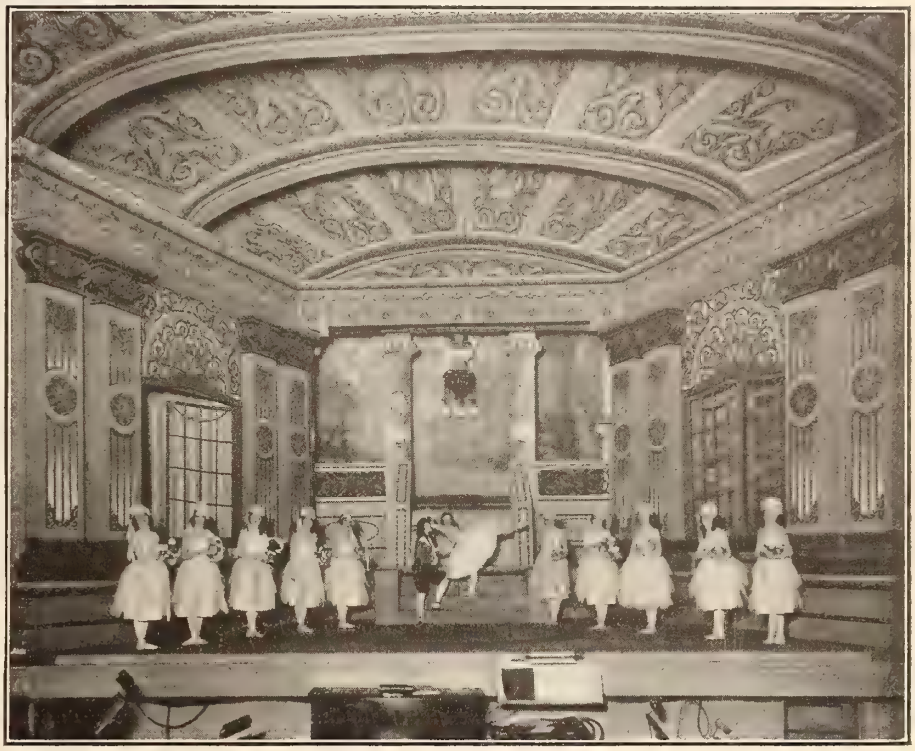
For another interval of ten minutes the orchestra carries the music and then as the auto is seen leaving the chateau we have the stirring "Battle of Ypres" changing to "Yelva" as we see the little American company still resisting. There we have a change back to "Cutie Beautiful" and the phonograph is once more introduced, this time playing McCormack's rendition of "When You Come Back." This scene fades out into battle stuff and we have "Le Roidy" played as Blossom sitting down by the dying German when we have "Heart Wounds" to the battle scenes where we get the effects. This continues until the old Confederate shakes hand with the American and drums are used to action here and then with the scene of his looking on the Confederate flag and saluting the emblem of the united nation we have "Yankee Doodle" played up.

Then with a change of scenes we have "None but the Weary Heart" and then the orchestra is tacit again as the phonograph is used. But the lovers are too busy with their kisses to note when the number is finished and we have the effect of the needle running around, continuing until the scene of the old folks and then the orchestra takes up "When You Come Back" and continues it to the end.

Then comes the screamingly funny Mack Sennett comedy, "Reilly's Wash Day." The famous Sennett cat and dog are introduced, the cat getting many of the laughs. Then the goat and the clever baby have their share of the fun. There is a succession of laughs during the scenes that show the improvised and dog operated merry-go-round. The music for this order is: "You Keep Sending Them Over," "Rastus," "Oh Lady, Lady" and then at the title "Uptown" the organ takes the music for five minutes, the orchestra coming back with "Tres Bien," "Have a Smile" and "Don't Cry, Frenchy."

Rogers' "March in E Flat" is the organ solo.



Stage set and performers at the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, used by Manager William M. Vance in presenting "Infatuation," with Gaby Deslys. During the showing of "Infatuation," the projection machine was stopped, the picture screen was raised, footlights flashed on the two principals, and a chorus of ten dancers performed the "Infatuation ballet." Dancing of the ballet occupied less than five minutes at each showing of the picture. Manager Vance reaped a harvest as a result of his enterprise

Rialto Theatre

THERE is a mighty clever musical arrangement of the score for the Robert Bruce scenic, "An Essay of the Hills," at the Rialto this week. Dr. Riesenfeld believes in paying just as much attention, if not a little bit more, to the arrangement of the score for the short subjects, and this makes them all the more effective. And here it is one of those simple "little things" that sends the audience away from the theatre more than ever "solid" on the house.

Now this picture opens with a fine view of a mountain stream with falls in the background, and then we are alternated with view showng "The law of rest" and others showing "The law of motion." For the first rest scene we have the snowclad mountains and a placid lake, and then for the motion we are shown the sea breaking on a rocky coast. Then we are shown a lazy spot with nature at rest, and in contrast a "mental tonic" with rapids and falls. Other scenes show panoramas of the mountains, little rivers cutting their way through the rock, then swelling into torrents, with the noisy falls, the contrast kept up.

Now for the music. "Woodland Echoes" is the first selection, and then "Siegfried" follows through. The orchestra carries the greater part of the music, but with the scene showing the angry sea we have the organ carrying the music and the effects brought in with each one of the turbulent scenes. One sees at a glance the "pep" that this puts into the picture.

With the final movement from "Scheherazade" there is a brilliant overture number. At the start all the lights go into red with the orchestra bathed in that color before the leader appears. It opens with a violin solo and then a touch of the harp, then the horns coming in and then the violins, the lights coming up to gold as the selection is about one-quarter ended. Near the end comes a burst from the organ, then softens down to the violins, with the lights going down gradually into blue and the music back to the violins and harp until we have only the concertmaster playing. Then the other strings come in, with the violin still dominant, and there is a brilliant burst at the end that gets a world of applause.

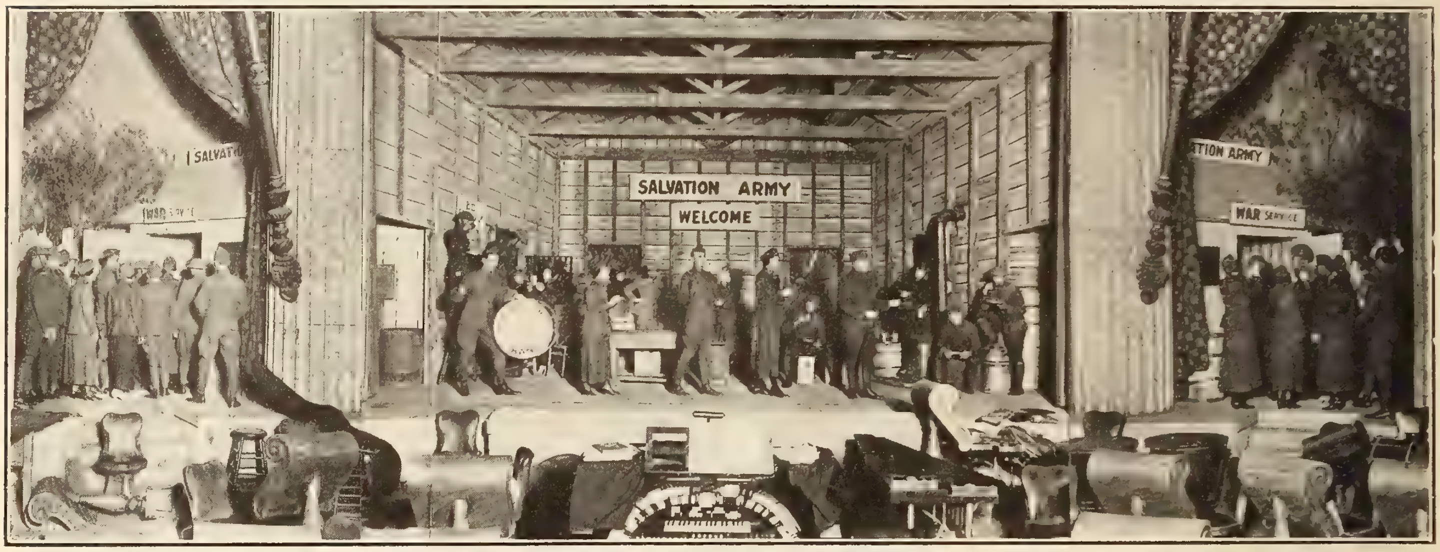
Then comes the Bruce scenic, and this is followed by the Rialto Male Quartette singing "The Lost Chord." They render this from the steps at the left of the stage, two of them standing and two seated, with a spot on them from the right. Organ and 'cello accompany.

Rialto Magazine opens with Kinogram views of the final review of the Italian marines, for which "Florentine March" is used. Then come pictures from Belfast, Me., showing a big schooner launching itself hours ahead of time, and here "Humoresque No. 2" is employed. Then there follow the Pathe Guantanamo pictures with "Cradle of Liberty" used until the aeroplane is seen in the air and then the orchestra fades out into effects, which are done with all the cleverness of Production Manager Joe LaRose. These continue through Universal Current Events pictures of testing an airship at Rockaway for the trans-Atlantic flight.

Kinograms then shows us pictures of feeding the forests to the paper mills, and there are some interesting views of timber-cutting with "A Dutch Wind Mill." There follow Current Events pictures of the milk delivery at Key West to the tune of "In Holland," the orchestra dimming down into effects with the title, "No bottling expenses." Then there breaks in a strong comedy element with Mutt and Jeff in "A Cow's Husband." There are some mighty funny situations that come through Mutt's acting as a cow and the troubles that he has certainly are a plenty. The orchestra has a good time with the effects here and the selections that follow one another through are "Wyoming Days," "Kinkies" and "Hunkatin."

Now there follows a portion of one of the Photoplay Magazine studios of film stars at

Music Hints For Entire Programs



Aiding the cause of the Salvation Army in the raising of funds for further relief work among the soldiers, and at the same time adding an attractive feature to his program, was done by Sid Grauman this week when he presented a musical sketch requiring forty people and running twenty minutes. In the center of the sixty-foot Grauman stage was built the interior of a Salvation Army headquarters supposedly in France, and on each side were shown the entrances to this somewhere near the camps now on the western front. The act consisted of the entrance of the Salvation Army workers accompanied by soldiers and the program given included several song numbers by soloists, trios and quartets, some clever jig dancing and choruses. The act was roundly applauded, and it was made decidedly attractive by pretty lighting effects.

play. We say "a portion" because there is so much of the issue for this week that half of this is used at the Rialto and the other half at the Rivoli, giving the patrons of both houses view of the famed of the screen away from their work. First we have J. Warren Kerrigan calling at the office of Photoplay to see Julian Johnson, the editor, and then William Russell with Yen, his Chinese servant. When Russell asks Yen whether he, the Chinaman, wants to appear in his next picture there is an explosive Chinese title and the orchestra dims down from "Dream Kisses" into Chinese effects. Then come Gaumont pictures of decorations for the marines, followed by Kinogram pictures showing Capt. Herbert Hall being decorated at Fort Totten. "Thunder and Cannons" is used for this with telling effect, and then at the end comes an appeal for the Old Clothes Week with "Rose of No Man's Land" played by the full orchestra.

Practically all of the music for the feature, Pauline Frederick in "The Woman on the Index," consists of the Rialto and Rivoli numbered selections. This is an intensely dramatic picture and therefore the lighter selections are not allowed to enter. The music is also largely carried on the organ because of the demand on the services of the orchestra for the remainder of the program. "Chant Elegique" is played at the screening and then goes into "Hezekiah," and then into the numbered offerings. At the title near the end where one of the Secret Service men tells Sylvia that he has enjoyed being her butler, we have "I Love Thee" used to the end.

There is an introduction on the brasses for "The Musical Trust," which is sung by the Rialto Quartet, their second appearance on the same bills. This is a story of four wandering musicians who meet on the road and form a combination, the songs telling their trouble. This is so acted through that it gets lots of laughs and hearty applause at the end.

Then comes the Mack Sennett comedy, "Reilly's Wash Day." Fourteen different selections are used for this and the effects are kept up by the orchestra almost continually. Selections in the order they are played are: "At the Jazz Band Ball," "Everybody Works But Father" (which is used when Murray is first shown and gets a big laugh), "Keep Moving," "When the Kaiser Does the Goose Step," "Pepper Pot," "Baby Doll," "After the Ball," "A Wild Jazz Knight," "Rainy Day Blues," "I've a Shooting Box in Scotland," "Minnehaha," "Full of Dash," "More Candy," and "The Vixen."

One thing that especially commends itself about the bill is the way that the tenseness has been set against comedy and melody so that the impression is almost left at the end that one has seen an all-comedy bill, though the feature stands out fresh in the recollection.

Rivoli Theatre

THERE is one of the longest Rivoli Pictorials that we have ever known shown at the Rivoli this week; but at the same time it is one of the most interesting that the house has ever had because there is so much variety in it, ranging from scenic pictures to comedy, with the news events filling in.

"First Hungarian Rhapsody" is the overture, and this is played with the lights all gold and then the Pictorial starts, opening with a Prizma picture of trout. These show the manner in which they come up the California rivers to spawn and then how they are captured by the U. S. fisheries employees, the eggs taken from them and then the various processes of raising the fish. There is a good laugh at the end as a fisherman is shown catching one of them and then the fish getting away.

Now there is a clever combination used next. First we have Gaumont pictures of Princess Pat at the farewell review of her regiment. These Canadian soldiers get a world of applause as the orchestra plays "Land of the Maple Leaf" with full effect. Linked right up with these are Universal Current Events pictures of the marriage of the Princess, and here we have "Loyal Hearts," which is counterpointed with "God Save the King" played. We have seen lots of scenes of enthusiasm over news events, but few greater than this demonstration, the British soldiers getting an especially big reception. For the shot of them the air changes to "Tommy Atkins." Unquestionably the music is largely responsible for this reception of the pictures.

Kinograms shows us pictures of the flood at Des Plaines, Ill., and there is a touch of comedy with the kids in all sorts of "boats" and one riding through the water on a bicycle. The organ carries the music for this. Then Gaumont brings pictures of armored craft passing through Paris for use on the Rhine and here "Celtic Suite" No. 1 is played. Then comes one of the "Films of Business" pictures," this being "The Story of Ink." There is a little negress for the title and then the picture goes into the discovery, laboratory processes and through the bottling and packing operations. "Funeral March" is used at the start and then "Forest Whispers."

There comes a high-light of comedy with one of the "Silk Hat Harry Stock Company" cartoons. This one being "Snappy Cheese." Judge Rumhauser has received a note from the Black Hand that a bomb is on the way, and so he gets a substitute, Silk Hat Harry, to act as the judge. There are laugh-provoking sneezes from the orchestra as the judge takes the snuff to "make him ill." Whistle effects are used for the clothes changing scenes. Then the courtroom and the first prisoner is brought in, who is equipped with some very active Limberger cheese, which does the "Hoochie" and all sorts of dances to the edification of the audience. Finally, as it is thrown out of the courtroom into Rummy's office it proves a bomb and explodes. "Porcupine Patrol," "It's a Pippin," and "Ching Chong" are the musical offerings.

Then come Intimate Studies of Screen Stars, and we are shown Dustin Farnum in his racing boat introducing "the newest thing in motion pictures—the gasoline fade-out," where his boat is enveloped in smoke. Then "in a desolate flat on Riverside Drive Mae Marsh comes home from the factory where she slaves for $2,000 a week," to her family, and there are views of the Marshes, big and little, with Mae playing with her little nephew. "Jeannette" is used for these pictures. "Southern March" is played for Gaumont views of the Mardi Gras celebration at Galveston, and from the same source come views of naval scouts getting their first training at San Francisco, with "Boy Scouts" the music. There is a punchy finale with Gaumont pictures of the "Dixie" leaving Ponta Delgada in the Azores after two years' service and sailing for home. "The Navy Will Bring Them Back" is played once through to the finish.

There is an artistic dance then arranged by Adolph Bohm with a scenic setting by John Wenger and executed to music written by Victor Herbert. Alexander Umansky and three girls in very filmy attire are the performers of this "Silhouette Dance." At the start of the music the lights go up to gold and then fade away before the curtains part until the house is completely dark except for the exit lights and a little light in the orchestra. The background consists of a fanciful vine sort of setting with a statue at the left of the stage. The smallest of the dancers has one of the Pipes of Pan and another carries a wreath which she places on the head of the statue and another brings flowers for the base. Then the statue comes to life and there is a wild dance with finally the figure going back into the statue at the end. A dull gray background for the stage helps to carry out the silhouette idea of the number.

Then comes the feature, William S. Hart in "The Poppy Girl." This is one of the more serious pictures and there is a lot of melodious music used to soften it. The first scenes are in prison and "Massougshiana" is played at the screening and then with the title, "Milestones of memory," the music changes to "Gold and Silver." Then one of the two themes is brought in with the first view of "The poppy girl," but this does not run entirely through the picture, because of the story where Dutton learns that his wife has been faithless, it ends. It is Huerter's "Melody," and is played several times during the first part of the picture. When Dutton tells the girl goodbye it is played as a cello solo, again when he is told that he is to be paroled and the last time when he tells of knowing that she is waiting for him.

With the introduction of the child Wieniawsky's "Romance" is played and this is followed through with Nevin's "Lullaby," which becomes the theme for the child. Friml's "Romance" and "Berceuse" are some of the other numbers that are used effectively.

Selections from "The Pink Lady" are the second orchestral number and then comes the comedy, Harold Lloyd in "Sammy in Siberia." There is a lot of clever stuff here at the expense of the Bolsheviki. We are introduced to "Private Smith from Florida" and others from various sections of the country who are having a terrible time in the cold, but the private from Chicago, Lloyd, is seen asleep in the snow and enjoying himself. There is a funny scene when Lloyd takes a swig of vodka and throws a fit. Music for this is "Glory of Russia," "Russian Rag," "Dough Boy," "Ghost Dance," "Sinbad" and "For Your Boy and My Boy."

Francis Fetis's "March in G" is the final organ solo.

The Broadway

MANAGING Director Maurice A. Kashin, of the Broadway theatre, was the only one to devote this week to celebrating the homecoming of the boys of the Twenty-seventh Division, the biggest occasion that New York has ever known. Of course all of the theatres included pictures of the parade immediately after it was over, but from the start of his Sunday opening Mr. Kashin featured the homecoming and made this the dominant thing in his newspaper advertising and in his lobby display.

Ambrose Tjomas's "Raymond" is the brilliantly rendered overture. This is played with the amber flood on the orchestra and the red lights upon the cyclorama scene of the city with all of the house lights dark.

Immediately after this comes the "Welcome Home." This picture has been made up of news weekly scenes taken at various times, but they have been so cleverly worked together that they make a real feature, especially New York where the enthusiasm has been at such a high pitch over the accomplishments of their former national guardsmen. At the screening we have Sousa's "Bullets and Bayonets" and then with a title "Here is the Story" we get "Smile." As they start off to Spartanburg, S. C., for training we have "K-K-Katy" and then "Der Vampyr." "A Cheery Smile" is used for the pictures of Gen. Ryan and then when some of the boys are shown on a furlough we have "Oh Frenchy" and then with the title "The big bosses" "Our Starry Flag" is used. The titles are all cleverly arranged here and there is no use of describing them since the pictures would have to be seen to get their effectiveness. But with the next one "They told us" we get O'Hare's "Military Scene" and then with the boys chasing the Germans we have "Goodby Alexander." With the news of the war over came "You're a Grand Old Flag," then "Songs of a Nation," with the title "Home Again" and finally "The Stars and Stripes Forever." Of course after the parade the pictures of it were included in this story so that it makes it complete.

There is an impressive effect used with the scenes depicting the homecoming. A woman singer in one of the boxes begins to sing "Home Sweet Home" and the impression left is that this is a voluntary tribute and it is not until she has gotten well into the selection when the spot is thrown on her. There is a burst of appreciation at the end of the song that is far more spon-

Youngstown Theatre's Anniversary Proved That Best Pays Even Outside of the Very Largest Cities

THAT the manager who is there with the brains and the enterprise can make mighty good both artistically and financially outside of the biggest cities has been shown again. This time it is the case of C. W. Diebel, promoter and manager of the new Liberty theatre, Youngstown, O. For not only is the Liberty one of the handsomest in the country, but it is conducted on the same plane as the biggest houses in the great centers, with the result that the pictures are not only presented with the proper music, but there are special stage settings used and every detail for each show carefully planned.

It is a peculiar thing that this theatre was conceived, financed and built during war time. Youngstown is noted for its great iron and steel plants and this probably resulted in the company being able to get the materials without great delays, but it was the spirit behind the citizens who put up the half million dollars the house cost that made it possible. As a matter of fact the construction of the theatre was to a considerable extent inspired by the war. Mr. Deibel and his associates found that in his section the war had increased the demand for the motion picture, because the natural antidote for the horrors of battle and the columns of news from the front is amusement—and at a price that the people as a whole can afford.

And at the same time this decision was made, it was also determined upon that Youngstown should have the finest house of any city of its size in the country. The men interested in the venture had heard much comment about the way that pictures were presented in other cities which Youngstowners visited and so they decided that the amusement right at home should be as good as they could get elsewhere and that it should be presented in just as fine a theatre. The result was the Liberty, a house that is magnificent from its beautiful terra cotta front to the last detail. It occupies one of the principal corners of the city and seats 1,800, a thousand of them on the lower floor. Every comfort is provided.

Besides the $20,000 pipe organ there is an orchestra of twelve pieces and special attention given to the musical portions of the program and to the interpretation of the pictures. The complete lighting system enables the management to get all of the color effects. Then there is a splendid stage arrangements that permits special settings and tableau and these have been in vogue since the opening week. There is one large central opening where the displays are made and on either side there are other curtained panels where further displays are given:

With the opening bill there was a display representing the spirit of Liberty with the goddess draped in an American flag and holding aloft the torch of freedom, flanked by one youth in the garb of a Revolutionary soldier and on the right by a youth in the khaki of the American army of today.

When "Under Four Flags" was presented there was a special drop used reproducing soldiers of the four allied countries changing. On this occasion a special patriotic musical bill was given.

For the showing of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" there was another clever effect obtained with the representation of the harbor of a South Sea island and the palms overhead while two cannibals sat on the beach looking out over the waters at the coming explorer. Local negroes were used in this case and immediately after this setting was revealed the picture was started on the screen.

Such displays as these were new to the people of Youngstown who had not visited leading theatres in the largest cities, but they made a hit from the start and Mr. Deibel soon had the people talking about his house. As a matter of fact within a couple of weeks the Liberty was really one of the institutions of the city.

We believe that we are going to hear a whole lot more from Mr. Deibel and the Liberty, for the manager and the house are both surrounded with the spirit of doing more and more in the presentation of pictures.

The Liberty has just celebrated its birthday and is starting on its second year of big things.

Spotlights on Girl Ushers Help Advertise Theatre

A more than worth-while scheme has been adopted by Sid Grauman, and is now in use at the Grauman theatre, Los Angeles, which is of great benefit to patrons of the theatre. Since the opening of the house Mr. Grauman has used girl ushers, and a feature of their costume has always been white flannel trousers, for Mr. Grauman always thought it best to give them something that would make them distinctive, and at the same time aid the public in seeing them because a portion of the theatre is necessarily dark. Ushers, when not busy, always stand at attention at the Grauman theatre on each side of every entrance to the main auditorium from the foyers.

The latest Grauman innovation is a spotlight hidden above each girl which brings them into bold relief and renders it possible for anyone entering the foyer to immediately see the girls who are on duty, and therefore know just where to go to enter the theatre. Furthermore, the spotlight effects add attractiveness to the theatre foyer by the attractive girls whose presence is emphasized by the lighting.

The spotlights are changed frequently so that different hues of light are thrown upon the girls. This is a marked improvement over the general conditions which prevail in most theatres where it is necessary for the patron to grope about to find an entrance, and inasmuch as the device for the spotlights are very inexpensive

Johnstown Theatre Uses Every Vehicle in Its Exploitation of "The Heart of Humanity"

GRAND AMUSEMENT COMPANY, Johnstown, Pa., which operates the Nemo and three other theatres there, has just put over what is about the model exploitation of a picture with the show of "The Heart of Humanity" for an entire week. This campaign was the work of L. W. Barclay, advertising manager for the Grand.

Such campaigns as this proves that it pays to go the limit in the exploitation when you have a big picture and when you are willing to run it long enough to get the full benefit from the money that you spend. Johnstown has a census population of about 65,000, but the appeal made by the Nemo was not limited to the local public, but carried through the district.

The reports from the Grand are that the picture went over to immense crowds, though an admission of fifty cents in the evening and twenty-five cents in the afternoon was a most unusual thing for Johnstown. As a matter of fact, the thorough way in which this picture was advertised is an object lesson to other managers of what they can do if they will really get out and hustle. But it cannot be done by sitting around the theatre and theorizing.

As a basis for the campaign the theatre had printed 20,000 eight-page heralds, and these were distributed at the three motion picture houses the company operates and through the stores in the suburban districts. In addition there were 10,000 heralds announcing a special children's matinee for the opening day. Incidentally, the newsboys of the city were the guests of the theatre that day. They marched to the Nemo headed by an automobile which bore a huge heart. This is reproduced on this page.

SPECIAL MUSIC SCORE BY AN AUGMENTED ORCHESTRA

There was variety every day in the heavy newspaper advertising

The city was literally covered with paper. There were fifteen 24-sheets used, forty 6-sheets, sixty 3-sheets, 200 one-sheets and 200 half sheets, and then 6,000 window cards. Special street car cards were used in every car in the Johnstown district.

These carried a big red heart, the title of the picture, the name of the theatre and the date of the beginning of engagement. This advertising reached the eyes of practically everyone who could conveniently make their way to the theatre.

Newspaper advertising started three weeks in advance of the showing of the picture and continued through the engagement. Liberal space was used, up to four full columns, and the best part about the advertising was the little reading matter that it contained. Yet none of this matter, which was carried in all three of the Johnstown papers, was allowed to remain the same day after day. For instance, in the one that is reproduced here the theatre referred to the verdict of the city after the first showing and to the fact that 900 children enjoyed it at the special matinee. Considerable of the advance campaign was devoted to what critics of the larger cities said about the picture, New York, Chicago and St. Louis papers being among those quoted. This was followed up with local opinions after the showing in Johnstown.

In addition to the three dailies printed in English, four foreign papers, published in Italian and Hungarian, were also used and advertising was also carried in country weeklies.

All during the engagement an auto was kept running through the principal streets of the city bearing an eight-foot heart that attracted the attention of everyone.

there were many fathers in the audience too.

"The parent also is partial to those old nursery stories told to them in their childhood, such as Babes in the Woods, the Three Bears, Cinderella and the Magic Slipper, etc. Naturally they tell these stories to their children, and in addition to that the schools now are aiming to develop imaginations through the use of the fairy story.

"Therefore I knew I would be successful when with proper human appeal advertising I put on filmizations of such stories on Saturday afternoon. The films of this nature were shown only at the kids' matinee, the regular evening features going on at night.

"I have not had one failure in the last year on childrens' matinees. However, I do not over-work them; one, say every two or three weeks. But for every Saturday afternoon I buy an inexpensive film, even if not a feature, but which embodies an appeal to the child mind.

"I have also enlisted the benefit plan on these matinees, some of them which have been held on Friday afternoons or midweek afternoons.

"These are also by-products inasmuch as your theatre is standing idle.

"Recently I put on a benefit matinee on a Friday afternoon with a college alumni association of women. They were trying to raise money to provide free scholarships for girls. Together we put on a matinee of childrens films, The stars were child stars with a rousing Arbuckle comedy. The women went out and sold tickets. These women fired with enthusiasm worked hard. The result was that the street was blocked when the doors opened. In the summing-up the theatre got as its share a tidy sum while the women were more than satisfied.

"All in all we made friends of those women, of those who enjoyed the performance and made some money out of the theatre at a time when it would have been idle.

"Of course discretion must be used. Any old thing won't go. They must be worked out to a nicety—with advertising, the right kind—as the predominant factor.

"Your theatre has a by-product value, and from thees by-products—utilized waste time—you will be able to pay for repairs and over-head which would ordinarily have to come out of the regular evening performances."

Sill another novel stunt came through the co-operation of the two Vendome restaurants, the most prominent in the city, which offered special "Heart of Humanity" menus for the week before the showing of the picture and during the showing. The name of the picture was printed prominently on the menu and of course the theatre got a lot of unusual advertising.

For three days in advance of the showing the theatre employed a woman singer to render the song, "The Heart of Humanity," and window displays on it were secured in the Grand and Woolworth stores. Since the record was not ready, Mr. Barclay prepared special displays for the Victor and Columbia dealers and in addition there were displays in the windows of all the leading stores of the city that handle musical goods. These displays were made largely by use of cut-outs from the one, three and six-sheets.

taneous than if this had been staged as a regular number.

Then comes the comedy, Lee and Moran in "Lay Off." Musical Director James C. Bradford has arranged a most attractive musical score for this, including a lot of the latest hits and some of the old favorites, all of it light and catchy so that the audience is kept humming most of the way through. In the order that they are rendered the numbers are: "The Canary," "Dixie Melody," "I'm So Happy," "Cold Turkey," "Oh, Helen," "Texas Fox Trot," "Walking the Dog," "Come On, Papa," "Do, Re, Mi," "I'll Say She Does," "A Wee Bit of Lace," "High Yaller," "Pahjamah," "Mama's Blues," "Tackin' 'Em Down," "Aces High," and Herbert's "American Serenade."

Then with an amber spot on the singer, Miss Edwards rendered delightfully "Your Boy and My Boy," and after this comes an organ solo, followed by the feature, Rupert Julian in "The Fire Flingers." Here we have a mystery story that is inclined to be melodramatic at times and with lots of action to it, but the score that is played at the Broadway stays away from the conventional and Mr. Bradford's originality certainly makes it all the more enjoyable. There is an entire absence of the hurry and scuffle music so usually found in a picture of this sort. As a matter of fact the score elevates this strong picture.

At the screening there is Langey's "Canzonetta" used, and then when we get a flash of the stenographer at her desk there is "Have a Smile," turning into "March Jouesse" with the flash of the back end of the office. When we see Olwell at the safe, "The Perfect Melody" is used, turning into "Serenata" with the title, "At the noon hour," and then when the auto appears with Olwell to Borch's "Turbulence." As he enters the room the music becomes "Rienzi" and then "The Erl King" when he attacks Hatton. With the title, "You could look like him," we have Tschaikowsky's "Final Symphony" until the policeman is seen entering the kitchen, when we get an appreciated touch with "Wearing of the Green."

When Hatton is seen to lock the door there is a shift to "Prelude from Eva" and "Hymn to the Sun" as the stenographer enters, with "Perpetual Motion" coming in for the police chase. "The Asra" comes with the title, "The next morning," and then with the appearance of Winnie, the theme, "Evensong," is introduced. Then follow "Nocturne" and "Bocturne" and the theme again with the reappearance of the girl. As the accomplice enters, "Cicely" is played and then with the title, "Bring my finger prints," comes "Un Sonnett d'Amour," and with the final title, "They are identical," we have the theme to the end.

Four All-Star Series in This Month

Metro Offers May Allison, Bert Lytell, Viola Dana and Emmy Wehlen in Screen Versions of Popular Novels

May Allison, Metro Star

FOR the month of April, Metro's program of releases is comprised of four All-Star Series productions, and they declare that as far as story and plot are concerned, their success is already assured.

Each of these four features has for its foundation a novel or short story, which has met with the approval of publishers, editors and the thousands of readers of well known authors.

In presenting these offerings to the lovers of the silent drama, Metro has selected them with a view to variety of theme and fitness for the respective stars, and in accordance with the policy of this firm of producers the settings, interior and exterior, are said to be of the highest standard of the screen.

The first of these is "The Island of Intrigue" which will be released on April 7, with May Allison in the stellar role. The play is taken from the popular novel of the same name by Isabel Ostrander, and enhances the thrillng story of advnture, love and intrigue.

The cast supporting Miss Allison in this tale includes Frederick Vroom, Jack Mower, Mrs. Lucille Ward, Gordon Marr, Lillian West, Hector V. Sarno, Tom Kennedy, Chance Ward and Edward Alexander.

The novel was adapted to the screen by A. S. Le Vino and June Mathis, and was directed by Henry Otto, with William E. Fildew at the camera. Maxwell Karger gave the piece his personal supervision.

Number two of the quartet of features will be released April 14, and is called "Blackie's Redemption," a title which is descriptive of the part essayed by popular Bert Lytell.

The famous "Boston Blackie" stories by Jack Boyle, as published in the Red Book Magazine, are the basis of this drama. In the cast surrounding Lytell, besides Miss Lake and Mr. Kolker, are Bernard Durning, Jack Duffy, William Musgrave, Gertrude Short, Don Bailey, Wilton Taylor and a real Chinese actor, Ah Tov.

Under the supervision of Maxwell Karger, John Ince has directed this drama. Finis Fox adapted the play from Jack Boyle's stories, and Robert B. Kurrle cranked the camera beside Mr. Ince.

On April 21, "Madelon of the Redwoods" will be released, which marks the picturization of the first of the many books from the pen of Mary E. Wilkins (Freeman). "Madelon" was the name of the novel.

Viola Dana has a refreshing role as the star. The screen adaptation is the work of Finis Fox. Edwin Carewe, directed, and in the cast are Wheeler Oakman, Edward J. Connelly, Pat O'Malley, Peggy Pearce and Virginia Ross.

The last of the Metro's four April offerings released April 28, is the return of Emmy Whelen in her new romantic-comedy, "An Amateur Adventuress," adapted to the silent drama from the novelette by Thomas Edgelow published in Young's Magazine.

Russell in "Some Liar"

May 11 is the release date set by the American Film Company for the next "swift and snappy romance" of William Russell Productions.

"Some Liar" is the title, picturized from a story which James Oliver Curwood contibuted to The Green Book last October. Stephen Fox made the screen adaptation.

Eileen Percy enacts the role of the maid for whose admiration the "liar" spins his tallest yarns of wholesale murder. Henry King did the directing.

"Sir Sidney" in Film

A forthcoming Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon, "Sir Sidney," available at all Fox exchanges, shows the Peace Conference at Paris as the basis for a comedy.

Mutt and Jeff arrive with credentials. Sir Sidney is pictured as an important diplomat. Bud Fisher's famous comedy team in films are described as big winners.

Will Boom the Salvation Army Special

In Addition to the Salvation Army Co-operation Throughout the Country a Book and a Song Is Expected to Provide Exhibitors with Exceptional Exploitation Aids

WHAT the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declares will be one of the greatest exploitation campaigns ever accorded a motion picture will be centered on "Fires of Faith," the big Salvation Army special feature.

Many out-of-the-ordinary channels are opened for progressive exhibitors in helping to place this production before as many millions of the people as possible.

The regular advertising campaigns generally conducted through the trade journals, newspapers, magazines and billboards will be in keeping with the calibre of the production. But other exploitation aids will augment this national publicity drive.

A book has already been written and published direct from the screen version, thus reversing the usual method of procedure.

"Fires of Youth" is also the title of a song which the publishers claim will receive unusually wide circulation, and which they declare is catchy and tuneful enough to surely attain a wide vogue.

Doughnut Remembered

And the lowly doughnut has not been forgotten in the many aids given the exhibitor by Famous Players'Lasky in a special twenty-four page press book.

Millions of persons throughout the entire country are said to be anxious to see Commander Booth, and she has an active part in the film and a splendid cast is heralded in her support.

"The Advertising and Publicity Department has arranged a campaign for 'Fires of Faith' that makes it possible for every exhibitor who runs this film to score a ten strike," said Al. Lichtman, General Manager of Distribution for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in outlining the proposition.

"Aside from the advertising and publicity campaigns on the film in newspapers, magazines and trade papers, there will be open to the progressive manager, various different channels which he can use to put over the picture.

"In the first place there is a 40,000 word novelization written from the film, by Charles Kenmore Ulrich and published by Grosset & Dunlap. This is perhaps the first time that a book version of a story has been published from the film.

"The volume is nicely bound, has fifteen half-tone illustrations of scenes from the photoplay, and an all-round jacket or paper wrapper in four colors, also embellished with scenes from the picture. This book, as well as the photoplay, has been officially endorsed and recommended by Commander Booth. The volume will sell at the popular retail price of fifty cents a copy.

"The publication of this volume at the time of the release of the picture gives the exhibitor a fine opportunity to work up some unusual and extra publicity in co-operation with the booksellers of his town. One of the best methods of procedure is that the exhibitor call upon the bookseller just as soon as the picture is booked, have him order a large stock of the novel and then arrange for a window and interior display using the advertising material from the publishers and the supplementary paper which will be furnished the exhibitor through the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges.

"Furthermore, the book dealer can be prevailed upon to mention the announcement of the picture in his advertising copy in reciprocation for advertising the book in the lobby displays of the theatre and in the exhibitor's newspaper announcements.

Attractive Posters

"Then there is an attractive one-sheet poster being prepared, a reproduction in colors of the popular 'Doughnut Girl' cover of a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post. This poster, it is pointed out, opens up numerous channels of exploitation to the exhibitor. Owing to the high esteem in which the Salvation Army is held in every American community, it will not be difficult to place them in office and store windows not ordinarily given over to general advertising.

"In fact, it will be found that merchants and citizens generally will be not only willing but anxious to co-operate in every way possible if the exhibitor will donate a percentage of the receipts of the opening day to the local corps of the Salvation Army. Moreover, if this is done it is more than likely that returned soldiers will be eager to assist in an advance sale of tickets," continued Mr. Lichtman.

"The erstwhile lowly but now exalted doughnut even may be turned to good advertising use, either distributed free to patrons or, better still, sold to them for the benefit of the Salvation Army. In this connection, during the recent engagement of 'Ladies' First,' at the Nora Bayes theatre, New York, a number of Salvation Army girls gave away doughnuts and Miss Bayes's solicitation was responsible for the collection of nearly a hundred dollars for the Army at each performance.

"All these suggestions and others are incorporated in a special twenty-four page press book on 'Fires of Faith' which is now being prepared. The edition of this press book, which will be twice the dimensions of the usual press books issued by the company on its productions, will run to nearly twenty thousand copies and will be distributed to every exhibitor in the United States, serving as a sales medium as well as an exploitation aid. The press book will be most attractive typographically, including a complete list of all the Salvation Army headquarters in the United States with the name and address of the officers in charge.

For the Singers

"Another tie-up possibility for the picture is a song published by Waterson, Berlin and Snyder, especially written and dedicated to the film, entitled 'Fires of Faith.' The music offers an exceptional ballad by well known writers, the words being by Lewis and Young and the music by M. K. Jerome. The song also presents the musical theme of the photoplay and is part of the music score prepared by George W. Beynon.

"Local music dealers will be glad to co-operate with exhibitors along the same lines as the book dealers and the progressive exhibitor will be in a position to tie up the respective exploitations of the film, the book and the song to his advantage. Besides this, exhibitors will be furnished with slides containing the chorus of the song by Waterson, Berlin and Snyder, free of charge.

"With the individual advertising campaigns given by the distributors of the film, the song and the book plus the co-operation of the Salvation Army, the exhibitor who books 'Fires of Faith' has at his command a wonderful opportunity to put over a big showing. This publicity is backed by the unusual quality in the film itself. With its dynamic title and the inspiring theme, its splendid cast, admirably directed by Edward Jose and the fact that Commander Booth herself takes active part, it is quite evident that this film will be one of the biggest box-office possibilities this season."

Olive Thomas Gives a Piece of Her Mind

"It is not the Tired, but the Re-tired business man who makes the theatrical business boom," says Olive Thomas. She used to be in the Ziegfeld Follies constellation. Olive says the average New York business man, when he reaches the state of affluence which permits his associating with the stage beauties, only has to work about two or three hours a day, and most of the time he never goes near his office. The young fellows who do all the work and are compelled to be at the desk from nine to five are the real tired business men and can't afford the Follies. Their recreation is the moving pictures, and that is why Olive now feels that she is doing a real service in helping these boys forget for the time the drudgery of the office. Olive is now the idol of the Tired business man and not the Retired business man as she was when in the Follies. She is in the movies now, starring in Selznick Pictures.

Wm. S. Hart Story Selected

William S. Hart's next picture will be from a magazine serial called "Square Deal Sanderson," it is reported, though little is as yet being announced concerning the picture or the cast.

It is understood, however, that Mr. Hart has arranged to secure a particularly strong company of players to enact the roles in the production.

The Artcraft star began work last week on the production at his Hollywood studio and several important sets are being constructed.

"From Headquarters" Scores

Vitagraph declares that to recount the big runs now being scored by Vitagraph's Anita Stewart feature, "From Headquarters," would mean the listing of a goodly percentage of the important picture theatres whose booking dates have so far made available a run of the pitcure.

The New Theatre in Baltimore began a run on March 24, and, scattered all over the country, other big houses are putting the picture in as their dates permit.

Goldwyn Names Spring Releases

Says Five Powerful Productions Are on Current Schedule, Including a Rex Beach Offering

PICTURES that are certain to add tremendously to the popularity of Mabel Normand, Geraldine Farrar, Tom Moore and Madge Kennedy, including a virile Rex Beach production, is what Goldwyn promises in spring offerings.

Leading off is the latest Mabel Normand broad comedy, "The Pest," which Samuel Goldwyn confidently predicts will surpass in popularity her "Sis Hopkins."

W. Christy Cabanne, supervised the production of "The Pest," his first Goldwyn assignment, released April 20.

A week following "The Pest" comes what is heralded as Geraldine Farrar's most powerful screen offering, "The Stronger Vow," a vehicle which reveals the international celebrity as an incomparable artiste because of the extraordinary demands her new role makes on her ability.

Again the diva is supported by Milton Sills and Tom Santschi, who contributed not a little to the success of her previous Goldwyn productions, "The Hell Cat" and "Shadows," as well as by Hassard Short, who distinguished himself in Miss Farrar's support in "The Turn of the Wheel."

Third in the list of Goldwyn's spring releases is Tom Moore's newest comedy-drama, "One of the Finest," in which he is said to duplicate his brilliant performances in "Thirty a Week" and "A Man and His Money."

Aside from the comedy element in "One of the Finest," it is declared to be replete with tense situations that bring out the young star's splendid dramatic talents. Again Tom Moore has vivacious Seena Owen as his vis-a-vis, and once more the Goldwyn star has Harry Beaumont as his director.

"Leave It to Susan," Madge Kennedy's newest Goldwyn production, will be released May 11. Though the light comedy element is the main theme of the new Madge Kennedy release, the star is once more given opportunity to display her versatility—to evoke heart throbs as well as laughter from her audiences. Wallace MacDonald is Miss Kennedy's leading man in "Leave It to Susan." Clarence G. Badger, who showed his directorial skill, in six other Madge Kennedy-Goldwyn productions, is directing "Leave It to Susan."

Rex Beach's "The Crimson Gardenia" is described as a powerful picturization of one of the famous author's best sellers, is his newest contribution to the screen. It is expected to equal the tremendous impression made by Mr. Beach's recent success, "The Brand."

New Orleans, at the height of the carnival season, is the locale of "The Crimson Gardenia," released May 18.

Miss Condon East to Sell Picture

The six-reel film made by the New Art Film Company at Long Beach under the direction of Frederick Sullivan and with a cast that included Jack Mulhall, Helene Chadwick, Pauline Curley, Leo Pearson, Charles Spere, Wharton Jones, Emmett King, Ann Shaffer, Gordon Griffith and others, is shortly to be offered New York buyers by Mabel Condon, who is in the east with the film. As yet the subject is unnamed. Miss Condon will be aided in the sale of the film by George B. Watters, general manager of the New Art Company.

Rowland Goes to the West Coast

Metro Head Aims to See "The Red Lantern," New Nazimova Subject—Will Exploit Production Largely

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, who, together with Maxwell Karger, presents the Nazimova de luxe screen dramas, left on a hurried trip for Hollywood, Cal., this week to see a projection of the star's latest feature, "The Red Lantern," the cutting and assembling of which has been finished under the personal supervision of Mr. Karger.

Immediately upon Mr. Rowland's arrival in California a conference of executives of Metro Pictures Corporation, who are the exclusive distributors of the Nozimova Productions, will be held to perfect the details of special plans for the exploitation and distribution of this sensational production.

Both Mr. Rowland and Mr. Karger consider "The Red Lantern" the artist's greatest achievement on the screen or stage, and they propose to leave no stone unturned in exploiting it on a scale and in a manner never before attempted with a picture.

Already a nation-wide advertising and publicity campaign has been inaugurated to aid the exhibitor in getting the very best results from this feature. Definite announcement of the details of other promotion plans, recently evolved, will be forthcoming after Mr. Rowland sees the picture and consults with Mr. Karger and their business associates.

The release for this spectacular photoplay, Mr. Rowland stated on the eve of his departure, has been set for April.

It will be the first of the new series of big Nazimova productions of big stories produced in a big way. All of the picture, Mr. Rowland said, will be made in California. They will be the most elaborate series ever undertaken in the annals of the screen. They will even excell Nazimova's first series, he says, and will be produced without refernce to speed and with attention given to the minutest detail.

"The Red Lantern," he pointed out, will be a good example of what the famous actress will do in this new series. In strength of story, elaborateness of production, wealth of costume, lighting, setting, direction and photography, it will establish new standards in the industry and advance the art of the screen twenty-five years.

It is a tale of great sweep and power, painted in bold colors, and not only gives Nazimova the finest opportunity she has yet had for a display of her great versatility, but provides her with a background even more atmospheric and picturesque than "Revelation" or "Eye for Eye."

It was produced at a cost of a quarter of a million dollars. Among the massive and striking sets is a faithful reproduction of a famous Pekin street, with its dwellings, shops, temples and bazaars and the historic throne room of the Emperor.

Rialto of Minneapolis Invades the East

George E. Luxton, associated with Sid Lewis of the Rialto Theatre Supply Company, Minneapolis, is making a trade tour of the Eastern and Central states in the interest of his concern.

And from all reports the tour is described as a most successful one. Mr. Luxton states that he has already placed several of the articles manufactured by the Rialto with many of the leading producers, laboratories, theatres and distributors.

Sid Lewis, President of the Rialto of Minneapolis, was at one time travelling general auditor of General Film Company, and later manager of their Minneapolis exchange. He afterwards organized a poster mounting company with shops in both Minneapolis and Chicago. This is still an adjunct of The Rialto Theatre Supply Company which was organized about three years ago.

The offices and display rooms alone occupy 12,000 square feet and the clerical staff in the office is composed of eleven persons. The exclusive agency for Motiographs throughout the entire Northwest is held by the Rialto.

A four story concrete building is planned to house all Rialto activities and it is said that an excellent location has been secured in the heart of the film district in Minneapolis.

The chief articles manufactured by Rialto that Mr. Luxton is introducing nationally at this time are: a shipping case which has met all requirements of the U. S. Government; a film patcher and rewind; a novel film band and about fifteen other articles calculated to be useful to the trade.

A handsome 200 page catalogue, profusely illustrated on heavy cream enameline paper, is issued by the Rialto. Mr. Luxton goes from New York to Philadelphia, Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Chicago before returning to Minneapolis.

Percy Uses Bruce Scenics Regularly

H. L. Percy, of the Rialto theatre, Medford, Ore., writes to Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, that he is a regular user of Robert C. Bruce scenic pictures, and that he finds them far superior to any other material of the kind available in his territory. Mr. Percy has just acquired two other theatres in addition to the Rialto, and says that the "Educational" single-reel attractions are to be featured in all his houses.

Three New Christie Comedies Are Described

CHRISTIE FILM COMPANY, announces that the titles of its three latest single-reel Christie comedies are "Brides For Two," "Oh What a Night" and "Hard Luck," directed respectively by Wm. Beaudine, Al E. Christie and Scott Sidney.

In "Brides for Two," Ethel Lynne, Earl Rodney, Roscoe Karns and Dorothy Dane are the prominent players. It is described as a diverting story of a bachelors' card club, and the reticence of the members to admit that each—being alleged women haters—was backsliding and contemplating marriage, leads to an amusing situation in which the bachelors become benedicts and their efforts to cover up their matrimonial adventures leads them into difficulties with their wives and hotel detectives. The story is by John D. Newton.

"Oh What a Night," with Bobby Vernon and Dorothy De Vore, is said to hit a popular chord in seeing the funny side of a "spook meeting." Bobby's entertaining adventures during the night which he had to spend with the Human Ouija Board, because he was engaged to a girl who believed in "spooks," should be a warning to young men who contemplate marrying into families who are addicted to spirits of this nature. The story is by Walter Graham.

In "Hard Luck," Ethel Lynne and Jay Belasco are presented as fond sweethearts. Jay and Ethel have their troubles in a rather amusing way, it is said. Robert Hall wrote the story.

"Marrying Molly" and "Apartment 23" are the Christie Comedies which will follow these three.

Big Eastern Plant for Famous-Lasky

With the expectation that the cameramen will be "shooting" before next Summer, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will start work soon on a gigantic producing plant to be located in Long Island City.

Two entire city blocks have been secured for the new plant, one block housing the studio and the other the laboratories. A glass covered stage and one large open air stage will be included in the studio equipment in addition to offices, dressing rooms, etc. The laboratory plans have been laid out under the supervision of Frank Meyer.

The new plant, which will be fifteen minutes' ride from the heart of the city, is being built with the intention of giving those stars of the company who cannot go to California producing facilities equal to those provided on the West Coast.

Great Record Claimed for Frank E. Woods

A LOS ANGELES film man declares a record that has not been paralleled in annals of motion picture industry history, has been made by Frank E. Woods, the supervising director of Paramount Productions made at Hollywood studios, in that Mr. Woods has supervised the making of no less than 570 motion pictures since 1914.

A great number of the most successful film plays released to date came to the screen after supervision by Mr. Woods.

Supervising means all the word implies, and Mr. Woods has had his advisory say in every picture he has been connected with from the selection of a story down to the cutting, assembling and editing.

This surprising number of pictures supervised dates back to 1914 and to the Reliance and Majestic companies, which flourished under the guiding hands of David W. Griffith and Frank E. Woods. With these pictures were those known as Masterpictures, distributed by the Mutual. Now for more than a year and a half the big majority of the Paramount productions have been made under his supervision.

Five hundred and seventy pictures is cited as furnishing a fine record, and appearing in them are some of the following artists: Mae Marsh, Robert Harron, Dorothy Gish, Norma Talmadge, Douglas Fairbanks, Wallace Reid, Bryant Washburn, Henry B. Walthall, Ethel Clayton, Constance Talmadge, Lloyd Ingraham, De Wolf Hopper, Sir Beerbohm Tree, Vivian Martin, Jack Pickford, Sessue Hayakawa, Fred Stone, Lila Lee, Fay Tincher, Rozika Dolly, Bessie Love, John Emerson and a host of others.

From present indications, it is claimed that Mr. Woods is likely to double his five hundred and seventy productions within a like period—it is five hundred and seventy "odd" already.

Joe Brandt Cites Prosperity of the Serials

THREE months of studying conditions in various parts of the country, visiting with hundreds of exhibitors, exchangemen, editos and critics has convinced Joe Brandt, head of Universal's serial department, that the serial market is better today than at any time during the past four years.

Mr. Brandt returned to New York Monday from Universal City after supervising the starting of "The Red Glove," featuring Marie Walcamp, and "The Midnight Man," which will introduce James J. Corbett to the screen. Mr. Brandt spent over six weeks at the studios and the remainder of his time visiting exhibitors in various cities and in studying conditions and in creating ideas for better exploitation of Universal serial productions.

Just prior to returning to New York Mr. Brandt selected the type of story he has found most suitable for Eddie Polo's next serial production, deferring his selection until he had visited many cities to learn what sort of a serial exhibitors and public desired to see Mr. Polo featured in. The title for the new serial Mr. Brandt refused to divulge but stated that he was confident it would prove the best vehicle the star has ever had and that in all probability it would be eighteen episodes in length.

In practically every territory visited, Mr. Brandt states, he found serial conditions proving and a demand for the continued films increasing steadily as the warmer months drew near. Mr. Brandt has predicted that this spring and summer will see serials given a wider distribution than at any time since the idea of showing continued films was first conceived. In the West and Middle West, exchanges have recorded a record number of bookings on "The Lure of the Circus" and "The Red Glove" according to Mr. Brandt and adds that exchangemen have already received numerous requests for bookings on the Corbett serial, which is not scheduled for

Hodkinson Has Zane Grey Films

Announces Distribution of Famous Author's Pictures as Second of Four Big Lines of Product

THE new Zane Grey pictures, made by the author's own company and with his cooperation, are this week announced as the second of the big new lines of product to be handled by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in forthcoming months.

This announcement follows closely on the heels of the recent news concerning the alignment with the Hodkison Corporation of the Augustus Thomas-Harry Raver-George Irving-Leah Baird series of features. It is hinted that it will be followed in the near future with other announcements of equal interest in keeping with the Hodkinson policy of confining its energies to four big lines of product of the "special" type.

News of the plans and activities of the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., have already been published, but the identity of the organization chosen to distribute these new pictures has been withheld until the present time. The Zane Grey Pictures Company is the author's own company; the books of Zane Grey will be used as the basic material for the productions, and the author himself will cooperate in the making of the pictures. To a greater extent than has ever before been attempted, this company will produce the books of this famous author, not as some director thinks the books ought to have been written, but exactly as the novels were conceived and put in literary form.

The Zane Grey Company is now working on the first production of the series, a picturization of the author's novel, "Desert Gold." The part of Dick Gale is being played by E. K. Lincoln. Casting for this production has been carried on both in the West and the East. One of the latest additions, for instance, is William Bainbridge, seen in "Hands Down," "God's Country and the Woman," and many other pictures, who in "Desert Gold" takes the part of the rancher, Belding. The rest of the cast has been just as carefully chosen.

Benjamin B. Hampton is president of Zane Grey Pictures, Inc.; Van Campen Heilner, one of the editors of Field and Stream, is associated with him. The man mainly responsible for the organization of the Zane Grey Company is Eltinge F. Warner, owner of Field and Stream and Smart Set, who "discovered" Zane Grey when he was a struggling writer nearly a dozen years ago.

T. Hays Hunter is in charge of the direction of "Desert Gold." Mr. Hunter has directed many successful screen dramas, his latest being "The Border Legion," another Zane Grey story. The New York offices of the corporation are at 3 East 44th street, and are in charge of Charles A. Weeks, treasurer of the company.

E. K. Lincoln, star of the S-L Production, "Virtuous Men"

S-L Installs Special Service Bureau

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, sponsors of "Virtuous Men," the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction, starring E. K. Lincoln, will put into effect with the release of this production the theory that "no picture—no matter how good it is, sells itself." A special service bureau has been installed at the S-L offices to give direct aid to exhibitors presenting "Virtuous Men."

Publicity material tied up direct with the important points of the production, the director, the star, etc., has been prepared. A new idea in the matter of lobby display has been worked out for the benefit of exhibitors. Several of the illustrations making up this display are from original paintings by Clarence Underwood, Gustav Michelson, R. G. Morgan and other famous artists. A new service of color combinations has also been used for the lobby photographs. A diversified number of cuts suitable for newspapers, magazines, programs, etc., embracing the star, the biggest moments in the drama and reproductions of the paintings by the artists mentioned above, will be available. A comprehensive press sheet has been designed containing only matter essential to the exhibitor in selling his entertainment. Every line in this press sheet has been carefully weighed from the standpoint of the showman's actual requirements.

The executives of S-L Pictures have to their credit several years' experience in the production, exhibition and exploitation of films, and are thoroughly conversant with the requirements of the exhibitor.

All Foreign Rights Sold on Garson Feature

"THE UNPARDONABLE SIN," starring Blanche Sweet and personally directed by Marshall Neilan, has been sold for the entire world outside the United States and Canada, by Harry Garson.

This is the big ten reel special that adopted the very unusual method of having its premiere in Detroit instead of New York or Los Angeles.

Of the many territorial buyers that made a quick trip to Detroit when the enthusiastic reports began coming in was Bobby North. Mr. North and Lawrence Weber own the Apollo Trading Company in the Long Acre building, New York City.

According to all reports Bobby North saw the picture exhibited at the Broadway-Strand in Detroit and ten minutes afterwards managed to secure a short option for all the foreign rights. He declared that the picture was not only a positive knockout for this country but that it possessed that other peculiar and very essential International angle.

To show how determined Mr. North was in closing the deal at once the producers cite his quick trip to the telegraph office and then to the long distance telephone and then finally to the fastest train direct to New York from Detroit.

He stated that the deal was so stupendous that he felt he should see his partner Lawrence Weber before finally closing it. But Mr. Weber was on a fishing trip in Florida, and apparently was out in the only available boat when finally located, but he could not be reached in time to close the deal before the option expired, according to report.

Bobby North then boarded a train back to Detroit and closed the deal on his own personal responsibility for his concern and secured all foreign rights for the Garson production.

Mr. Garson then went to Los Angeles where he will personally supervise the Los Angeles opening of "The Unpardonable Sin," at the Majestic Theatre starting March 31 at $1.50 top admission price.

Cites Interest in Timely Film

The Lenten season is witnessing extraordinary activity in the Vitagraph branch offices in connection with bookings on the five-reel feature, "From the Manger to the Cross."

This pictorial presentation of the life of Christ from his birth in Bethlehem to the final tragedy on Calvary, has received the endorsement of the Christian clergy of all denominations. The fact that this is the only picture ever taken in Palestine and Egypt stamps it as the one film portrayal of the life of Christ worthy of the highest recognition of the public.

"Better 'Ole" Scores

The following wire was received by Ricord Gradwell, President and General Manager of World Film Corp., from a representative of World Pictures in Chicago:

"With a steady rain all day, 'The Better 'Ole' opened at the Rose theatre Monday to the best Monday business the house has done in months. The combined receipts of two other houses in the same block owned by the same people and playing pictures of best known stars failed to equal 'Better 'Ole' business by one hundred dollars. One of our best known newspaper critics after looking at the picture summed it up by saying it is such great fun of strange fashion that it has a distinct appeal that is of lasting quality."

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS

EXHIBITORS and Producers have much more in common than merely pictures. They have their investments. You have your theatre—we have our plant, offices, studios, laboratory, scenarios and salary list. We're, both of us, institutions.

You take great pains to build a reputation. So do we. And when we sell you a new brand our name is at stake no less than yours. For which reason we think that you, as an institution, understand and are likely to co-operate with us, as another institution, in putting out a stable line of highest grade goods.

In the past eighteen months we have brought out two new brands—Jewel Productions and Universal Special Attractions. The first named have been unprecedented successes, every one. The second group has put the famous old name "Universal" back at the head of the list, where it ought to be.

We ask you to compare the Universal Special Attractions listed here, detail for detail, with any equal number of pictures from any other brand you choose. You'll see a great difference in our favor—and yours.

Special Service Section on

Priscilla Dean in "Amazing Wife"

IF you are going to show "The Amazing Wife" you want to take the fullest advantage of the title, but at the same time avoid adding any comment of your own that is suggestive of the wronged girl stuff, for there is nothing of the sort in the picture. Here is the case of a girl who does commit a fraud, but the sympathy of the audience will be with her from the start because the circumstances are such as to more or less justify her.

Here the appeal should be mainly in telling the people that this is a startling story, or at least indicating that, and the sex appeal, as such, should be entirely omitted. Tenseness, the romance and the unexpected turnings of the story are the things to which you should call your patrons' attention. Once you turn from this and get into an appeal to what is usually recognized as the sensational, you are going to weaken the power of the advertising to those who want to see unusual pictures.

Of course you will use striking illustrations in your advertising and here is a case where there should be a scene from the production, but be sure that it is one in which the figure of the star is brought out prominently and one that is suggestive of the dramatic qualities.

THESE are the main points of the story: Cicely Osborne consents to marry John Ashton, a laborer, who has made money by his brawn, but who hasn't risen above the lower level, simply because her mother is dying for lack of food and medicine. But this husband is repulsive to the girl, and even when he tries to kiss her at the marriage bureau she shows how she loathes him. Then after the ceremony they go to a cabaret for their wedding dinner and immediately the husband starts to flirting with a be-painted woman. The result is to arouse the jealousy of her male companion and a fight follows in which Ashton is killed and a waiter tips off Cicely to make her escape before the police arrive so that she will not be dragged into the affair.

MARY MAC LAREN IN "THE AMAZING WIFE"

Convenient for those unable to make own cuts

She goes home to find her mother dead. We are told these things in flashbacks for the picture opens with the girl seated by a lake in the park, determined to end it all. But at the moment she picks up a paper and sees the announcement that Lieut. John Ashton, the only son of a millionaire, has been killed with the American army in France. She sees the opportunity of ending all her troubles by posing as the widow of this John Ashton. Taking with her the newspaper and her marriage license she goes to the splendid home of the Ashtons and there she is readily received by the young officer's parents as his widow. To make things all the easier Claire Winston, who had been young Ashton's fiancee, becomes her friend and companion.

But there is one who fathoms the girl's secrets, Philip Ashton, a cousin who attempts to use her secret to gain his own ends.

THEN there comes the startling development when Lieut. Ashton turns up at his home. Though he has been badly wounded and is still suffering from his hurts there had been an error in reporting his death. His greeting with Claire shows the audience that she is the girl that he loves, so it can be imagined how he receives the statement of his mother that his wife is upstairs.

But in the time that she has posed as the son's widow Cicely has established herself as really a daughter in the affections of the mother and has nursed her through the shock that came with the news of the young officer's death. This is apparent to John and rather than destroy this feeling by denouncing her at the moment, he takes the girl in his arms. And then they proceed to have to carry out the play so as not to undeceive the mother and at the same time not to be husband and wife.

Their actions convince Philip that the girl is paying the price to John so that he will not expose her. The first clash between the two cousins comes with a sneer of Philip when John refers to the girl as his wife and there is almost an encounter but she begs John not to strike because Philip knows the secret.

FULLY determined to go away at the first moment, Cicely agrees to meet Philip at a road house in order to beg him not to reveal her secret, but there he grows offensive and demands that he pay him for his silence the same way that he believes she is paying John. In anger she leaves him, but later he repeats his threats until the jealousy of John (who is now coming to love the girl) is aroused and he goes to his cousin's apartments with the demand that his attentions cease.

But still Philip persists and he and Cicely chance to meet in the woods and there when she again spurns him he seeks to attack her. But the suspicions of John are now aroused and he follows the girl and comes upon them just in time and then the cousins fight, with the result that the soldier's wounds are reopened. He is carried home and believing that he is about to die demands that the ceremony of the church be performed to seal the civil ceremony, and there they are married. Of course, John recovers and they are very happy—the true story of the alleged first marriage is never known.

WHEN you start to lay out your advertising on this make up your mind to devote at least half of the space to the cut. If you are able to design your own displays, so much the better. You need then the name of the star and the title in the biggest type that your space will allow. You can afford to come along with the selling arguments in smaller type for it is pretty certain that there will be enough curiosity aroused to cause them to be read.

Here are a couple of them:

"She had a husband that she didn't want. But he was killed on the very night of her wedding. Then she was alone and there was nothing left for her but the lake. She had determined to leap in and end it all when she picked up a paper and found that a rich man of the same name as her mate had been killed in France. What would be easier than to pose as his secret bride? How was she to know that the news was all a mistake and that the young officer was going to show up at home in a few weeks? What do you suppose she did then?"

"Cecile married a man that she loathed that her mother might live. His kisses were repulsive to her, and there was only one of them. She fled from the brawl in which the bridegroom was killed to find her mother dead. She was alone, penniless and hungry and the deep waters appealed to her. Then there came a chance—to claim that she had married the son of a millionaire who had been killed in France. What a wonderful girl she must have been to so win the mother that when the man she claimed to be her husband came home alive that he was willing to accept her to save his mother pain. That was just the start of Cecile's problems. There was another man who sought to profit by her secret. He didn't—and no one ever knew that she had stolen a name. The reason why is the call for you to see 'The Amazing Wife.'"

WE would omit the "You" stuff with this picture. There is no occasion for asking what "you" would do under these conditions. It is sufficient to state the facts in an impersonal manner. The problem, if well outlined, brings itself sufficiently close to the person to make the answer something sought after. Now let's get a little stronger punch at the public:

"She was married three hours and her husband lay dead because he had tried to flirt with another woman. She loathed him, but vengeance was in another's hands. But she was alone and penniless. There was one thing—she thought to do—and the lake lay before her.

"Then she picked up a paper. Dead in France was a young officer of the same name as her husband. His parents were rich and they had a wonderful home. She had a marriage license bearing his name. Why shouldn't she go tell them that she was his secret bride and claim sanctuary there.

"She did and she proved a wonderful daughter to the old lady who thanked the saints that her dead boy had at least left behind such a solace. And when, as one out of the shadows, there came back to her from France the son, alive, but terribly wounded, with what delight she called for his bride.

"And he claimed her—why? He didn't know whether she was an adventuress. He even loved another. And his cousin was heaping infamy on this girl who claimed to be his bride. But he knew that there must be something in the heart of a girl who could win the love of that wonderful mother of his——. And——

"Like mother, like son."

NOW at first blush these lines will be considered too long by the average exhibitor. They know that they have the name of the star and the title for their appeal and they devote only a few lines to the sales talk. But here is a case where you want to get the full appeal over. Of course there is a strong element that wants to solve the mystery of an absorbing sory. There is another element that will be pulled in by the love element, but don't forget that there is a stronger appeal with every one of us when the mother element enters in. It is worth taking additional space to get matter like this before the public.

But if you insist on getting the punch into a few lines, here are some of them:

"She had a marriage license bearing the name of a young millionaire reported killed in France. And she was a young widow of a few hours herself—married to a man of the same name. What was the use of troubles when she could claim a fortune."

"Lieut. John Ashton, millionaire's son, was reported killed in France. She was a Mrs. John Ashton—a bride three hours before her husband had been killed—in a brawl. It was easy for her to claim to be the secret bride of the millionaire. But his death proved to be quite an exaggeration. Then the story really starts."

"John Ashton came back from France severely wounded. He had been reported dead and his parents were in mourning for him. But there was the light of victory in his eyes and he expected to claim his affianced for his bride. What was he to do when 'his wife' was presented to him. He didn't denounce her as an impostor. Of course there was a reason, but it would be unfair for us to tell you the reason why."

Special Appeal Should Be Made to the Women Here

YOUR OWN IDEAS

THESE Special Service Section are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that he has booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Wont you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture of any others.

YOU should take the fullest advantage of everything that Mary MacLaren means to the people of your section when you play this production. You can tell your people that the producers say that this is the best picture in which she had ever been seen and then call their attention to some of the best of the others that you have shown at your theatre.

Mary MacLaren was practically an unknown when she had a small part in "Where Are My Children?" but since then she has been discovered and some of her most recent successes have been "Shoes," "Bread," "Vanity Pool" and "Creaking Stairs." It is a peculiar thing that she owes a great part of her success to members of her own sex and if you print a house organ or use circular letters we would call particular attention to this, directing the letters to the woman of the household.

Try a form letter along these lines:

"Mary MacLaren is a favorite with everyone, but she is distinctly a woman's star—not particularly in her appeal, but because of her career. When she was playing a small part in "Where Are My Children?" she was discovered by Lois Weber, the first woman to score a hit as director of motion pictures. It was Miss Weber who developed her talents and brought her prominently before the motion picture world.

"Another great woman director—Ida May Park—then took charge and she has been responsible for the most recent success of Miss MacLaren. Miss Park shows her talents at the very best in her arrangement of "The Amazing Wife." It will thrill every man, but it really takes a woman to understand why Cecile posed as the wife of a man she believed killed on the battlefields of France, why she won the love of her mother-in-law and how she was able to make her dreams come true.

"We want your opinion—that of a woman—on this picture. Bring the men along, and if they don't enjoy every bit of it—well, they have no use for a woman."

Instead of an elaborate lobby display we would use very largely pictures of Miss MacLaren together with scenes from the production and then on the sides of the lobby and on the street we would have huge exclamation marks in black on white, with a circular face of the star forming the period at the bottom and then the title of picture appearing down the length of the exclamation. There should be no further explanation offered in the lobby.

Cut outs of Miss MacLaren can be made from the 24-sheet and others from one of the one sheets. These should be prominently displayed, preferably hanging from the ceiling, and there should be flower effects through the lobby, real ones if you can afford to use them. This suggests romance, and marriage. If they are not available, palms and other potted plants will add a dainty flavor. It is because that these indicate that there is something out of the ordinary in the picture and that they give class to the lobby that we would suggest their use, for with such a background anything of the cheapness of the exclamation point idea is taken away.

We would omit anything of the stunt order here because it will tend more to cheapen the appeal than to bring the sort of business that the attraction warrants going after.

"THE AMAZING WIFE" is a tense drama and therefore there should be a comedy balance to this bill if you run more than one picture. If you have a full bill there should be a soothing scenic with plenty of clever titles in it to follow the overture.

It struck us when we saw this picture for the first time that there was something about it that suggested the old time music. Miss MacLaren here has the role of a girl who is pure and clean in thought and action —for she plays a part so far removed from any of the frivolous of her sex that one is impressed by it, even though she does start the plot off by pretending to be the widow of a man she had never even seen to escape the hardships of life.

If you are going strong on the music we would suggest that you use the best of the old music. For instance, "Gems From Stephen Foster," consisting of Southern melodies or "Old Time Waltzes" would supply a splendid overture.

As a musical prelude to the picture itself we would use the rose garden effect with a girl seated singing "Then You'll Remember Me" or "Bonnie Sweet Bessie" or any of the old favorite love songs. A more modern note can be brought in with "Kiss Me" from "Mlle. Modiste."

In the musical score prepared for this picture "The Song of Songs" is suggested as the theme, and it is a good one, and therefore it is all the more appropriate to use the higher class of love music for solo and orchestral numbers.

Chicago Gets a Double "Scandal"

Stage Version of "Scandal" Gives Big Impetus to Select Re-issue of Screen Production

REPORTS from Chicago state that with the Messrs Shubert advertising Constance Talmadge in one of her old Select Pictures, "Scandal," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, in order to put over their own stage production at the Garrick, and Select's Chicago exchange working double time to take care of the re-issue bookings at the first-run houses, "Scandal" has literally taken that city by the ears.

"Scandal" was Constance Talmadge's first Select picture. It was written by Cosmo Hamilton. Several weeks ago the producing firm of Lee and J. J. Shubert placed "Scandal" in rehearsal for a stage production. The piece was taken to Chicago and opened at the Shuberts' Garrick theatre.

Immediately Select's Chicago Exchange got busy booking re-issues of the original screen version.

Lubliner & Trinz re-booked "Scandal" over their entire circuit, the Lakeside, Ellentee, Pantheon, Pershing, Oak Park, Vitagraph, Biograph, Paramount, Knickerbocker, Covent Garden, Michigan and West End. As soon as the Lubliner & Trinz management took account of the interest the combined advertising of the picture and stage play had awakened, they booked "Scandal" at the Lakeside for seven days, instead of the original three days.

This seven-day booking at the Lakeside established two records. It is the first time in the history of the Lakeside that any production has played for a solid week, and it is said to be the first time in the history of any Chicago theatre where a re-issue has been booked for an entire week.

In addition to the Lubliner & Trinz houses, Select's Exchange then booked the attraction for seven days at the Star theatre in the down-town district, thereby establishing another record in that it was the first time the Star had booked a re-issue for a seven days' run, and the second time that a re-issue had been booked for a solid week in that city.

Marion Davies, Select Star, Is Presented in "Getting Mary Married"

Close onto the Star contract and the Lubliner & Trinz bookings, came an order for play dates at each of the fourteen Ascher Brothers' theaters, including the Chateau, Terminal, Lane Court, Milford, Metropolitan, Kenwood, Oakland Square, Peerless, Cosmopolitan, Columbus, Adelphi, Calo, Frolic and Midway.

Each day public interest in "Scandal" is said to have grown greater. The Shuberts were using big space in the Chicago dailies to advertise their stage production at the Garrick, and all of the picture houses were going in for big advertising to get the benefit of the Shubert space.

It soon developed into a battle for space between the big New York producers of the spoken stage version, and the Chicago exhibitors of Select's original screen attraction.

Both sides were reported as doing a big business. People were said to be attending the stage version at the Garrick and the following night were going to one of the picture houses to see how Constance Talmadge played "Scandal" on the screen.

W. E. Atkinson Enjoys Luncheon by Proxy

ALL that W. E. Atkinson needs now is a finger-bowl, a serviette and a toothpick—the toothpick being, of course, distinctly American. The luncheon he has already enjoyed a la Christian Science.

Mr. Atkinson, who is the business manager of the Metro Pictures Corporation, received the other day in his regular stack of mail a copy of the menu distributed at a luncheon given at the Cafe Francais the 9th of January, in Melbourne, by the directors of Co-Operative Films of Australia.

The menu is a novelty in itself, minus the many tempting dishes set down within its cover, and Mr. Atkinson promises to preserve the folder carefully with his most treasured souvenirs. In the first place, it is uniquely patterned with an ornamental cover design headed "Complimentary Metro Luncheon," and in the neat little slots cut for the purpose of inserting the name of the individual guest is the name card of "W. E. Atkinson."

The directors of Co-Operative have certainly arranged a most pleasing program, including the toasts and music, and in glancing over the responsible officers' names we find Mr. O. R. Flecker, chairman; Alec Hellmrich, general manager; W. W. Gudgeon and G. F. Garden. Mr. Atkinson naturally feels that these gentlemen are to be congratulated on their taste in the selection of dishes fit for a King—or a President.

Opening the folder the guest beholds an array of mysterious concoctions of the cuisiniere, each named after a Metro star of one of their many triumphs of the screen. The whole is a worthy tribute to the merit of Metro and its productions.

Shows That Americans Look to Mexico

E. V. Richards, of the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans, has forwarded to New York an interesting document that proves that a great curiosity on the part of the American public concerning the real appearance and character of Mexico and its people remains to be satisfied. The Board of Directors of the New Orleans Association of Commerce has drawn up resolutions requesting motion picture producers of America to encourage the exploitation of the favorable side of Mexico, rather than the constant exploitation of Mexican bandid life and other unfavorable phases that are detrimental to the best interests of the two countries.

George D. Wright has supplied two more of his series of single-reel productions describing "Mexico To-day," which have been completed for distribution by the Educational Films Corporation of America. "A Day with Carranza" and "What Is a Mexican?" are the titles of these newest subjects.

In the last five years there have been very few American photographers in Mexico. With the exception of Mr. Wright's negatives, practically all the film descriptive of Mexican life that is now in this country was exposed before the military disturbance that called the boys to the border in 1913.

Says "Our Teddy" Draws Strong in South

"Our Teddy" is drawing heavily in the South, according to reports emanating from McClure Productions, which is distributing the Roosevelt picture through First National.

From Texas and Kentucky came reports that Colonel Roosevelt's exploits on the screen are attracting large audiences and intense enthusiasm.

At the Hippodrome, Dallas, Texas, and at the Princess, Bowling Green, Ky., it is declared that the picture broke all attendance records, drawing audiences from all classes of people, including the non-movie goers and the anti-Sunday opening crowd.

Pearl White is acknowledged adept in the art of character make-up. She appears thus in the Pathe serial, "The Lightning Raider"

World Announces Film from Riley Poem

World Pictures announces for early distribution a picturization of James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, "Little Orphant Annie," in which Thomas Santchi and Coline Moore are the stars. This photoplay was made by Selig and the negative purchased by the Pioneer Film Corporation. The World, appreciating the merits of the picture and the widespread publicity attached to it through Riley's immortal poem, purchased it from the Pioneer Film Corporation, who intended to put it out as a state right feature. The price paid for it by the World was such that it influenced the Pioneer Film Corporation to withdraw it from the state right market, but not until after they had sold the rights to the city and state of New York and northern New Jersey. If James Whitcomb Riley had written nothing else but "Little Orphant Annie" he would have gone down to posterity as one of America's greatest poets. There is hardly a school child in this country who is unacquainted with the story of the little orphan girl immortalized by the "Hoosier" poet, and this fact alone should give the picture an appeal that shows big results at the box-office.

Priest to Handle Blackton's "House Divided"

J. Stuart Blackton has appointed Robert W. Priest sales agent for his latest feature "A House Divided" from the book by Ruth Bouccicault. Sylvia Breamer, Herbert Rawlinson and Lawrence Grossmith are the principal players in the production.

The method of distribution has not been decided.

Foreign rights have already been disposed of, Bech Van Sichlen & Co. taking over the production for the entire world. L. C. Wheeler, until recently London representative for W. N. Selig, will be in charge of the sales end for the export house.

"Bill" Duncan Keeps Up Series of Thrills

WILLIAM DUNCAN in the prize Vitagraph serial thriller, "The Man of Might," in which he is supported by an all star cast including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, has been responsible in the past number of weeks for considerable goose-flesh on the backs of motion picture theatre audiences, but it seems that Duncan is never satisfied or is it that Albert E. Smith, the Vitagraph president, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, who write the Vitagraph serials, are the men to blame?

At any rate, word comes from the West Coast studios that despite the unending risk of life that Duncan has already registered, the later episodes of "The Man of Might," go beyond anything that he has so far attempted.

In the tenth episode, for example, Duncan puts in a double thriller by way of good measure. As he and the heroine are driving an automobile through a deep ravine, the villains, at the top of one of the cliffs, blow off a giant boulder which plunges down into the ravine, barely missing the automobile, and blocking Duncan's exit.

And then, when this thrill has been delivered, the spectators will be treated to a second feat of daring, when Duncan stands by and blows up the obstruction in order to free himself and his companions from the trap.

Duncan has had his entire company out on the Pacific Ocean, somewhere off the harbor of San Pedro, getting marine scenes for the final episodes of "The Man of Might," and while heavy seas have been running all week, wireless reports state that splendid progress has been made.

Universal Productions Big in South America

THAT Universal productions are enjoying wide distribution in South America, Europe and the Orient is clearly brought out in the announcement of the Universal's export department. Relating the success of Universal productions in foreign lands the export department reports that despite the signing of the armistice "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" is proving one of the greatest drawing cards ever provided exhibitors. In South America, Europe, in China, India, Straits Settlements, Philippine Islands and in Australia the Julian production is not only being rapidly booked by theatremen but is establishing new box office records with regularity. "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" began a third week's showing at the Gaumont Palace, Paris, March 16 and throughout France has booked like wildfire according to reports from the Paris agency. In Buenos Ayres, Argentina, and in Valparaiso, Chile, the Julian production recently played several weeks to extraordinary business. In Valparaiso when the film was shown a band of pro-Germans stormed the theatre and created such a disturbance that the police reserves were called to prevent a clash between the pro-Germans and pro-Allied civilians who were in attendance at the showing. The incident was given wide publicity and as a result exhibitors all over Chile were quick to book the film. In Australia and India the film has been enthusiastically received.

"The Heart of Humanity" has not been shown outside of North America as yet but it is expected that the Campoamor theatre at Havana, Cuba, considered the largest and most beautiful theatre in the West Indies, Central or South America, will open early in April with the big Jewel production as its initial attraction.

Considered Ince's Best Production

S-L Productions Declares "Virtuous Men" Is Great—Tells of Director's Achievement in Film Industry

RALPH INCE, who personally directed "Virtuous Men," has to his credit many of the most successful film attractions of the past few years. Ince is one of the real pioneers of the motion picture industry. He began his career with the original Vitagraph organization more than ten years ago. Prior to his entrance in the world of pictures, Ince was a well known actor of the legitimate drama. He will be remembered by millions of photoplay fans for his many characterizations during the early Vitagraph days. He is accredited with portraying the immortal character of Abraham Lincoln more realistically than any other artist of contemporanious times. Ince rapidly developed into a director of prominence while with the Vitagraph organization. During his long stay with that company he produced a long line of successful feature productions. Under his personal direction such successes as "The Wreck," "The Combat," "The Juggernaut," "From Headquarters" and other tremendous photoplay spectacles were made. He is responsible for the introduction in films of the present-day star, Anita Stewart, and personally produced many of her successes. He is one of the few motion picture directors whose achievements have been great enough to warrant the organization of a special company to present a series of productions bearing his name. Seeking the opportunity to enlarge the scope of his activities and put into effect many advanced ideas, Ince will produce a series of Ralph Ince Film Attractions. The first big screen entertainment bearing his name is "Virtuous Men." It stars E. K. Lincoln, contains a cast of celebrated stage and screen players, and is said to be the biggest film melodrama ever made. Speaking of the inaugural Ralph Ince Film Attraction, "Virtuous Men," Mr. Ince recently had the following to say relative to the picture which will have its initial presentation at the Fulton theatre on Sunday evening, April 6th:

Ralph Ince, Director

"I consider 'Virtuous Men,' every scene of which was made under my personal direction, the supreme achievement of my career. For many years I have had certain ideas relative to production of a real screen melodrama. Due to certain circumstances, I have been unable to put them into effect up to now. Surrounded with a perfectly equipped organization, I believe the first Ralph Ince Film Attraction to be the biggest thing I have ever done. It is a melodrama of the fast moving type with society atmosphere, wonderful settings and a series of spectacular effects which out-do anything of the kind I have ever attempted. I gave seven months of undivided attention to the personal direction of this production. I wish to stamp it with my personal assurance as being the biggest photoplay melodrama ever offered to the motion picture public.

"I believe in the production of 'Virtuous Men' I have incorporated every element necessary to photoplay melodrama of the most realistic type. The swiftness of the action, the tensity of the many dramatic situations and the spectacular scenes with which I have embellished the story throughout, form what is to my mind perfect screen entertainment."

"Virtuous Men" will be shown at the Fulton theatre on Sunday evening, April 6th. This date will mark the first of a series of special productions which Ralph Ince will personally direct for the S-L organization.

American Film Buys "Six-Feet-Four"

Jackson Gregory has sold the screen rights to "Six-Feet-Four" to the American Film Company, Inc. This story has been published serially in the All Story Weekly and had just appeared in book form.

Mr. Gregory has a long and brilliant record as newspaper man and story writer. He is the author of "Under Handicap," "The Outlaw," "The Short Cut," "Wolf Breed," "The Man from Painted Post" and numerous other well-known novels and photoplays.

William Russell, alias "Big Bill," will star in the production, which is said to be peculiarly well fitted to his splendid physique and animated screen style. Stephen Fox is preparing the scenario, and Henry King, Russell's special director, wil boss the production.

Fred Bolls Entertains Minnesota Prisoners

Through the courtesy of Fred Bolls, an exhibitor-member of United Picture Theatres operating the Majestic theatre, Stillwater, Minn., the inmates of the Minnesota State Penal Institution at Stillwater were entertained recently by a screening of "Adele" in which Kitty Gordon is starring for United.

The Mirror, the Institution's inmate-edited newspaper, devotes an editorial to the attraction and dwells on the beneficial enjoyment accruing to the audience from the presentation of "this wonderful picture," paying a tribute to its plots as being "different, unlike anything that has been presented in just the same light before," and eulogizing the direction, and the attractiveness of Miss Gordon.

Buys "Unpardonable Sin" for New York State

After securing all foreign rights to Harry Garson's ten reel production starring Blanche Sweet and under the personal direction of Marshall Neilan, Bobby North met his partner in New York after he had just returned from Florida.

His enthusiasm is said to have impressed Mr .Weber so much that they saw a few prominent theatre men around New York and organized another company to buy the rights to "The Unpardonable Sin" for New York state.

A New York opening at a principal theatre with $2.00 top admission prices prevailing is now declared to be an almost immediate possibility.

Producer Applies Suggestions From Patrons

AN announcement from the Brentwood Film Corporation states that the company had a very definite purpose in offering prizes for public opinions regarding the particular note of appeal in "The Turn in the Road" during the eight weeks' run of that picture in Los Angeles.

That purpose was to determine whether or not the very film-sophisticated public of Los Angeles wanted pictures that offered more than mere artistic entertainment, pictures in short which presented food for serious thought and which in their very humanness and the truth-to-life of their stories also presented common-sense suggestions of an uplifting character, applicable in the daily lives of every one of those who viewed them.

"The Brentwood people believed that the picture public did want such pictures," the statement continued, "and if the public wanted them, they as producers proposed to shape their future production policy accordingly. Some five hundred people who saw 'The Turn in the Road' sent in to the company their offerings for the contest.

"The opinions were of an unusually high quality and they found one great outstanding note of appreciation for a picture which, as many of them expressed it in so many words, 'touched our hearts and made us Think.'

"Firmly believing that the photoplay will develop to be the biggest power toward the improvement of the intellectual and moral standard of the human race, and realizing that its messages, teachings or suggestions toward that improvement will be effective exactly in proportion to the heart-touching and life-like art with which they are presented, the Brentwood corporation now feels itself to be publicly supported in its policy of concentrating production upon that type of story which has 'something to it.'"

Eugene Mullin Engaged by Universal

After recently resigning as scenario editor of the Vitagraph Company, Eugene Mullin signed a contract with Universal and left for the Pacific Coast Wednesday, March 26, to assume charge of the scenario department at the big producing center.

Mr. Mullin has been connected with Vitagraph for over eight years and is one of the best known men in the film industry. As Mr. Mullin has studied conditions within the industry from all angles, is said to be well acquainted with leading authors and a recognized authority on cinema values, Universal believes that in engaging him to supervise the preparation of future stories for its screen productions that it has obtained a man who will do much to assist in the carrying out of a recently adopted policy of giving Universal stars more suitable stories, and better vehicles.

Three Episodes of Serial Assembled

The three first episodes of the new serial which is being made by the Western Photoplays, Inc., for release on the Pathe program, have been assembled and titled and are now ready for release, announces A. Alperstein, treasurer and general manager of the organization.

The present title of the serial is "The Great Gamble," co-starring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison. It is being produced under the personal direction of Joseph A. Golden, widely known in the serial world.

"The Great Gamble" is said to be entirely different to the regular type of serial. The story is an original one by Mr. Golden, who is said to have made big strides from the beaten track.

Feminine Appeal Promised in Gordon Picture

United announces that Kitty Gordon's next feature, "Playthings of Passions," possesses a strong feminine appeal.

Among the items said to be worn by Miss Gordon in this production appear an ermine coat valued at $15,000, a fan of ostrich plumes valued at $5,000, a rope of pearls valued at $100,000, earrings valued at $20,000, and bird of paradise feathers valued at $1,000.

Miss Gordon's gowns and hats are said to be of her own design.

Hart Breaks Record in Los Angeles

William S. Hart in "Branding Broadway" broke the week's attendance record at the new California Theatre, Los Angeles, according to Harry Leonhardt, one of the owners, in just six days. This feat is considered the most remarkable box-office record in Los Angeles motion picture annals in view of the fact that "Bill" had to compete with the strongest drawing cards possible to book during the last three months.

Alma Rubens Completes Picture

Star Returns to Screen in "Diane of the Green Van" for Exhibitors Mutual

ROBERTSON-COLE announces the return to the screen of Alma Rubens in a new photoplay produced by her own company, Winsome Stars Corporation.

Her first starring vehicle under her own management. "Diane of the Green Van" is about ready to be put on the market by Exhibitors Mutual. This is the picture produced from the story by Leona Dalrymple, which met with such popular appeal that a Chicago publishing house awarded the author a $10,000 prize.

Every opportunity the photoplay art offers for high class productions was taken advantage of by Miss Rubens' company in producing "Diane of the Green Van." From a technical viewpoint, the picture is declared to be of the highest calibre.

When the print of the Rubens drama was received at the headquarters of the Robertson-Cole Company, it was shown for Miss Dalrymple, author of the story, who lives in New Jersey. She was immensely pleased with the faithfulness with which her story had been taken from the printed novel and reproduced on the screen.

In Miss Rubens, Miss Dalrymple asserted that the very character she had penned as her heroine appeared in real life. No other actress she could recall on the screen today would have filled the role of Diane Westfall as did Miss Rubens, in the opinion of the young author.

It is the policy of the Robertson-Cole Company to show each production before the executive forces of the Robertson-Cole and Exhibitors Mutual. Following each showing a frank discussion is held, and any meritorious changes suggested are adopted.

After seeing "Diane of the Green Van," Assistant General Manager Kirkpatrick of Exhibitors Mutual, in judging the production from a sales angle, declared it one of the best he had seen in months.

"This picture contains everything to recommend it as a splendid feature," declared Mr. Kirkpatrick. "There is more romance in it than is usually crowded into two pictures. The public likes romance. It likes the actress who loves romance, and in 'Diane of the Green Van' Miss Rubens is offered a role which could hardly be more romantic.

"Then there is conspiracy aplenty to lend drama to the production, and on top of that there is some of the most remarkable photography I have ever seen on the screen. The direction of Wallace Worsley is all that could be desired, and a little more."

Albert Ray and Elinor Fair Picture Released

T has been reported that exhibitors everywhere have manifested a great interest in the announcement made some time ago that William Fox was going to star Albert Ray, with Elinor Fair as his leading woman, in a series of the sweetest stories ever told.

"Married in Haste" is the title of the first one recently completed and now released at all Fox exchanges.

According to an announcement by the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation, "Married in Haste" fully lives up to the plans William Fox has made for this group of pictures. It is described as a clean, lively, wholesome comedy, breathing the joyousness and love of life of youthful America, and fitting in admirably with the season of spring, romance and general happiness.

Mr. Ray plays the role of Sam Morgan, a youthful millionaire, whose spendthrift habits and happy-go-lucky outlook on life have been a constant source of worry to the aged trustee who has charge of his fortune. Miss Fair is seen as Constance Winwood, and the comedy opens with the marriage of Morgan and Miss Winwood.

Indignant because the careless bridegroom has forgotten the wedding ring, the young bride persuades the old trustee to shut off her husband's income, and the couple start their honeymoon with $10.30.

The events that occur on their trip and money, form excruciatingly funny comedy, the announcement states.

The Favorite of Millions

In her winning personality, her charm of beauty, her characteristic and sympathetic acting, her interpretations stand as unusual ornaments to the motion picture screen.

ALMA RUBENS

She will appear in eight new and decidedly unusual photoplays.

Her wide popularity is based upon her exceptional ability to bring into her work subtle charm, enticing beauty, deep sympathy, a spirit of romance, intense drama, a ripple of humor and a sweetness of person that is her's alone.

"Diane of the Green Van"

THIS is a story that depends largely on the intricacies of the plot and if you are booking this you should arrange your exploitation along the mystery lines and at the same time give prominence to the star, Alma Rubens.

This story involves princes and an imaginary kingdom, but we would be mighty careful the way we phrased the exploitation touching that because you are liable to leave the impression that this is a costume picture, when as a matter of fact, every scene of it is laid in America and the time is today.

Romance and adventure are both strong elements of this picture while the title itself gives a suggestion of the mystery idea. Therefore the title should be prominently played, second only to the name of the star and then you should tell just enough about the story to arouse the curiosity. Give a considerable share of your newspaper display over to a picture of Miss Rubens, preferably one of those showing her in riding habit or seated in the door of the green van.

DIANE WESTFALL is the heiress to the Westfall millions, yet she has a young girl's craving for adventure. She tired of her home and the unwelcome attentions of Carl, a drunken cousin, and decides to go out into the world for herself, a green van elegently fitted up being her vehicle and her own companion a man servant. She ignores the pleadings of her aunt and makes the start into adventure and romance with keen anticipation.

But the one idea of Carl in his attentions to the girl is to get possession of the money and scarcely has she left when he discovers a paper hidden in a candlestick that he accidentally breaks, that appears to show that she is the heiress to the throne of Houdania and not to the Westfall fortune. And at the moment that he makes this discovery there are in this country the Prince and a Baron of Houdania, each on different missions, but both of them on the trail of Diane whom they, too, feel sure, is the heiress to the throne. The Prince is carrying out his own plans but the Baron enlists the services of his friend, Philip, a young American, to follow Diane and get all the information possible about her.

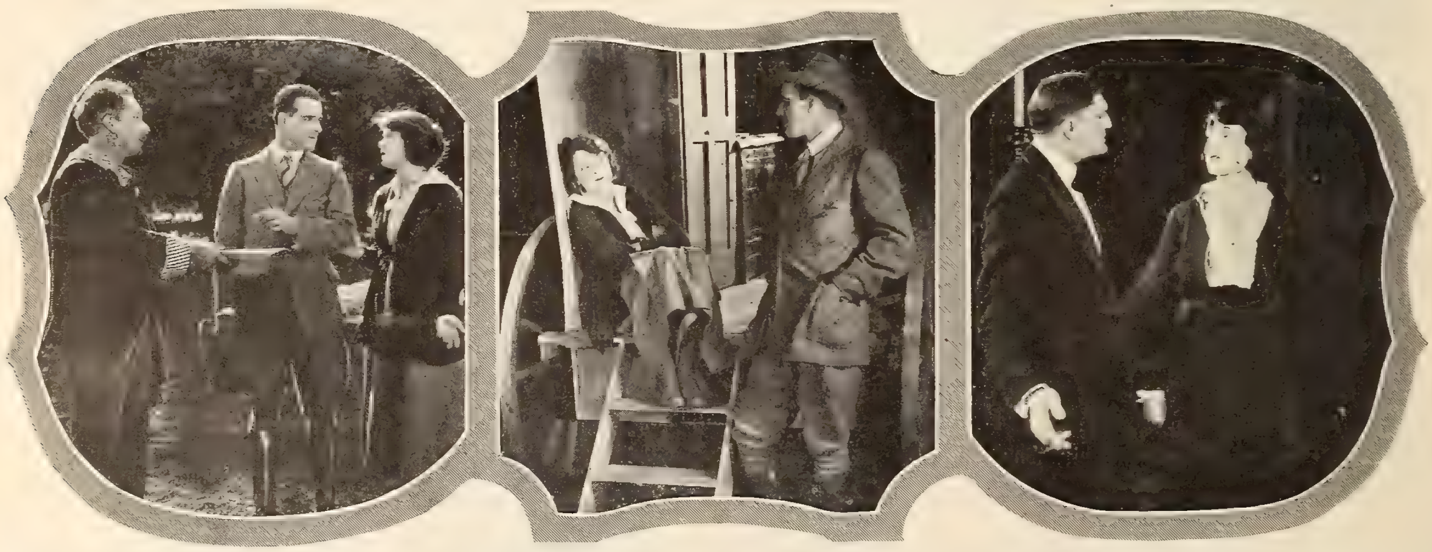
With these three different sets of men on her trail there is a series of mysterious situations that keep the spectator guessing, for the Baron and the Prince are not clearly disassociated until the end of the picture and the part that Philip is playing is not clear. It is for that reason that we would hesitate to publish the full story of the picture in the news columns, for it will spoil some of the patrons' interest.

SHORTLY after Diane has made her first stop for the night in her green van she is startled by a shot, which is fired by the Prince and she is being followed by Carl. It is then that Philip comes into the story and instead of working against her he promptly falls in love with her and assumes the role of her guardian angel, though the girl herself is unaware of the fact.

Foiled in his efforts to kill the girl so that he himself may take the throne of Houdania the Prince determines that the only way to achieve his ends is to marry her. These adventures continue, Philip becoming all the more smitten and finally telling her of the true character of the Houdanian Prince. But the mystery of the whole thing is that Diane herself doesn't know whether it is true that she is really heiress to the Houdanian throne—though she much prefers to remain in America as the heiress to the Westfall millions.

Her wanderings in the green van take her to Florida, where she meets in the Everglades, the daughter of Mic-co a mysterious character who has spent thirty years of his life with the Seminoles and who is regarded as a seer of things. There are further complications when at a ball at the winter resort the Indian girl and Diane change costumes so as to confuse the Houdanians. But in the end the mysterious old man reveals himself as the real heir to the throne of the little country, that the girl is his daughter and that he has come away to escape the position.

Then it is revealed that the Prince has come here to kill the heiress, that the Baron is seeking her in good faith, to give her the position that belongs to her—and, of course, that Carl is after the money. The only thing that Philip seeks is Diane herself and he wins her in the end after a charming love scene.



Diane is certainly pursued by the men in this picture. At the left there is the Emissary from Houdania, and in the center the green van, the girl and the man who has fallen in love with her, and at the right she is shown in a scene with the cousin, who seeks her fortune

At left Diane goes for advice to the strange man who has lived for years among the Seminoles of Florida; in the center there is a scene at the dance at one of the big Florida hotels, and at the right, Diane and the "Indian girl"—who is the real princess

How to Get the Most Business From Star Appeal

THERE is the spirit of adventure in everyone and even the most timid of us like to imagine what we would do if we started out all alone in the world to experience the thrills that come along. And when you get away from the spirit of violence, you are interesting the women as well as the men. It is for that reason that we would build the selling talks on "Diane of the Green Van" along these lines.

If you are making your own cuts let us use in the big Sunday announcement the picture that shows Diane seated on the steps of the green van and then a selling argument along these lines:

"Diane has oodles of money and she could have bought most anything that her heart desired. But she was weary of society and its people and she wanted real adventure. So she turned lone gypsy and in her green van started out in the world to seek new thrills. And she found them. for there was a mysterious foreigner who wanted her life, there was another who wanted her as a queen for her country, a third man who sought her fortune, and a fourth who—but that would be telling. The best part of it is that you are just as mystified as Diane until the whole story is solved for you."

Or this one:

"Most girls who have millions would hire a private car or buy a yacht and take their friends along with them to enjoy their travels. But Diane was eighteen and she was tired of society. She wanted to see what the world looked like and to get its thrills. So she fitted herself up a green van and with no one to accompany her but a servant she started off toward Florida. But adventure was on her trail, and romance, too, and you'll have many a thrill with her and delight in the perfect ending."

HERE is another one that suggests even more of action and mystery:

"This girl with the beautiful eyes sought only happiness alone in the world, and she bought herself a green van and started out on the trail of adventure. But she didn't know that she was followed by four men:

"One sought her fortune.

"Another her life.

"The third would claim her as the heiress to a throne.

"And the fourth wanted—and wait until you see what he got.

"If you have dreamed of romance you'll find your dreams come true here."

This reproduction of part of the twenty-four-sheet suggests cut-outs for the lobby to feature the star's personality

And another:

"'I am tired of the city and the lights, I want to hear the voice of the open country.' And so Diane Westfall forgot all about her own millions, hired herself a green van and a couple of horses and started out. She found that there were a lot of things happening in the 'open country' that she has never even dreamed of. Mystery stood before her on every hand; danger waited to trap her, peril was all about—but there reached out of the wilderness something that drove them all away. It's good to thrill when you can be happy at the end."

THEN here are some shorter ones that still keep the story in suspense:

"If you were a beautiful girl of eighteen which would you rather be: The queen of an honest to goodness country or the possessor of several millions of good American money? These two things were in the balance with Diane Westfall and the adventures that she has before a still bigger decision confronted her will keep you on the edge of your seat."

"A beautiful girl traveling all alone in a green van—that suggests adventure, doesn't it. Then there was a man on her trail that wanted her money and another who insisted that she was a real queen. How in the world could she be saved? Well, there are some men in the world who wanted nothing but—and you'll be just as pleased as Diane was at the end of this photoplay."

"Heiress to millions she turned a lone gypsy and all sorts of adventures came to her in her green van. If you like to be mystified and delighted at the same time and to find everything 'just lovely' at the end, you cannot afford to miss this one."

BE sure to make it plain in all your selling talks that everything comes out all right in the end—that it is a happy picture. You can give the public just as much mystery as you like provided the right things happen, and we wouldn't hesitate to indicate in every advertisement that this is one of that sort.

If you are using considerable space in your newspaper advertising, it would be well to mention the names of some of the supporting cast. Nigel Barrie is the leading man while Lamar Johnston, Wedgewood Nowell and Harry Van Meter have prominent roles.

Suggestions are made elsewhere in these pages for devoting the greater part of the lobby display to pictures of the star. Adventure Spirit Should Be Always Kept Dominant

STAR appeal is to a considerable extent what you make it. It does not consist in merely putting the name in big letters in front of your theatre and in your advertising, but in bringing out the appeal of the personality of the player. Where you have a woman of beauty this is made all the easier for you.

This is the first feature in which Miss Rubens has been starred since making her new connections, and if you intend to show this series of features we would advise you to start in right now to connect her name right up with your theatre. This is made all the easier and all the more effective because you have a beautiful woman with whom to deal. Don't figure simply on this one attraction, but on the others that you expect to play.

While she is a comparatively new star she is well known to photoplay followers because of her appearance with Douglas Fairbanks and many of the former Triangle male stars. Later she was starred by that company, but now she has an organization of her own and is to be seen in a series of offerings that, we are told, will bring out all of her talents. In booking pictures, you have to more or less get over the appeal of the player for your own patrons, and here is a chance to start.

MISS RUBENS is a California girl and she started in with pictures with the Triangle company. At first she played smaller parts and then she was seen as leading woman with Fairbanks in "Reggie Mixes In" and "The Half Breed." She also played with Wm. S. Hart and other of the prominent stars, and there her work attracted so much attention from the critics that she was herself featured in a number of offerings by Triangle, including "The Passion Flower" and "The Gown of Destiny." Success of these offerings led to the formation of her present producing company.

Well in advance of the showing of this first of her special releases we would advise printing a picture of her on the cover of your program, with the lines:

"The girl with the wonderful eyes."

Then follow this up by telling something about her. There is a story in the press sheet that will be suitable for this use or for the newspapers.

Then come along with a letter something like this:

"We get a lot of letters from girls wondering how they can get a start in motion pictures. Alma Rubens got hers by going around to the Triangle studios out in Los Angeles and looking for small parts. She got them and soon she was in demand of the stars who wanted mighty good looking leading women. Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart are two of them who drafted her to add beauty to their productions.

"Shortly after that she began to be featured and now she is starring in real productions. We have heard a lot of you talk about how wonderful she is on the screen and how much better you have thought her than this or that star. Now you have a chance to see her and decide whether your judgment has been right. At least we have had so much confidence in Miss Rubens and have been so charmed by her beauty that we have signed for her pictures.

"Won't you tell us how you like her? We feel confident of your answer."

ESPECIALLY if your ticket booth is in the center of your lobby convert this into a green van such as is shown in the stills and have the tickets sold through a window in the side. Get a quantity of real Florida moss and hang it in masses from the ceiling, and if you cannot get this use imitation stuff together with palm trees and other Florida suggestions.

With this as the background we would distinctly make it an Alma Rubens lobby. On the first page we have reproduced the right hand third of the 24-sheet. This gives you a splendid cut out of the head of the star. One of the three sheets will give you a cut out of the girl and her sweetheart, and in the six sheet you can get another of her as she appears in riding costume. One of the one sheets gives an almost full length figure of her. We would advise that these be mounted on heavy cardboard and that they be used with the background of the Florida moss. If you are not able to convert your ticket booth into the van as we have suggested there is another three sheet that will give you a picture of the girl seated on the rear of this van.

In addition to this the stills from the picture should be featured. These are attractive and the eight 11 by 14 pictures and the two 22 by 28 will attract attention. If you have a collection of Alma Rubens' photographs there should be a special display on these. If you haven't, start saving the stills from this picture and all the others that come to hand so that you will be able to get the fullest amount of attention to the other attractions in which she appears.

There isn't the slightest doubt that the pulling power of a star rests to a considerable extent in the confidence that you show in her by your exploitation. We believe that a straight Alma Rubens appeal will get a lot of people into your house.

William Desmond Starts "Whitewashed Walls"

The Jesse D. Hampton production starring William Desmond, and to follow "The Prodigal Liar," is entitled "Whitewashed Walls."

It is a photoplay adaptation by George Elwood Jenks of a magazine story by James and Ethel Dorrance and is really a burlesque on life in a Latin-American country.

It has to do with an American globe trotting sculptor who obtains work in this funny little republic and who because of an overzealous Fourth of July celebration, gets in wrong with the powers that be.

"Tempest and Sunshine," Print by Rothacker

In view of the unusual campaign carried on to establish the quality trade-mark of Rothacker, J. Frank Hatch considers it of interest to state rights men and exhibitors to know that the laboratory work on his feature, "Tempest and Sunshine," is a product of the Chicago laboratories. Watterson Rothacker has definite quality standards for the acceptance of work, as evidenced by his handling only of such subjects as the First National releases, and the assurance is thus carried of clear prints on "Tempest and Sunshine."

L-Ko Manager Coming to New York City

Universal announces that Louis Jacobs, general manager of the L-Ko Komedy Ko at Hollywood, Cal., will arrive in New York shortly following a visit to various large cities of the West and Middle West for the purpose of learning what the public likes best in motion picture comedies.

Mr. Jacobs will spend some time in the East before returning to California, Julius Stern, president of the L-Ko Company, who has been in California since the first of the year will remain at the studios until Mr. Jacobs' return.

Johnsons Bound for South Seas

Representatives of Trade Gather at Luncheon to Bid Exploring Filmsters Farewell

CLOSE to a hundred representatives of the picture industry were gathered at a luncheon in the College Room of the Hotel Astor last Monday to bid farewell and "good luck" to Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson as they started on their second trip to the South Sea Isles in search of out of the ordinary screen material.

Harry Handcuff Houdini presided as toastmaster at the festivities, while the speakers included Chic Sales, Alex Beyfuss, John W. Blackwood, and Treasurer Clark of the Exhibitors-Mutual. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson responded gracefully to the bouquets that just showered at them.

A representative of the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, cheered up the affair with the news that warfare on the cannibal isle that is the Johnsons' destination had just made necessary the intervention of a gunboat and the killing off of some hundreds of the dusky skinned inhabitants. The cheer was found in the fact that with a few hundred in the happy hunting ground the chances of the Johnsons to return alive were increased proportionately.

In outlining his plans for the next subjects to follow the present successful releases, Mr. Johnson declared that one of his chief desires was to secure a picture of Chief Nagapate looking at himself in motion pictures. He promised not to let the chief return to this country in the hopes of securing a regular job in Hollywood.

In view of the unusual success of the Johnson subjects a bit of ironical humor was injected into the affair by the film man description of the rejections his ideas had first been given by motion picture men. "The fans don't want that sort of stuff," they had told him.

In closing Mr. Johnson paid a sincere tribute to the encouragements and aid he had received from Alex Beyfuss, of the Robertson-Cole organization.

Several Appointments Announced by United

WILLIAM T. BUTLER has been added to the staff of special representatives of United by J. A. Berst. Mr. Butler's initial work will be in the New England territory with which he is especially familiar since his entry into the film business some years ago as salesman for the Vitagraph Boston office.

In this capacity and also as a Vitagraph representative in southern Illinois, Mr. Butler is said to have made an enviable record. The new appointee will not be permanently assigned to any territory, but will be sent from time to time to points in the United Circuit as special need may arise.

Ben Abrahams has been engaged as a United salesman in the St. Louis territory. Mr. Abrahams who has a large exhibitor acquaintance in that country, spent a week in the New York office before leaving for his new post.

M. E. Maxwell, of the United Minneapolis office, has been called to New York as assistant to Charles Johnson, United New York manager. Mr. Maxwells promotion to headquarters is a recognition of able work in the Minneapolis territory.

E. J. O'Donnell, Central Division manager, is now operating in the Dallas Exchange territory, and will devote special attention to the Texas, Southern Arkansas and Oklahoma territory, in connection with the membership drive now in full swing by United.

Lester D. Wolfe has been appointed by President Berst as manager of the United Buffalo office. Mr. Wolfe was for several years Buffalo manager of General Film Company Exchange. Homer Howard, formerly United manager in that city, has been appointed to special work in the Buffalo territory for the United drive.

Conrad Nagel Male Lead With Alice Brady

SELECT Pictures announces that in Alice Brady's forthcoming production of "Redhead," the star will be supported by Conrad Nagel. He is now the leading man in her stage production, "Forever After," now in its twenty-seventh week on Broadway.

Miss Brady and Mr. Nagel, owing to their close association in Miss Brady's stage production, are thoroughly familiar with each other's style of acting, and it is for this reason that Miss Brady selected Mr. Nagel to support her in her forthcoming screen attraction. Mr. Nagel is said to be one of America's most accomplished young leading men, and according to reports from the studio, he is equally capable as a screen actor.

"Redhead" is a story by Albert Payson Dowst, which appeared in a recent number of one of the popular magazines. It was adapted for the screen by Charles Maigne, who is also directing the production, thus making the fifth Alice Brady production for which Mr. Maigne has written the scenario as well as directed.

The story of "Redhead" is about a dance hall entertainer who succeeds in getting one of the wealthy patrons to marry her at a time when he is under the influence of liquor. On the "morning after" both realize what a mistake they have made. Matt, the husband, threatens to divorce his wife, but Dazie proceeds to get him "illuminated" again, and then takes him to her apartment to sober up. Matt's uncle hears of his escapade and stops his allowance, so with nothing to gain by leaving his wife, Matt decides to go to work, something he has never done before in his life.

There are said to be a number of thrilling moments in the picture, and an unusually new and different conclusion. Charles Stevenson also has an important part in the picture, and the other members of the cast are Robert Schable, Charles Eldridge and May Brettone.

Arrow Sells Some More Territorial Rights

Arrow Film Corporation, besides selling to the Variety Pictures Corporation, two pictures, have sold to Silee Film Exchange of Chicago the 6-act picture "The Hearts of Men" starring Mlle. Valkyrien, and have also sold the serial "The Demon's Shadow" to Montreal buyers for all Canada.

The Arrow has taken on 6 pictures in the past five weeks and are enlarging their sales force and to take care of the added business have engaged new offices with projection suite which they will occupy after May 1st. The company also contemplate the opening of exchanges at three points in the U. S. where there is a need for Independent exchanges.

The Fords for April

Goldwyn announces that the four subjects of the Ford Educational Weekly for April entertainingly mix the lighter phases of life with the more serious picturizations.

The-one-reel-a-week releases are as follows: April 6, "Cut It Out," a story of plate glass-making; April 13, "Northern Sports Under Southern Skies," polo, hydroplaning at the Florida resorts; April 20, "Good Roads," a camera drama of roadmaking; April 27, "A Visit to New Orleans."

Market Street, Philadelphia, a Simplex Street

Lewis Swaab, Simplex distributer in Philadelphia, announces the installation of Simplex machines in the Princess theatre on Market Street.

With this installation completed, Market Street has now become Simplex-ized, since up to this time the Princess was the only house still using other than Simplex machines.

"Crimson Gardenia" Follows "The Brand"

"The Crimson Gardenia" will be the next Rex Beach drama following that author's "The Brand." "The Crimson Gardenia" holds every promise of equalling the impression made by the drama of the Yukon, and at the same time revealing another phase of the author's storytelling genius. As a novel it has steadily increased in popularity since its publication three years ago, and to-day still holds its place among the best sellers.

Work on the production is progressing at the Goldwyn Studios in Culver City under the direction of Mr. Beach and Reginald Barker, who contributed his directorial skill in adding to the box-office magnetism of "The Brand."

Guinan Story Starts

Production work of the two-reel western dramas for the Frohman Amusement Company and starring Texas Guinan, was started last week at a studio in Hollywood where activities will continue until work of remodeling the old Metro studio, recently leased by William L. Sherrill, is completed. The first story to be filmed is titled "South of the Santa Fe," and Cliff Smith, the director, and Jack Sherrill, who is to manage the business affairs of the company, have selected George Chesebro and Jack Richardson as principal supporting players together with a troop of twenty-five cowboys and girls.

Realism in "Checkers"

Director Richard Stanton, who is producing "Checkers," the famous racing play, for William Fox as a big special attraction, is said to be a stickler for realism to be injected in his pictures.

It is reported that Ellen Cassity, who plays one of the leading roles in the production, was painfully injured by a broken goblet in the ballroom scene last week.

Nazimova Wears Expensive Costumes in Picture

In her production of "The Red Lantern," to be distributed by Metro. Nazimova is said to wear robes of regal splendor.

Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karge, who present the Russian star in the production now being cut and assembled at the Metro studio in Hollywood, declare that more than $50,000 have been spent in costumes for this production which they state is highly elaborate.

For Mahlee, the half-chinese, half-English girl played by Nazimova, bears a not remote resemblance to France's Joan of Arc. True, she leads a hopeless cause, that of the Boxers against the Europeans in China.

And her heart is torn between the love she bears for an Englishman and the ancient traditions of the yellow race.

Territorial Sales Corp. Gets Under Way

The Territorial Sales Corporation, with offices at 1600 Broadway, got under way last week with the shipment of prints on the first three Jester comedies to eighteen film centers where they will be shown to prospective buyers before allotting franchises.

"In the Wild West," "Peace and Riot" and "The Tenderfoot" are the initial trio.

It is also stated that Territorial Sales has completed a deal for the handling on the state rights basis of one of the biggest feature productions produced in recent months. Other subjects will follow.

Current Nesbit Picture, "Thou Shalt Not"

Evelyn Nesbit's current picture under the William Fox Standard group, is "Thou Shalt Not," and the star portrays a country girl, who is led astray by an unscrupulous lover.

The picture was directed by Charles J. Brabin, and in it Miss Nesbit is declared to have one of the strongest roles which she has enacted, and ably supported by a cast which includes Ned Burton, Florida Kingsley, Gladden James, Crawford Kent and Eddie Lawrence.

Many of the scenes of "Thou Shalt Not" are laid in a small New England village.

"Ginger" Coming in May

A five-reel feature entitled "Ginger" is announced by World Pictures as due for release in the month of May.

Gareth Hughes, Violet Palmer and Paul Everton are the stars, and it is described as a story of love and adventure. Raymond Hackett appears in support, and it is announced that a very capable cast interprets all the roles. Burton George directed the picture, as well as being responsible for the story. Raymond Schrock prepared the continuity.

The three stars are all said to have enjoyed a very successful stage career.

Making Memphis a "Week" Picture Town

First National Exhibitors Circuit has called attention to an accomplishment credited to one of its releases, "Virtuous Wives," starring Anita Stewart.

This motion picture, it is cited, has been the cause of longer runs in the Tennessee city, which formerly considered four days a long time to exhibit a film on consecutive days.

No doubt this is the first instance on record where an exhibitor has been forced to re-book a picture as a hold-over on threat of having his lobby wrecked by angry fans who had stood in line outside the theatre waiting to get in.

"VIRTUOUS WIVES" DID THE WORK

THE accompanying story is a tale of how the populace of the great Tennessee city demanded to see a motion picture after the regular-booked run had expired, and how Exhibitor McElravy righted himself with the fans after keeping them standing in line until after the doors had closed.

As a result, Anita Stewart, First National Exhibitors and the Majestic theatre have won an everlasting place in the memory of Memphis picture-goers.

This has been cited by First National as an argument for longer runs.

Can You Blame Memphis

For going wild over the wonderful combination that has been responsible for the remarkable bombardment at Majestic No 2 this week?

We refer, of course, to

Anita Stewart

AND

"Virtuous Wives"

And how have Memphis amusement-goers been rewarded?

Seeing ANITA STEWART "come back" after a year's absence more charming and fascinating than ever.

Enjoying the "cut-ups" of "Virtuous Wives."

Seeing "male crocodiles" in action—and the other creatures of New York society so entertainingly visualized from OWEN JOHNSON'S 2,000,000 edition novel.

It has been a most enjoyable week and when Miss Stewart and the "Virtuous Wives" say farewell Thursday Night we're going to tell Miss Stewart that she has captivated Memphis. You bet we will!

MAJESTIC NO. 2 OPPOSITE HOTEL GAYOSO

Today, Wed., Thurs. Admission 25c

COMING FRIDAY

"THE LOVE AUCTION"
with VIRGINIA PEARSON

THEATRE patrons in Memphis, Tenn., recently took the management of the Majestic theatre there away from C. A. McElravy, and gave other local managers a severe jolt in a public demonstration of their attitude toward motion pictures.

Until this happened Memphis was known as a four day town. Now it has given evidence that when it is offered something it wants seven days is not sufficient to exhaust its possibilities for profit.

It was no prearranged demonstration of mob anger that was tendered McElravy by a struggling, pushing crowd of several thousand men and women who literally stormed the lobby and street in front of the Majestic. The trouble started after they had waited impatiently for a full two hours for admission to the house the last night of a five day run on a special. Those at the front of the long lines quickly filled the house to capacity for what had been advertised as the last show. The doors were closed and, so far as the management was concerned at that moment, the next activity was to complete plans for the new program to start the following day.

But the crowds had gone beyond the ordinary limits of patience in the displeasure they felt over their inability to get into the theatre. Several men in the lobby began to make excited speeches. The vein of their remarks was decidedly bitter toward McElravy.

"Why didn't he make an announcement, two hours ago, that he couldn't get us all in? Why has he let us stand here like a lot of boobs?"

Some one else shouted:

"What does he think we are? It's a damned shame the way we've been treated. Why don't they build theatres big enough to take care of people. We've stood in line nearly two hours. Now we can go home and thank the Majestic for a rotten evening."

"Open those doors, we'll get in," yelled someone out on the sidewalk. "Break them down if you can't open them."

"Get the manager out here or we'll wreck the lobby," roared the man who had just reached the box office window, money in hand to buy tickets, when the curtain was pulled down. The crowd caught his spirit and in an instant half a dozen lobby frames had been overturned and trampled. "Smash the lights," he cried, suiting the action to the word by waving his cane overhead. At this moment McElravy appeared.

"We want to see this show," called a dozen voices. "You've kept us standing here all evening. There are enough of us here to make trouble and we're ready to do it. You can't get away with this."

McElravy is a showman with lots of experience in judging the public mind. He didn't need but a moment to see that the crowd was in a temper. The damage, if any was attempted beyond what had been done, would be completed before police aid could arrive. There was no mistaking the sincerity of the crowds. They were remaining for a purpose. Either they would see the show or they would vent their anger in violence.

"Just a moment, please," McElravy shouted at the top of his voice. "Keep quiet just a moment. I can't let any more of you in tonight, but I am going to hold the show over for two days. That'll give you all a chance to see it. Get back in line and buy your tickets for tomorrow or the next day. I promise every one of you that you'll get in, and have seats. I'll mark every ticket that is sold here now and give it preference over any that are sold tomorrow or the next day.

"Get back in line, take it easy and don't crowd. You'll all see the show. I'm holding it for two days more.. I"——. He got no further. The crowd was busy buying tickets. But despite this promise of McElravy's many of them went away grumbling, tickets in hand.

"My God," gasped McElravy, once more back in his office. "Get the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville on the phone for me, quick. Quick! Do you hear me? I want to talk to Lee Goldberg, the manager. If he isn't there find out where he is. Oh boy, I'm a cooked goose now unless Goldberg comes through. Wowee, hurry that call. Tell Long Distance to charge it double, BUT GET HIM QUICK."

"What's the trouble?" asked his assistant.

"Oh, nothing. I've just promised about twenty thousand yelling mad men and women that I'd hold this picture for two days more to give them a chance to see it. They're still buying tickets outside for tomorrow and the next day. AND I DON'T KNOW THAT I CAN HOLD THE PRINT. IT'S PROBABLY BOOKED SOMEWHERE ELSE. If I don't hold it I am going to be mobbed when they come back tomorrow to see the show. If I hold it despite another booking for it, I'll lose my franchise. Oh, boy, hurry that call."

The telephone bell rang. McElravy had the receiver to his ear in a flash.

"Hello, hello, Goldberg? Thank the Lord. This is McElravy, Majestic, Memphis. Yes. Say, I've got to hold this print another two days.

"What? Yes, yes, I know I told you that 'Virtuous Wives' wouldn't stand more than four days here. Yes, dammit, I know you convinced me that it would go

Phillips Film Breaks "U" Record

Universal Declares "The Heart of Humanity" Has Surpassed Kaiser Picture in Bookings—Premiere in December

A report compiled by the exchanges department of the Universal showing the business recorded on "The Heart of Humanity," Allen Holubar's master drama featuring Dorothy Phillips brings out the fact that the big production has eclipsed the sensational booking record established by "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" during the first three months of its presentation throughout the country.

"The Heart of Humanity" was given its premiere at the Broadway theatre, New York on December 22 and within ninety days has been booked into more theatres than the sensation, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," during a period of similar length. Not only has "The Heart of Humanity" been booked into more theatres than "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," but to date it has recorded even greater box office success than the Julian production, which, it must be taken into consideration, was released at a time when the American public was craving for just such a sensational exposure of the kaiser's life as the Julian production was.

The Holubar production has been shown in nearly every large city of the country.

The week ending March 22 marked the close of the sixth week of "The Heart of Humanity's" showing at the Shubert theatre, Minneapolis, and of several other extended runs in various cities of the Middle West. It also closed the biggest week for bookings of a Jewel production in Universal's history. March 23 and 24 marked the start of indefinite runs of the big feature in 17 of the principal cities of the Mississippi Valley and of several score of runs throughout the Southern States and along the Pacific and Atlantic Coasts. In Chicago and New York "The Heart of Humanity" is playing in neighborhood houses and in the Northwest territory where the film is being booked as a road show bookings that will keep the various companies en tour until July have been recorded.

Eugene Mullin, scenario editor who has joined the Universal forces

The appeal of "The Heart of Humanity" to film followers in various sections of the country is well brought out by the statements of exhibitors in four corners of the country. Manager Franklin of Sheas' Hippodrome at Buffalo, N. Y., is responsible for the statement that "The Heart of Humanity" proved one of the greatest box office attractions ever presented at his theatre. At the Tudor theatre at Atlanta the showing of the film was extended two weeks. At the Liberty theatre, Walla Walla, Wash., the film proved such a box office magnet that Manager Crews sent the following wire to Carl Laemmle: "Heart of Humanity opened here last night biggest business in history of house. Beat 'Hearts of World' opening over hundred dollars. Is tremendous success and talk of the town."

Charles Pathe Expected in New York April 15

CHARLES PATHE, head of the organization whose activities circle the earth and which has afforded a broad and efficient service to the allied nations during the war, is expected to arrive in America about April 15. Already the service he has rendered to the French government has earned him the distinction of the Legion of Honor; and now that the war is over he is turning his attention to the vast problem of peace and the large opportunities which are promised with the great resumption.

The world war, he has said, revealed the cinema as a tremendous intellectual, moral and industrial force. What its most inspired prophets foresaw in the distant future was accomplished in a day, so to speak; and the plaything and show of the millions suddenly became a giant of dignity and power to sway the world. Charles Pathe, in the very beginning, at the birth of the child, was possessed of the gift of prophecy and previsioned the things to come, which now have been fulfilled in an overflowing measure.

Mr. Pathe's last visit to America was about two years ago, and this time it takes on a greatly increased importance. He will find the organization broader, stronger and more aggressive in its activities, with a steadily growing business, including the selling and distributing for some of the strongest groups in the industry. A test of the fundamental strength of Pathe was afforded by the "shut down period" formally adopted by the industry recently.

White with Stone

Philip H. White has been engaged for the position of film editor for the Lewis S. Stone Productions. Mr. White has had extensive experience with the George Kleine, Thomas H. Ince, Universal and Triangle organizations prior to his present affiliation.

five. Yes, yes, yes, yes. Yes to anything, but do I get it for another two days without trouble or will I have a lawsuit?

"What kind of advertising did I do? What's that got to do with it. I want two days more. You have got to know first what advertising I did? Well, go on, I'm about ready to drop dead now. I used sixty one-sheets, thirty three-sheets, fourteen twenty-four sheets, five thousand heralds, two hundred window cards, twenty-five window hangers, two film trailers three days before opening, about $350 in newspaper advertising, and published every cut and mat you sent down for publicity or ad. illustration. Now, damn you, do I get the two days more. What?

"Yes, I've turned them away every performance for five days. I know it. I got scared at the five day thing. Never played more than four days on any special before. Thought I needed a great big campaign to make it go for five days. It was a seven cylinder affair, not a five. I've got to have two days more. Cashier just tells me we've sold enough tickets to the turnaways tonight to fill three houses tomorrow and one the day after. I've got to have those extra days. What?

"You say you booked them to me when you got back to Louisville after you had signed me for the five day contract against my arguments for four days' maximum? Say, go to the devil will you. I've lost ten pounds in the last hour for nothing. Yes, come down the first chance you get, and I'll confess in person that Memphis knows more than I do about its ability to make long runs profitable."

Poppy Comedies Enter the Field

A new brand of comedies is shortly to be introduced on the market and distributed by the Frohman Amusement Company under the brand name of Poppy Comedies. A producing company for the making of these subjects has been formed by Harry Leonhardt, who is president; William L. Sherrill, vice-president, and Eugene Perry, secretary and treasurer. Mack Swain, remembered as Ambrose, the giant, of many Mack Sennett Keystone Comedies, has been engaged and will be the featured comedian. W. S. Fredrick, formerly scenario writer and director at Sennett's, who wrote and co-directed the series of Mack Swain Comedies released by Universal, will be in charge of scenario work and the direction. A studio on Santa Monica Boulevard in Hollywood has been leased, and production work will start April 1.

Harry Leonhardt has been identified with the film industry for the past four years, following a life in the theatrical business. He was western representative for Fox Exchanges in the territory west of Chicago, and later served the Goldwyn in the same capacity. At the present time Mr. Leonhardt is director of presentation at the new California theatre in Los Angeles. Mr. Perry has been in the distributing end of the film business for the past several years, identified with exchanges in the east and west.

Vivian Martin in "Little Comrade"

IF you are showing the Vivian Martin pictures you should feature her in your exploitation of "Little Comrade" as having a very light comedy role and should put emphasis on the fascination of her in the garb that she wears as a "theoretical" farmerette—for she does not get very far with the practical side of it.

It is distinctly a spring or early summertime sort of a production and there should be that atmosphere set about it—to take advantage of the longing that all of us feel at this time of the year for the open country, for blooming, growing, green things. This should be carried out through the lobby and in the setting that you give your program, as we are suggesting in more detail on another page.

While war is excuse for the plot of the story and service of one's country serves for some of the heart interest, there is nothing in the world to suggest that this is a war picture and we would keep anything out of the exploitation that would give that impression. Straight comedy, almost a farce at times, is the way that we would advertise this—appeal directly to the laughs and to the heart at the same time.

Niles Welch is the leading man here and we would be sure to mention that point. If your patrons pay attention to the directors of pictures we would also bring out that this is the work of Chester Withey, responsible for many successes.

HERE is the story: Genevieve Hale is the pampered daughter of rich parents, but just the same with all her frivolity she is much interested in helping the United States win the war and when she reads of the call for farmerettes and the good work that they are doing she determines to become one. She is long on enthusiasm, but very short on the practical end of it. This is shown in the costume which she adopts, rather tight fitting trousers and a fluffy silk and ribboney jacket which are suggestive more of the musical comedy than the hay fields.

Immediately on her arrival at the Hubbard farm where she is to work, in her limousine, accompanied by maid, chauffeur, pet dog, and raiment impedimenta of all sorts she arouses the hostility of the husky and practical farmerettes who are already on the job and who have discarded daintiness for overalls, broad straw hats and practical footwear. Of course there comes a lot of comedy when she starts about her career of practical farm work. She fails miserably in her attempt to milk, to white wash the chicken coop and in various other efforts, all of which increase the contempt of the farmerettes for her. Finally the forewoman demands whether she has sense enough to gather eggs and the ingenue of her character is revealed with the reply: "Have you got some of the cute little bantam ones?"

She not only has her troubles in her attempting to do the farming work, but she is an outcast among the farmerettes and her life in their dormitory is made anything but pleasant.

BUT there is a ray of sunshine among all the laughs at the expense of Genevieve. Just as she arrived at the farm Bobbie, youngest son of the Hubbards, is called in the draft, though he is mighty unwilling to go. But Genevieve has arrived just in time for Bobbie to fall thoroughly in love with her before he is haled away to the nearby training camp.

In the meantime the girl is fighting her battles against the life she loathes with a grim determination, but finally she caves in and then Mrs. Hubbard, in her motherly soul, takes the girl from the dormitory and brings her to live at the house, an act which does not help the little girl's standing with the farmerettes. But from that time on she practically becomes the pet of the Hubbards.

Bobbie has been raised as much a pet as Genevieve and the ardor of the training camp are too much for him, so he decides to desert. Genevieve is out hiding from her sorrows when the boy comes home and they meet, the result being that the girl persuades him to go back and do his duty, she promising that his family shall not know of his secret visit.

BUT they have been seen together, though the boy's identity is not known to the farmerettes, who see that the Hubbards get full information. Then developments come thick and fast with Mr. Hubbard banishing the girl from the farm and she goes back to her home, broken-hearted with her failure in serving her country.

She and Bobbie have been corresponding and when he fails to hear from her he determines to see what is the matter. He gets a furlough and comes home to find Genevieve gone and demands to know the reason why. When he is told that she was seen meeting a soldier at night, the boy comes out and explains, telling how the girl has persuaded him to do his duty and prevented him from becoming a deserter.

The father is immediately repentant and with the boy he seeks the girl out in her home and apologizes for his action. There is a general reconciliation with Bobbie starting out to fight "over there." Genevieve going back to the farm "to work over here" with every understanding that when the war is over marriage will cement the romance of the farm.

One point should be featured in connection with all references to the story: It is taken from the serial, "The Two Benjamins" by Juliet Wilbur Tompkins, which ran serially in McCall's Magazine. This is a publication with a circulation of nearly a million and a half with women almost exclusively the readers.

Practically all of the stills on this production show Vivian Martin in her very fascinating farmerette garb and if you make your own cuts you should feature her very prominently in your half tone effects. There are also line drawings of her in the same costume available. Then after you have featured her name and the title of the picture strong, jump into the sort of a selling argument that will let the people know that this is one of the pleasant little stories with a lot of laughs in it.

"She didn't know the first thing about milking a cow, or whitewashing a chicken coop or gathering in the pumpkins, yet she was the most fetching little farmerette that you ever saw. But she knew that she loved her country and she wanted to do something for it—and she did, down on the farm, but it wasn't with the onions or the potatoes, or with the cows and the chickens—but it was something worth while to her country and herself."

"Genevieve thought that she loved the cows and chickens, but she changed her mind when she tried to milk Old Brindle, and when they set her to work whitewashing the coop she was helpless until the farmer's son came along and showed her how. But at least that started a romance—and Genevieve in her dainty touserettes and her silken blouse was just the sort of a little girl that you would like to have in a romance of your very own. You'll laugh the most of the way through at her troubles, and then you'll be mighty happy with her in the end."

"Genevieve felt sure that she could help her country a whole lot by becoming a farmerette, so she sent for her fashionable modiste and had herself 'dolled up' in the garments that she thought she ought to wear. The women will agree that she is 'just too cute' and the men—well, they'll be willing to look at her again and again. Genevieve wasn't of much use on the farm, so far as raising crops was concerned, and she got in mighty bad with the practical farmerettes, but when it came to saving the honor of the family and to winning hearts—she was there."

"Genevieve decided that her country needed her and that she would become a farmerette. So she called in her fashionable modiste to design a costume that was more suitable to plucking hearts than to picking pumpkins, summoned her limousine, tucked her toy dog under her arm and left her maid to come along with her other gowns and hats and things. But she found the real farmerettes were rough and ready, and then her troubles began. She bumped into all sorts of troubles—and each one will give you a laugh—and then into a romance, which will delight you."

IF you are in a city where there has been any considerable attention paid to war gardens or in a section where there have been girls who have been giving their services in raising food you may be able to put over an unusually good publicity stunt in the newspapers by interviewing some of these local girls about the experiences they had on the farm, how they overcame their lack of knowledge and the like, and then bringing in a reference to the sort of a role that Miss Martin has in this picture.

Your newspaper might be induced to add to the interest in these war gardens, if they are still being conducted in your city—and they are in many now that the people have the habit—by offering a prize of tickets good for your theatre for the farmerette who will tell of the most successful work they have done.

As we have already said, do not get too serious about this, because you are likely to leave the impression that this play hinges on some big problem or something of the sort and this is just what you need to avoid.

Unless you are committed to letters to your patrons we would pass this one up for that and devote the additional money to newspaper advertising, and particularly to playing up strong pretty pictures of Miss Martin in her farmerette garb.

MOST of the lines that we have suggested apply rather to the cities, but if you are located in a smaller community it will probably pay you to "kid" along the idea of a big city girl thinking she knows anything about farming.

In either case we are going to offer some shorter lines that will apply. Now, no matter how big a following Miss Martin may have in your community don't be content with merely announcing her name and the title of the picture. You will find it a whole lot easier to sell a picture to the public if you lead the people to believe that you have a theme out of the ordinary.

We prefer the longer selling arguments that we have given, but here goes for the shorter ones:

"She didn't know the first thing about raising chickens, but she raised a successful flutter in one youth's heart."

"Genevieve was shy on knowledge of ploughing, but you'll agree that she was an ornament to any farm."

"Yes, Genevieve knew a lot about farming. She had her modiste design her a farmerette costume that was a cross between pajamas and a Russian dancer's garb, and then she had her picture taken with a hoe. She thought she was all ready, but when she hit the farm things began to happen—and there's a laugh in every one of her troubles."

"Days of war bread have passed, but if we had to depend on farmerettes like Genevieve to raise our food we fear that a lot of us would be mighty hungry these days. But you'll get a hearty meal of laughter in following her experiences."

Rural Lobby Display Will Get Lots of Attention

LOBBY displays and music will go a long way to make the people of your community talk about "Little Comrade." Now because we have told you that a picture is a comedy many exhibitors think that they have nothing more to do than to tell the public that and let it go. It seems to us that as a general rule the forced lobby display is generally worthless. When you have to hunt around to get some point to bring out, you will find that it is hard to persuade the public to "get" that point. And nothing is worse for a theatre to have a lobby display of a character that the public does not understand it, even after visiting the theatre.

If possible convert your lobby into a garden, using real stalks of plants of whatever sort may be available in your community. If these are not accessible, use imitations. If there is room build a fence around these gardens. The lobby display which was used by the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, on "A Romance of Happy Valley" with the corn field along the sides of the lobby will be most appropriate here. We wouldn't try to use dummy figures for they are like to be a mess. If you can have a couple of pretty girls costumed as Miss Martin appears, they will attract a great deal of attention.

Striking cut-outs should be used as the main feature of the star display. The six sheet contains the figure of Miss Martin seated on a pumpkin while one of the three sheets shows her with a wheel barrow. There is a smaller figure with her in the same costume and talking to the boy in one of the one sheets. These cut-outs should be prominently placed so as to get attention from all angles.

IN most localities this is the time of the year when there are gardens being started and you ought to be able to secure the cooperation of the stores selling seeds and also those handling garden tools. The cutouts that we have already mentioned or the full paper will help along in this connection. Ask that these be placed in the window with a sign reading:

"When you see Vivian Martin in 'Little Comrade,' at the Empire theatre, you'll see she wasn't a success as a farmerette. But you'll see a lot of perfectly good vegetables —the sort that are raised with our seeds."

If you can get the cooperation of the bookstores we would advise you to have printed a slip saying that this picture is made from Juliet Wilbur Tompkins' story in McCall's Magazine and get the dealers to place one of these in not only the copies of McCall's that they sell, but in those of every other publication devoted to the interests of women.

There is still further possible cooperation if you can get the grocers to include in every package that they send out a circular bearing a picture of Miss Martin in her farmerette garb and then:

"These vegetables weren't raised by Genevieve Hale and her fellow farmerettes. So when you want good ones come to us, but if you want to laugh a lot at an amateur farmerette's troubles, see 'Little Comrade' at the Empire tonight."

THERE is one little effect that you can get in your music with this picture that will cause no end of talk. Remember the little things count in presentation. There is an incident toward the first of the picure in which Bobbie Hubbard is seen with a harmonica and starts to play "Oh, You Beautiful Doll" until the girl tells him, "No, play 'Over There.'" Just a few bars of these on a real harmonica with the remainder of the musicians tacit will make a hit.

There is another point where the youth gets a note from the girl referring to the fact that she has fed the cows and chickens, and here you have obviously a call for "This is the Life." Then toward the end of the picture there is one title "To fight" and here a few strains of "Over There" should be brought in and then with the next title "to work over here" there should be used "Keep the Home Fires Burning."

Most of the music here will be light. Select one of the better known love themes of the catchiest character. This theme is to be introduced when the youth and girl meet, again at their secret meeting, then when the boy tells his father the truth and finally right at the end. With the exception of the bugle call at the place that is clearly indicated and the "Over There" suggested, keep away from the military music.

YOU can arrange an attractive prelude here with the reproduction on the stage of a field of corn or grain or even of vegetables with the real article in the foreground, fading into the drop. Now with four girls attired in overalls, the sort that the real farmerettes wore you can have an attractive song with "The Girl Behind the Man Behind the Gun." It is from a recent stage success and is very timely here and you may be able to make a few changes in the wording that will make it more effective.

This whole scene should be with the lights fairly well down and after this first selection the lights should fade down into the blue, for the night effect and with your quartette retiring to a bench at the side you can have a wide variety of selections to be chosen from. With the use of a moon in the background you can have effectively rendered "The Moon Drops Low." Any of the old time favorites such as "Sweet and Low," "In the Gloaming," and "Sweet Genevieve" may be used. Should you do this you can render the last named as the final selection and then carry it into the picture as the theme.

With this feature you are safe in picking almost any character of pictures for the balance of your bill. There is an excellent chance for an all comedy bill here. There is no overdose of out-of-door stuff so a scenic will not conflict.

Strong Exploitation for Feature

"Fit to Win" Given Advanced Showing to Selected Audience in Each City Before Playing Theatre

WITH the idea of enlisting a strong array of boosters in every locality where their six-reel feature is to be shown, the promoters of "Fit to Win" plan to hold a private exhibition of the production several days ahead of play date.

"Fit to Win" is described as a six-reel dramatic production containing an educational health theme calculated to intensely interest and highly benefit all humanity.

It was originally produced for the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities and personally directed by Lieut. E. H. Griffith. Sergt. Ray McKee appears in the leading role of Billy Hale. The original title was "Fit to Fight," and it is said to have already been seen by 1,500,000 enlisted men of the Army and Navy.

"Fit to Win" is declared to be the first motion picture ever produced that tells the truth about the cause and effect of venereal diseases and has been revamped so that it can be shown to civilians in any theatre in the country.

Isaac Silverman was one of the U. S. Government "Dollar a Year" men and when the armistice was signed he secured the feature with the full authorization of the U. S. Public Health Service. Mr. Silverman formed a company known as Public Health Films with offices in the Putnam Building, New York City, and many advance agents are now booking the feature in leading cities.

The unique plan of exploitation adopted to arouse advance interest in the feature is said to have proved a strong drawing card for the exhibitor. About five days before the feature is to be played at the theatre in any city an invitation is issued to the Mayor, Chief of Police, Health Commissioner, ministers, doctors, professors, Y. M. C. A. workers and Knights of Columbus field workers.

Open discussion is held at the private exhibition of the picture. The newspaper men are also present by invitation and the picture and discussions are expected to promote many columns of live publicity from a news standpoint.

Public Health Films expects to provide every exhibitor with a crowded house when he opens his theatre to play "Fit to Win." The exploitation methods adopted as outlined is expected to do the work effectively.

It is stated that many ministers have already preached stirring sermons upon the great value of this picture. It is expected to draw heavily on a new and hitherto unexploited patronage as well as the regular movie fans. In preparing the feature for public viewing an epilogue has been written and inserted in the picture.

"Fit To Win" portrays five young fellows who have just joined the service from civilian life. One turns a deaf ear to all allurements and temptations and his sole desire is to strictly follow the health regulations so carefully laid down and keep himself perfect for the one girl.

The other four are pictured as meeting all sorts of trouble for their love of the many so-called pleasures. There are said to be many thrills provided in the picture. One is described as showing a stirring fight scene in which a pugilist, formerly the picture of health, is knocked out by a much smaller man.

Pathe Appoints Abeles in Newark

A. S. Abeles has been appointed manager of the Newark branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and brings to the administration of the office through experience in the big corporation an exceptionally fine record. He joined Pathe in January, 1914, as a traveling salesman for the New York exchange, then in West 23rd Street. He went thence to St. Louis as Branch Manager, which position he held for seven months, when he was selected as manager of the New York Exchange. Here he served from 1915 to 1918, when he was appointed District Manager of the Central Western Division.

Rork Leases Studio for MacDonald

For the past four weeks there have been reports of the formation of the Katharine MacDonald Pictures Corporation, but it remained until this week for the new organization to actually begin production. Sam Rork, the general manager, has leased the studio on Georgia and Girard street built by the Biograph Company five or six years ago, and most recently used by Thomas H. Ince, and there work has been started on the filming of "The Thunderbolt," a drama of Kentucky mountains, written by J. Grubb Alexander. The supporting cast selected includes the names of Tom Meighn, Forrest Stanley, Adda Gleason, Spottiswoode Aitken, Doc Cannon, Antrim Short, and others. Colin Campbell, who for more than four years was affiliated with Col. William Selig, and special feature producer there making many of the Selig successes, including "The Spoilers," "The Crisis," "The Ne'er-Do-Well," and many others, has been engaged as director for the MacDonald Company.

Ethel Clayton East for Long Rest

Ethel Clayton, Paramount star, arrived in New York last week from the Lasky studio at Hollywood. Under the direction of George Melford, Miss Clayton has finished "Impulses," adapted from a story by George Hartman, which is the final production of her series of Paramount pictures for the releasing year 1918-1919. Miss Clayton will take a three month's rest before starting her second year's work as a Famous Players-Lasky star and in the interim expects to take a vacation trip to Japan. Four pictures of her present series are yet to be released. They are "Pettigrew's Girl," by Dana Burnet, released March 23; "Vicky Van," Carolyn Wells' mystery story; "Men, Women and Money," by Cosmo Hamilton, and "Impulses."

Miss Clayton has worked steadily in Paramount pictures for the past year.

Taylor Holmes in "A Regular Fellow"

TAYLOR HOLMES and comedy are the two strong points to be played by exhibitors who have booked this picture. There should be nothing suggestive of the serious in it, for the laughs are the main thing, though at times there is a suggestion of the Fairbanks sort of action crossed with the Chaplin perils.

Like most comedies you wouldn't stop to analyze this one and then conclude that it was likely to happen in real life, so the thing to suggest to your patrons is that they won't be burdened with any problems, that all they will have to do is to laugh—and then promise to send the tired business men away forgetful of all their troubles.

There are two sets of crooks that enter into the action, but we would not feature these further than as a background for the comedy. Since a great portion of the action takes place on an ocean liner you can call this:

"A voyage on the sea of comedy to the land of romance."

Then put the greater weight of your exploitation behind the name of the star and the things that he has done. Feature the title strong because "A Regular Fellow" in itself suggests a happy, action picture.

THIS is the story: Dalion Pemberton, though yet young, is a confirmed woman hater and he even runs away from the United States to South America to avoid meeting those of the opposite sex. But his aunt follows him and there reveals to him that the will of his grandfather demands that he marry one Virginia Christy or lose the fortune. Dalion remembers Virginia as a freckled faced little girl and besides he hates all women—so a little thing like a fortune means nothing in his young life.

But evidently something goes wrong with his woman hating streak, for driving home one evening he passes a stalled taxicab and in this he sees a girl who—well, he forgets all the mean things that he had said about women. Heretofore he had been the most timid of men, but now he even frames it up to whip a man whom he hires to attempt to flirt with the girl in a restaurant. But the girl really pays no attention to him and this excites his desire to win her.

He learns that she is to sail that evening for America and follows her and her mother to the pier, still in his dress suit, and just as the ship is about to pull out he finds that he had been robbed and that the contents of his pocket are a single cigar. So there is nothing left for him to do but to stow away and then there result a lot of comedy situations in which Dalion is discovered hiding under coal and is forced to scrub the decks. He gets a chance during the voyage to whisper a few words to the girl: "I thought that I hated women until I saw you—But I don't—I love you."

BUT on the trail of the girl and her mother are Count Eugenie and Lady Westfall, two society crooks who are planning to steal the jewels of mother and daughter. Dalion's activities on shipboard help in blocking them, though Dalion is innocent of his share in the game. But Lady Westfall succeeds in so ingratiating herself with the mother and the daughter that she and the count decide to postpone their operations until they visit the New York home and then make a complete haul.

Dalion certainly has his troubles on shipboard and when he finds that he is to be returned to South America he leaps from the opposite side of the ship and makes his way to the dock only to fall into the hands of the police. A little later he finds himself the cell companions of a couple of crooks who have just completed the arrangements for their escape. They force him to accompany them on a big jewel robbery, and though he protests that he cannot enter the house because "I do not know these people" they have a use for him because he is still attired in a dress suit and is "dressed for the role" that they want him to play.

In the meantime the two society crooks are guests in the very home that the other pair have entered and the bogus count and lady have determined to carry out their plans. One of the principal things these two are seeking is a very handsome necklace, but they note that the mother does not wear these as she starts for the opera, leaving her daughter to entertain the "guests." It is then that Lady Westfall shows such an insistent desire to see the jewels that the daughter announces that her mother has locked them up. Then the couple start a search for them as the girl denounces them as thieves. At that moment Dalion and his thug companions are in an adjoining room, and there follows a fight between the two sets of crooks while Dalion summons the police.

JUST at that moment the mother and Dalion's aunt enter. "I'm glad to meet you," he says to the mother, "I know your daughter very well indeed." And then his aunt turns to him with the information that the girl is Virginia Christy and that the aunt took the next boat as soon as she knew that her nephew was following the girl that had been picked for him.

"If I'd known that I'd have swum over," announces Dalion.

At left he hates women; in the center he sees her, and at the right with the crooks

Dalian is so smitten that he hides under the auto to get a sight of the girl; in the middle, the woman hater defiant, and at the right the the man, the girl and the two crooks

Light Comedy Stuff is Needed in Your Exploitation

EXHIBITORS who are to show this picture should depend largely on the name of Taylor Holmes, the title of the picture and some of the humorous lines from it. There is a rather slender plot and to give it away would be to weaken the interest in the picture. For that reason we would prefer not to carry through any regular sales argument but rather to be content with fairly brief lines, as suggestive of comedy as possible.

Of course the name of the star has always been associated with comedy, but we would go further than to rely merely on that by trying to show that many of the situations in this picture are ludicrous. Merely saying that he plays the role of a woman hater does not indicate that, but quotations from the titles of the picture will carry over the idea. Make the crook end of your exploitation merely incidental, for it is only a setting to the laughs and to strengthen the plot.

In your advertising you will naturally feature the name of the star and will use pictures of him in the character. There is one that shows him behind the bars and under this you can use the lines:

"Say, Mr. Jailer, can't I have a separate compartment? I don't know these gentlemen."

EITHER in your advertising or through a new story we would certainly be sure to call attention to the fact that he has scored successes in such pictures as "Efficiency Edgar's Courtship," "The Small Town Guy," and "Ruggles of Red Gap," and in "It's a Bear," the first of his new series of pictures.

Holmes has great individuality and this should be made prominent, and it can by the use of quotations that we have indicated. The drollness has been typical of most of his pictures. This, in connection with the titles is the main thing that will appeal to your audiences, we believe, and if you get a laugh in advance with your advertising you are pretty sure to get the person into your theatre.

Millicent Fisher is the leading woman and the director is Christy Cabanne, who has made some of the most successful of motion pictures. You may get an appeal in some quarters by adding that Mrs. Taylor Holmes also appears in this one as the titled woman crook.

NOW play the picture of Holmes prominently, then his name and the title, and then let's jump right into something about the picture. Here are a few of them that are light and frothy but are still calculated to make people want to see the picture:

"He ran all the way to South America because he hated the fair sex. 'When I see a woman it spoils my whole day,' observed Dalion Pemberton, and that very evening ran into one and fell in love with her at first sight.

"That was all very well, but it happened that she was sailing from home that evening, and though Dalion followed her to the liner, he found that he didn't have a cent in his pockets. So he tells the captain: 'I've decided to take a position on your boat.' The captain couldn't see it that way, but Dalion got there just the same, though he didn't get a chance to take off the dress suit until the girl had promised to be his.

"'I love you, I love you forever—excuse me.' That was the way Dalion Pemberton made love to the beautiful lady whose name he didn't even know. But you see he didn't know much about such things because he had always been a woman hater—and because there was a husky deck hand on his trail seeing that he attended to his duties as chambermaid to the deck. Even if he was wearing a dress suit, he had to do that or 'get off and walk.'

"One minute he was refusing a fortune because he had to marry to get it—he hated women so. An hour later he was shoveling coal and mopping the decks—and in evening dress—so that he could remain on the same ship with the 'beautiful lady.' And a little thing like a husky deck hand, a visit to a cell and a couple of burglars and a pair of society crooks didn't balk him—but as many laughs as you get you'll see that the joke was on this woman hater all the time.

"But he is satisfied and we think you'll be."

THIS is a picture where you ought to change the cut and the underlines in each one of your newspaper displays. There is no occasion for a teaser campaign here and therefore you should build the advertising that you run in advance and during the showing of the picture straight on the amusement side. Of course there's that saying that humor is infectious, but if you keep on giving the people indications of the laughs in "A Regular Fellow" every day while you are showing this, you will be likely to get a lot more people into your house.

Here are some of the shorter lines:

"He hated all women until he saw one of the reasons why men leave home—and then he fled from his retreat straight back to civilization, because the woman hating stuff was sure giving him the reverse English."

"Pemberton hated women so that if he had to sit through a performance of 'Romeo and Juliet' he was ill for a week; but then something happened and if Romeo were around he quit the job cold after seeing himself outdone. You'll laugh a whole lot more at Pemberton than you sighed with Romeo."

"'Women have ruined the world,' he gasped tragically one moment and ten minutes later he was vowing 'I only want to feast my eyes on that beautiful lady.' Juggling coal, mopping deck and even a cell didn't check his ardor—and then he found that he had simply gone to an awful lot of trouble—but what did he care?"

"Woman hating was his occupation, and he didn't know the slightest thing about burglary. But he was 'dressed for the part' and they forced him to go after the 'million dollars worth of ice'—and what he found was a billion dollars worth of—— And you'll get dollars worth of laughs."

Here's a Stunt and Some Suggestions of the Music

WE have already suggested that we would confine the newspaper display on this picture to straight matter with the comedy element, but in some communities the street stunt is found a business getter and here there is opportunity for a good one.

Attire a man in a dress suit and at the same time place a mask over his face giving the appearance that he is blindfolded and then have him feel his way along the street with a cane. On the back of his coat have a printed card bearing the wording:

"Every time I see a woman it spoils my whole day. Yet I am a 'Regular Fellow' at the Empire theatre today."

This same idea could be followed out in the lobby as a curiosity stimulant with the use of figures. Have a figure similarly garbed but with his back toward the street and bearing the quotation and then next to this a sign "That's what Dalion Pemberton said, but this is what he came to," and then have a huge hand pointing to the right or left and there you can have a cabinet with a peep hole and then the figure of a man kneeling at the feet of a girl. They'll all wonder what it is about.

MUSICAL setting for this picture should be of the light and airy sort although you will have to bring in some mysterioso and agitatos for the crook and the fight stuff. For instance, in the cafe scene where Dalion is trying to attract the attention of the girl, there might be well played, "Oh, You Beautiful Doll." If you want to keep the picture the lightest possible you might use "Tell Me Pretty Maiden," from the musical comedy hit of several years ago.

Right here while we are referring to the cafe theme. There is a point where the orchestra is supposed to be playing "The Star Spangled Banner" and one of the guests refuses to rise. The temptation is possible strong for you to play the national anthem here, but don't do it. In the first place the people do not want ot get up in the middle of a picture, and more than that the national anthem is entirely out of place in a comedy.

A MYSTERY IDEA

IN cities where street stunts get attention you can put over a good one by building a duplicate of the green van in which Diane Westfall had her adventures. This should have curtained windows at either side and a door and steps at the rear, and should be drawn by a pair of white horses, with the driver garbed as a gypsy.

Costume a young woman in riding habit and let her ride about in this so seated that she may be seen through the windows. Every half a block or so have the van stop and the girl come to the steps and look about as if searching for some one. If you can get the co-operation of your newspapers, so much the better, and you will create a real mystery.

"Pan American" can be played at the screening of this, then going into "Chin Chin Chinaman," with the view of the Chinaman who was the original woman hater and then into "Introduce Me" as we see Pemberton, "who began where the Chinaman left off." There is another occasion when Holmes comes up through the ventilation and "Nights of Gladness" is appropriate here. There is another such suggestion as the pair of crooks start to leave the jail, and here you might play "Where Do We Go From Here," You can use a funeral march burlesqued with the threat of the crooks. "Sailing, Sailing" can be used several times for the shipboard scenes.

WE would use as the overture some selections from a musical comedy, and then you can employ some of the lighter selections for your musical numbers. There is one song that might appeal as the prologue and that is "He's Had No Loving in a Long, Long Time." That could be sung by a man in dress suit and a very sombre look on his face, who strolls off the sage just as the projection of the picture is started.

If you decide to make an all-comedy bill of this we would use a slap stick affair, because the Holmes picture falls under the class of polite comedy, depending on the personality of the star and the title, and any more of that on the same bill might be tiresome. But the slap stick, especially with the burlesque effects will go well.

IF you are making a special play to matinee business it might be well to consider that in special exploitation children will readily understand this and will appreciate the action on shipboard where they will probably get more thrills than the grown-ups, while the appeal to the women is apparent.

If you use the circular letter form, we would suggest a brief tone something like this:

"Do you believe in love at first sight?

"Dalion Pemberton has just finished swearing that he hated all women and turning down a fortune depending on his marrying a certain girl when he fell madly in love with a woman whose name he didn't know.

"Dont think that we are asking you to solve a problem. Don't worry your head about it. And if you'll come to see Taylor Holmes at the Empire next week you'll laugh so much that you'll forget there are problems and worries in the world."

Pickford Is Scheduled for April

Four Artcraft Releases for Month on Famous Players-Lasky List with Eight Paramounts

IN announcing the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation schedule of releases for the month of April, Walter E. Greene, Vice-President in Charge of Distribution, states that Mary Pickford appears in one of the four Artcrafts and that eight Paramount productions will also be issued.

Of the twelve productions, four of them are from the studios of Thomas H. Ince. In addition there are also the many one reel novelties and two-reel comedies.

Including the Mary Pickford production, the other Artcraft pictures on the list, are a Cecil B. DeMille Special and productions in which Elsie Ferguson and William S. Hart are the respective stars.

The eight Paramount productions, present John Barrymore, Shirley Mason, Marguerite Clark, Bryant Washburn, Dorothy Dalton, Charles Ray, Enid Bennett and Wallace Reid as stars.

The Mary Pickford production, "Captain Kidd, Jr.," is one of the first to be released, being scheduled for April 6. This romantic story by Rida Johnson Young was adapted by Frances Marion and the picture was directed by William D. Taylor.

Also on the 6th are John Barrymore in "The Test of Honor" and Shirley Mason in "The Rescuing Angel."

April 13 is the release date of Marguerite Clark's Paramount picture, "Let's Elope," adapted by Katherine Reed from Fred Jackson's clever stage comedy, "The Naughty Wife," Bryant Washburn in "Something to Do" is also scheduled for the 13th. On the same date also Thomas H. Ince presents Dorothy Dalton in "The Homebreaker," from the story by John Lynch and scenario by R. Cecil Smith, Victor L. Schertzinger directed.

Elsie Ferguson in the Artcraft production, "Eyes of the Soul," founded on George Weston's Saturday Evening Post story, "The Salt of the Earth," is scheduled for April 20. William S. Hart in the Artcraft picture, "The Money Corrall," written and directed by Lambert Hillyer and Mr. Hart, and Charles Ray in "Greased Lightning."

Cecil B. DeMille's new production for Artcraft, "For Better, For Worse," will be released April 27. Edgar Selwyn wrote the original story and the scenario is credited to Janie Macpherson.

"The Law of Men," serves as a Paramount vehicle for the Thomas H. Ince star, Enid Bennett. This picture is scheduled for the 27th, as is "The Roaring Road," a Paramount picture starring Wallace Reid.

Wm. S. Hart, Artcraft star, in his newest production

The comedies for the month are as follows: April 6, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "The Amateur Liar," by Albert Payson Terhune; April 13, Louise Fazenda, Chester Conklin and Phyllis Haver in the Mack Sennett two-reeler, "The Foolish Age;" April 20, James Montgomery Flagg's satire, "The Last Bottle," starring Harry Foshay and Dorothy Fitch, and the Mack Sennett comedy, "The Little Widow."

In addition to these, there will be released in the Success Series Mary Pickford in "Hulda From Holland," John Barrymore in "The Dictator," Marguerite Clark in "Gretna Green," and Victor Moore in "Chimmie Fadden;" also the usual weekly issues of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogues and the Paramount-Bray Pictograph.

Alice Brady Compares Stage and Screen

Many of the New York daily newspapers are running stories on the successful run which "Forever After" is still enjoying in the metropolis. This stage play, starring Alice Brady, has already passed its 250th performance.

In one of the Sunday editions Miss Brady has a signed article which deals with her experience on stage and screen and her idea of the training for stage work that a screen experience gives.

"When I returned to the stage after two years spent in acting before the camera," writes Miss Brady, "many of the critics expressed a mild surprise that I had not brought back with me the flamboyant acting methods of the movies."

She then went on to state that the so-called flamboyancy attributed to motion picture acting was only a myth, and that the screen artist has to practice more restraint then does the stage artist.

"Next Aisle Over"

The humorous possibilities of a big dry goods establishment is shown, with a keen satirical appreciation, in "Next Aisle Over," a Rolin comedy, featuring Harold Lloyd, with Bebe Daniels and "Snub" Pollard, which will be released by Pathe March 30th.

Fox Gets Screen Rights, "My Little Sister"

Fox Film Corporation announces that another famous book has been added to the long list purchased by William Fox for conversion into screen plays.

Following closely on the purchase of "Checkers," the famous stage play, came the announcement this week that "My Little Sister," one of the season's best sellers, had been bought as a starring vehicle for Evelyn Nesbit, and that Miss Nesbit will begin work on it immediately.

"My Little Sister" was written by Elizabeth Robins, one of the best known English authors, and it is said that more than a million copies already have been sold on both sides of the Atlantic. It is described as having exceptional publicity because of its strong theme and great dramatic power.

Metro Chooses One for May Allison

"His Father's Wife," an original comedy drama by E. V. Durling, has been purchased by Maxwell Karger, Metro Director General, to serve as May Allison's next starring vehicle. The production, to be made at the new Metro studios in Hollywood, follows "Orchestra D-2," "The Island of Intrigue" and "Peggy Does Her Darndest," recent May Allison pictures.

Charles Swickard, who directed Bert Lytell in his two big successes, "The Spender" and "Faith," will direct Miss Allison in "His Father's Wife."

Concerning the Drews

"The Drews are efficiently ridiculous," states a New York paper in a review of "Once a Mason," the latest Paramount-Drew release, which was a feature of the New York Rialto theatre's "Comedy Week" bill. Most aptly has the critic phrased the public consensus, which is demonstrated by the hearty laughter and applause that greets these new two-reel Drew comedies.

Paramount Promises Much Realism

Realism is said to be the dominant feature of "Pettigrew's Girl," Ethel Clayton's new Paramount picture, which is released March 23. The story, scenarioized by Will M. Ritchey, was written by Dana Burnett and originally appeared under the title, "Private Pettigrew's Girl," in the Saturday Evening Post where it attracted wide attention by reason of its element of heart appeal.

Several scenes were taken in New York on Fifth Avenue when the members of the Lambs and Friars clubs, arrayed in their picturesque costumes, were holding their contest for contributions for the Allied War Relief Fund. Many faces familiar to Broadway audiences are seen, including that of David Warfield. Other scenes depicting the same event were filmed at the Lasky studio at Hollywood in order to permit of Miss Clayton's appearance.

Sturgeon to Universal

Priscilla Dean's next vehicle will be from an original story by Bayard Veiller, and she will be directed by Rollin Sturgeon, who has just joined the Universal force.

Mr. Sturgeon produced "God's Country and the Woman" and "The Chalice of Courage" for Vitagraph, and is said to have won considerable prestige for his directing a few years ago.

"The Rose of the Rancho" in Success Series

California at the beginning of the gold rush when residents of that great commonwealth were directed by the United States government to register their holdings, a measure that created much opposition, is the scene of "The Rose of the Rancho," a picturization of the celebrated stage success of the same name, which is the Success Series feature released by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation March 23.

Pathe Booking Its Newest Serial

"The Tiger's Trail," Starring Ruth Roland, Will Be Released April 20, and Bookings Reported Heavy

THERE is little doubt in the minds of Pathe officials that their forthcoming serial production, "The Tiger's Trail," in which Ruth Roland is starred, will set a new high mark in serial popularity.

In paraphrasing a well known and historic saying they state that the sun never sets on Pathe serials, and that no sooner has the final episode of one flashed on the screen than there is another ready for the public.

April 20 is the date set for the first episode of "The Tiger's Trail," with advance bookings reported as enormous, and it will follow immediately on the concluding episode of "The Lightning Raider," the Pearl White production now being shown.

"The Tiger's Trail," in addition to its star, Miss Roland, has a cast headed by George Larkin. The story is by Arthur B. Reeve, author of several successful Pathe serials and creator of the Craig Kennedy detective stories, and Charles A. Logue, author of many popular screen offerings. It was done in scenario form by Gilson Willets, a writer, traveler and soldier of fortune.

In connection with the release of the new Pathe serial, a few general figures compiled from Home Office records are cited as showing the tremendous popularity of these productions, not only in the United States, but in every country of the world. In the United States, for example, it is estimated that there are 15,000 theatres showing motion pictures.

The current Pathe serial, "The Lightning Raider," is being screened in 3,000 of these houses, it is claimed. This means that the serial is being shown in one out of every five picture houses in the country.

Approximately 1,000 houses of this list show Pathe serials on standing order, to use exchange parlance. In other words, these houses use every Pathe serial that is issued, and in them the current serial production may be seen every week of the year.

When figures are available on the bookings of "The Tiger's Trail," similarly striking results are expected to be made known. "The Tiger's Trail" is said to be starting off with a far better record than was made by "Hands Up!" which heretofore was Miss Roland's most successful Pathe serial. There is no doubt in the minds of Pathe officials that a record is about to be established in serial bookings, judging from the showing to date on "The Tiger's Trail."

There isn't a country in the world where Pathe serials are not shown, say the officials. They state that Pathe is the largest film exporting house in the world, and its tremendous system spreads over every continent. And that Pathe serials are fully as popular abroad as they are in America.

Holmes Shows Versailles

The current Paramount-Burton Holmes Travelogue is entitled "A Visit to Glorious Versailles."

Versailles is described as one of the most magnificent show places in the world, because of its superb palace erected by Louis XIV and the smaller palaces close by—the Grand Trianon which Louis XIV built for Madame de Maintenon, the Petit Trianon built by Louis XV for Madame du Barry and the charming little village built as a playground for Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette.

Cantor in Los Angeles

Abe Cantor, of the technical staff of the Anita Stewart Productions Company, who has been supervising the laboratory work on "The Midnight Romance" at the Rothacker Laboratories in Chicago, has returned to Los Angeles to assist in the filming of Miss Stewart's next production, which is being made under Marshal Nielan's direction.

The Independent Field

Maurice Tourneur and his staff at "the zero hour" during the shooting of a scene for "The White Heather"

Saunders Enthuses On Tourneur Production

"WITH a subject as interesting as 'Woman,' and a director the caliber of Maurice Tourneur, can you have any doubt as to the quality of this production?" inquires C. P. Saunders, a Buffalo exchange man, in a letter to Independent Sales Corporation, praising their release.

"The picture is absolutely 100% in every detail; scenic and dramatic; to the smallest point it is perfect," he continues.

"The cast is an all-star, the settings and scenic effects are marvelous, and with the title of 'Woman' which is sensational and suggestive, and at the same time refined and classical, the drawing power of this picture is without doubt the strongest of any picture ever released, and has been proven so in every city and town in which it has been played.

"S. L. Rothapfel, upon retiring from the management of Rivoli and Rialto theatres in New York City, mentioned five pictures which stood out in his memory as being the best during the history of the Rivoli and Rialto, and 'Woman' was one of the five.

"No production of the screen year has received the unanimously enthusiastic trade press comment, as has Maurice Tourneur's 'Woman.' Without a single dissenting voice, the trade publications pronounce 'Woman,' aside from being Mr. Tourneur's masterpiece, to be the most artistic production of the year, and it has been a year of big productions."

"Khavah" May Be Finished This Week

Zion Films, Inc., reports that "Kavah," the initial Sholom Aleichem production by the Zion Films, Inc., co-starring Alice Hastings and Giacomo Masuroff, will be finished this week.

Work on the exteriors is being rushed by Director Charles E. Davenport.

According to present plans the picture will have a private showing at one of the Broadway theatres by April 15.

The story is said to be working out beautifully and the prediction is held out by those who have seen the picture in the making that it will prove a sensation in the world of the silent drama. The story is a simple one and yet so replete with tense dramatic moments as well as lighter ones that it will prove a relief from some of the sex and triangle stories.

The plans of the Zion Films, Inc., now include a trip to Palestine this summer where a massive production will be staged. Prior to this, however, it is expected that a feature play by David Pinski, the Jewish dramatist, will be produced.

International Comedies Get Many Bookings

According to officials of Educational Films Corporation of America, the new series of "International" comedies in black and white, featuring the well-known artists, "Judge Rumhauser," the "Shenanigan Kids" and "Happy Hooligan," has broken all previous records for booking and approval in the best theatres.

Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, reports that the managers of the various Educational exchanges throughout the country have received many enthusiastic comments. Theatres that have discriminated against "jerky" cartoons have found the International process of double-animation most realistic and life-like, and audiences that enjoy really clever comedy find the smooth action and continually funny situations the very best sort of laughing material.

With the new "Ravings of a Rounder" as an added part of each comedy release, the subjects become more rapid-fire fun of the sure and certain type.

R. H. COCHRANE to my mind saw it first. He was keen on the motion picture that contained somewhere in its length a picture, that would be easily remembered by the public when advertised.

The largest advertising proposition of Mr. Cochrane's firm, then, was its serials. "R. H." would select his serial titles on their advertising picture value.

And it had to be a simple picture, one that would get over quick. For instance, a playing card, "The Trey of Hearts"; a black box, "The Black Box"; a shattered coin, "The Broken Coin"; a mask, "The Purple Mask"; a circus girl, "Lure of the Circus."

"The Better 'Ole" was "cinched"—most of the insiders think—by the catchy Old Bill head. The walrus-remindful face got 'em! You saw that "mug" to want to know more about its owner. It made for curiosity.

And the box office coined Curiosity into Cash!

An advertising picture in a motion picture means economical publicity for the latter. Practically all that the space-buying exhibitor must do is flash the RIGHT advertising picture with name and date of show, to be assured the attention of newspaper readers.

In one city six readers were used for "Better 'Ole" advertising at a cost of exactly half of what the exhibitor had originally calculated. This was made possible by persuading the exhibitor to pass up some of his own ideas for "type copy" and featuring instead just the Old Bill head.

This exhibitor knew it paid; for he did a better business on "Better 'Ole" week than any of the weeks he advertised his show with "type copy".

The poster artist at World Film, who distribute the picture, was also smart enough to headline the O. B. head in his lithos.

"R. H." guessed the truth years ago. Cast your advertising picture upon the waters and it will return your motion picture attraction a winner.

"When a Woman Strikes" is sixth of the Frank G. Hall series of 10-20-30 distributed by Independent Sales Corporation.

"When a Woman Strikes" Is Released

Frank Hall, President of Independent Sales Corporation, announces that the sixth release on the 10-20-30 series of special productions is a typical Western drama, entitled "When A Woman Strikes."

Four of the principal roles are interpreted by Ben Wilson, Rosemary Theby, Neva Gerber and Robert Brower.

The story as told in this latest release of Mr. Hall's on the 10-20-30 series, is of the West in the days when the sheriff was more powerful than the mayor or governor.

It tells of the sacrifices made by a sister for a brother, the virile, big-hearted nature of a stage-driver who is made sheriff and solves a mystery that hangs over the lives of two innocent people.

Complete First Sholem Aleichem Feature

Zion Films, Inc., has announced the completion of its first Sholem Aleichem production, "Khavah." Alice Hastings is starred, while Charles E. Davenport directed.

Work of assembling and cutting and writing titles for the picture will begin the early part of the week. Nat Dorfman, a New Yok newspaperman, will edit and title the story. The assembling and cutting will be done by the director, Mr. Davenport.

It is expected that a private showing of the picture will be given on April 15.

Shorty Hamilton Features for New York

Elk Photoplay Company of 130 West 46th Street, New York City, has secured the rights to the Shorty Hamilton big Western comedy-dramas for Greater New York and Northern New Jersey.

The subjects are "The Pen Vulture," "The Snail," "Denny From Ireland," and "The Ranger." These productions were made by W. H. Clifford.

Schlank Says Exhibitors Like New Prints

"THE vast majority of exhibitors appreciate new prints instead of junk film which has been run for ninety days or more," says Ike Schlank, President of Capital Film Company. "That is one of the greatest reasons to which we can attribute our success."

"The poor condition of film when it reaches the smaller towns has been the cause of many an exhibitor losing heart in his attempt to 'elevate the screen.' It is undoubtedly a fact that it is not always the fault of the producers and exchanges that prints soon become torn, scratched and filled with oil splotches. Nevertheless, it is well known that practically every picture produced arrives at the junk stage before it 'hits the road,' or is offered to the smaller exhibitor."

"The Capital policy, however, places every exhibitor on an equal basis, and permits the small town manager to get brand new prints as early after release date as he desires, with the price of first-run easily within his limit."

It was explained by Mr. Schlank that this scheme of things was possible on account of all Capital pictures being within two-reel lengths. Their dramas, comedies, detective stories and railroad plays are made to reap them profit upon the same basis as news weeklies, with a given life for each print not to exceed sixty days.

Washington, D. C., Exchange Gets Shorty Hamilton

Arrangements have been made whereby the Exhibitors Film Exchange of Washington, D. C., have become sole distributors of the Shorty Hamilton five-reel comedy dramas throughout the District of Columbia, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia.

The inimitable Shorty is featured in four comedies of Western life entitled "The Pen Vulture," "The Snail," "Denny From Ireland," and "The Ranger."

Hammons Enthuses on Screen Supplement

ACCORDING to Vice-President E. W. Hammons of Educational Film Corporation, interest will not lag in theatres showing the third issue of the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement and that there are seven fascinating glimpses of studios and stars that will keep photoplay audiences "at attention."

The first print of the new release has just been received at the New York office and Mr. Hammons, of that company, has written an enthusiastic letter to the managers of the twelve Educational exchanges outlining the quality of the latest issue.

The opening scene is said to be an especially fine "shot" of Universal City, and follows with views of the interesting parts of this movie town, with Priscilla Dean, in the foreground, as one of the many inhabitants. Then Mae Marsh is seen, returning, after a hard day at the studio, to her humble home on Riverside Drive, surrounded by her sisters, and her cousins and her aunts. Another "homey" scene is found in Edith Storey's cottage by the sea, a bungalow of stone, on the north shore of Long Island.

Warren Kerrigan, on a visit to the Chicago office of Photoplay, is made the subject of a bit and the same good-natured spirit is maintained in the short scene showing William Russell introducing his new cook. Then follows some exciting pictures of William and Dustin Farnum in their new high-speed motor boat.

The feature of the reel is the closing subject, the first pictures of the domestic life of Geraldine Farrar, made in her new home on West Seventy-fourth Street, in New York.

Phillips Says Subjects Are Diversified

Clarence W. Phillips, manager of the Chicago exchange of Capital Film Company, asserts that diversion is the real reason that Capital pictures have hit the popular chord among exhibitors.

"One week we read of the public being tired to death of the five-reel blood-and-thunder dramas, the eternal triangle and the problem plays," continued Mr. Phillips.

"I have been both surprised and elated over the discovery that nearly every foresighted manager is attempting to balance his program and give the public real diversion.

"The demand for this style of pictures is increasing to the extent of twenty-five customers each week."

Kyler of Denver, Gets Frohman Feature

"Once To Every Man" has been acquired by H. O. Kyler, general manager of Supreme Photoplays Corporation of Denver, for that territory.

After ascertaining that a print of this Frohman Amusement Corporation Special could not be forwarded to Denver for screening Mr. Kyler hurriedly packed his grip and made a special trip to New York to view the attraction.

He arrived in the forenoon, the production was screened for him within a few hours after his arrival, and the contract for the production signed the same day.

Arrow Sells Two for the Baltimore Territory

Among the Arrow sales of the week is reported the sale of "The Profiteer," starring Jack Sherrill and Alma Hanlon to Variety Pictures Corporation (Milton Caplon, President) of Baltimore for the states of Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia.

Mr. Caplon also purchased the five reel "Western" starring Neal Hart, which will be ready for release April 15th. The title of the picture has just been selected by Arrow officials and it will be released under the name of "When the Desert Smiled."

Houtain Finds Story for Myrtle Stedman

After extended research a story has been found suitable for Myrtle Stedman and work on her first Gray Seal Classic has just started.

"I could have given Miss Stedman an inferior story," explained George Julian Houtain, President of Gray Seal Productions, "but that would have been violating my promise to buyers, exchange men and exhibitors. Rather than do this I preferred to find the right story before commencing production I am confident that when the production is ready for screening it will be declared well worth waiting for."

The search for future Myrtle Stedman stories has already begun, and no time will be lost in preparing the several Gray Seal Classics for which she is under contract.

Rothapfel Unit Program Shows Progress

Work on the Rothapfel Unit Program is progressing very rapidly at the Bacon-Backer studio, according to an announcement by Samuel L. Rothapfel.

The comedy, conceived by Mr. Rothapfel and scenarioized by George V. Hobart, one of America's best known playwrights, has been completed. Helen Weir, who was with David Warfield in "The Music Master"; Yvonne Sheldon, of Ziegfeld Follies fame; Templar Saxe, Walter McEwen, Alex. Herbert and Eugene Acker are seen in prominent roles.

Helen Weir in Program

A prominent role in Samuel L. Rothapfel's comedy production for the first Rothapfel Unit Program is allotted to Helen Weir, who will be remembered for her portrayal of the role of "Jennie" opposite David Warfield in "The Music Master."

A title for the comedy has not been announced. George V. Hobart, the playwright wrote the script from a suggestion offered by Mr. Rothapfel. Wally Van directed with Mr. Rothapfel supervising production.

Midnight Showing for the B. S. Moss Feature

"Break the News to Mother," the B. S. Moss photoplay production directed by Julius Steger, was given a midnight private showing before a representative gathering of state rights buyers and exhibitors at the Hamilton theatre.

The title has become a household word all over the English-speaking world, being the name of a famous song by Charles K. Harris. The screen version, however, is an original story by Hugh MacNair Kahler, one of America's best known magazine writers.

The scenario is by Garfield Thompson and the photography by Andre Barlatier. The audience is declared to have been unanimous in pronouncing the photoplay as being perhaps Mr. Steger's most effective creation.

Eugene Moore Productions Is Organized

Eugene Moore now heads his own company in the producing field and will make special pictures for the independent buyers.

Mr. Moore is a veteran director of a decade ago and is said to have handled many of the foremost stars in their earlier careers.

Among the successful players to pass through his hands are Jeanne Eageles, Vincent Serrano, Gladys Hulette, Florence Labadie, Marguerite Snow, Edith Roberts, Violet MacMillan, and Baby Marie Osborne.

The officers of the new corporation are Eugene Moore, president; Harris Gordon, vice president and secretary; and George Mohr, treasurer and general manager.

The Teeth Are Filmed

A special two reeler just completed by the Industrial Department of Universal for the United Drug Company, is entitled "The Care of the Teeth."

The film is based on a story relating how many diseases result from neglecting the care of the teeth in childhood.

Ritchey Lithograph Corp. Starts Campaign

Ritchey Lithographing Corporation of New York City has recognized the commercial principles attained by the motion picture industry and is now making an aggressive campaign to establish a demand among exhibitors, particularly for a higher form of posters and lithographs.

"I feel," said Mr. Ritchey, "that my practical experience as a motion picture producer, for I was such in the early days of the industry, gives me peculiar qualifications so speak on the question of lithgraphs, as far as it applies to motion pictures.

"There is no doubt that exhibitors appreciate that a proper lithographic display on any production is bound to increase the attendance at his theatre, and that oft times a picture is either made or marred by the character of the advertising matter circulated"

Motion Pictures on First Page of Newspapers

According to the southern sales representative of Independent Sales Corporation, the first time in the history of Atlanta that motion pictures occupied space on the front pages of Atlanta dailies when Lieut. Bert Hall, American Ace, and star of Independent Sales Corporation's special release, "A Romance of the Air," made personal appearances at the Auditorium, Atlanta, in connection with the run of the picture.

A two-column cut of Lieut. Hall with two-column "write-up" appeared on the front page of the Atlanta Georgian, announcing Lieut. Hall's coming.

Ham Back with Christie

Harry Ham, who has frequently appeared in Christie Comedies, is back again, under Al E. Christie's direction, in a comedy now being produced, which also includes Dorothy De Vore, Roscoe Karns, Harry Edwards and other Christie Players.

Two Abramson Pictures Sold in Pittsburgh

Graphic Film Corporation declares that Ivan Abramson, director general of the concern, has just made one of the quickest state right sales on record.

He closed the deal for his two latest productions, "Ashes of Love" and "The Echo of Youth," with M. Schoenberg of Pittsburgh, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia in something less than one minute.

Never having met before until that moment and having to make trains in opposite directions within five minutes the entire proposition was billed down to this: Abramson: "I've got 'Ashes' and 'Echo' open for your territory. My price is so and so." Schoenberg: "They're both mine! Here's your check."

Leah Baird a Writer for the Pictures

Leah Baird is not only a well known artist, but has been very successful as a scenario writer it is said. This is not generally known, but she has served successful vehicles for many of her contemporary stars.

Many exhibitors and film fans know Miss Baird only as a screen star and her emotional work and beauty have been widely heralded. But her prolific pen has not become known generally.

Following are several of her screen stories and the stars of same who will vouch that Leah Baird can assuredly write for the photoplay public: "Kiss of Retribution," with Norma Talmadge; "The Moulding," with Anita Stewart; "A Soul in Bondage," with Earl Williams, and the "Dawn of Understanding," featuring E. K. Lincoln and directed by Ralph Ince.

Retitles Minter Film

The American Film Company, Inc., sends word that its new picture featuring Mary Miles Minter, originally announced as "The Reign of Colleen O'Malley," has been rechristened "Mary O'Rourke."

Emmy Wehlen Arrives in Hollywood

Emmy Wehlen has arrived in Los Angeles from New York to resume her work before the camera at the new Metro studios in Hollywood. She is thoroughly recovered from her recent illness and made the journey across the continent without incident, save once. That was when her Pekinese dog, "Sweetie," escaped from the baggage car at Albuquerque, New Mexico, and had to be rescued from the Hopi Indians who lend the true western atmosphere to the station.

Selznick Gives Opinion of Reissues

"The problem of the reissue, like the poor," we have always with us," says Myron Selznick, president of the Selznick Pictures Corporations.

"I would not go so far as William S. Hart," adds Mr. Selznick, "who is quoted in an interview in a magazine as saying, 'If the law doesn't put a stop to this practice of selling old products as new, a gun will.' This is drastic. I don't believe it is possible to deceive many exhibitors nowadays, even if there were a desire to do so.

"It is interesting to note, however, that the film player is the only person whose earlier efforts, improperly handled, are out of his control. A painter can destroy a picture he has painted, and a writer can refuse to permit reprinting of his books, as Rudyard Kipling did with 'Letters of Marque.' But the film once made is a permanent piece of property of the producer, for good or ill.

"The only thing left for the later producers of pictures starring a player who has been presented in unsuitable vehicles is to make his output so far superior to that of his predecessors that the exhibitor can make no mistake and there can be no possibility of confusing the one for the other. For this reason we propose to make everything that appears under the Selznick Pictures brand of a quality that will be distinctive, so that exhibitors will look for our trade mark first."

Mix Single Reelers Controlled by Jans Corp.

World rights to forty Tom Mix single reelers were secured in a deal closed last week by the Jans Distributing Corporation, with headquarters at 729 Seventh avenue.

The deal was negotiated with the Selig Polyscope Company through the Film Market, Inc. The productions will be handled on the state rights basis with Franklin Backer in charge of sales. Lobby displays, one and three sheets and other accessories will be prepared for exhibitor use.

As the ink on the contract was being blotted, eight states were closed for the entire forty single reelers—Morris Berger of Craft Film Service, 1201 Liberty avenue, Pittsburgh, bought the Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia rights, and A. C. Bromberg of the Southeastern Features Productions, Atlanta, Georgia, closed for the six Southern States.

Viola Dana on Location

In the heart of California's giant redwoods, Viola Dana and her supporting company are on location, photographing scenes for Miss Dana's forthcoming Metro production, "Madelon of the Redwoods," with Edwin Carewe directing. The company is staying at Santa Cruz, but Big Trees, six miles away, is the location used.

Employment

WE have heard a great deal about the employment of the returning soldiers.

We are going to hear more.

It is the duty of every man, who is in a position to help get these warriors settled, to put his shoulder to the wheel and push

Every man who has had a present soldier in his employ before he became a soldier should see to it that his old job or one just as good is ready when he gets back. If he can't take him back himself, as some can't, he should go out and see that a place is made elsewhere. Don't let any one say: "Well, I can't help it; his old place is filled and that's an end of it." Get out and help him—your help may mean everything.

Motion Picture News intends to do what it can but it asks cooperation from its readers—

We have offered to run WANT ADVERTISEMENTS FREE for the men who have been in the service who came from employments connected with the STAGE or MOTION PICTURES. These men will state their qualifications which may make them suitable as studio or theatre electricians, or may even allow them to take positions outside these two industries for which they are qualified. If so, and any of you know of such an opening answer the advertisement and give the man a chance.

Some of these men may be suited for studio jobs as scene painters, camera men, scene shifters, typists or otherwise fit in your organization. Remember you are helping the country by jumping in and seeing that these men are placed. You are giving tangible evidence of your patriotism.

Exchange managers will find men among those coming back who will make fine assistants, salesmen, shipping clerks, bookkeepers and otherwise help round out your organization. Keep your eyes open for them. They will come to see you, if you have a place, slide them in. Also keep your eyes on the want advertisements; they may bring to you the very man you need.

Another way in which every theatre man can help the boys is by bringing them together in the various communities and keeping their organization going and seeing to it that these clubs are run along the proper lines. For example, a theatre man is in a position where he can work for the good of the men as no one else can do. There are two big ways of doing this.

First—The theatre owner can go out into the town or community and gather together the influential men and state the needs of the men and the community. He can arrange to have these men head the proposed organization. He can then arrange for a meeting place. When this is done he can make slides to be thrown on the screen announcing the time and place of the meeting and urging all returned soldiers to be present. This will bring the business interests, big and small, linto contact with these men.

Second—The theatre man can advertise on his screen that he would like to have the names, addresses and business qualifications of all men back from the service. He can then make or have made slides giving these facts with or without the man's name and address, and asking any one in the audience who knows of a position to leave his name and the address of the opening with the name of the man to be seen. This card system may take time, but, gentlemen, it will be worth while.

I want to give every theatre man in the country an idea of what is being done for and by the 77th Division here in New York—you can do th same thing yourself in a smaller way by beginning your local organization now.

The spirit of patriotism existing among New York business men is being strikingly shown in the support which they are giving to the 77th Division Employment Bureau at No. 280 Madison avenue. This bureau was opened in cooperation with the United States Employment Service, by Major S. Fullerton Weaver, who was sent here from France by Major General Alexander, commanding "New York's Own" 77th Division, to arrange for jobs for 77th. Men and for a National Army Clubhouse in New York.

Gordon L. Sawyer, of the Federal Bureau, was detailed by Everett E. Wood, State Federal Director, to have charge of the 77th Bureau. Mr. Sawyer's first step was to send out a circular letter to 5,000 business men under whom 77th Division men worked when they entered the National Army, and who these soldiers were not sure would hire them when they returned from France. Thus far 100 answers have been received, and ninety of the business men state that they will take care of their old employes and more soldiers besides. In the other ten cases the writers state that the soldiers were not employed by them when the National Army was organized, but that they are anxious to give preference to soldiers of the 77th Division wherever possible.

Major Weaver brought with him from France a card index system showing that 21,400 of the 27,000 men in the Division are sure of jobs when they return. This left 5,600 to be taken care of. That number has since been cut down to 5,459 because 141 employers have sent word to the 77th Division Employment Bureau that each will take care of one 77th Division soldier.

The efforts of the Bureau are now being centralized on taking care of Casuals of the 77th Division—that is, soldiers who either because of wounds or sickness were sent back to New York ahead of the Division. Many of these Casuals have been taken care of, and the employment lists show that about seventy-five are seeking work. Of the seventy-five, one is a teacher, two want places as subway guards and there are wholesale dry goods clerks, specialty salesmen, firemen, iron workers, a manufacturing jeweler, who was "gassed" in battle and wants outdoor work; an accountant, chemist, stock clerks, typewriter salesmen, corset, hosiery and underwear salesmen, electricians, waiters, telegraphers, a clerk, who says he cannot work indoors because he was "gassed", an assistant buyer of ready-to-wear merchandise, a bookbinder, a creamery worker, freight traffic clerk, a commercial news reporter, a compositor and a salesman and advertising clerk.

Major Weaver has prepared a circular letter to employers outlining the labor situation in so far as discharged soldiers from other cities who are seeking employment here are concerned, and asking that the slogan, "New York jobs for New York soldiers," be adopted by New York business men. Regarding the problem of soldiers from outside points who are seeking work here, Major Weaver says in his letter:

"It is an unfortunate fact that many soldiers from various localities who, on being mustered out of service in the vicinity of New York, have preferred to remain in Greater New York rather than return to their own homes, and in securing employment here have preempted positions which would have been available to New York soldiers returning home at a later date, while the jobs waiting in communities of these out-of-town soldiers are not available to the returning soldiers resident of Greater New York."

Do these facts start you thinking? They should. It's your move.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Connecting Motor Direct to Machine

Mr. Glen Woodburn of the Iris Theatre, Pomeroy, Iowa, writes: "Motion Picture News:

"I want to take off my Powers motor drive and connect up my motor direct to the machine and control the speed by a rheostat control. I have done this before on a Simplex and used the regular motor that came on the machine, 110 volts, 60 A. C., and it worked all right. Now I was told that it would not work on a Powers motor. Please give me your opinion on this."

Reply: There is no reason why you cannot take the motor drive off and drive the machine direct from the motor. The Nicholas Power Company, however, does not advise such a move for this reason: The motor supplied with their machine runs at approximately 1700 R.P.M. To reduce this speed to the number of revolutions required in direct drive would mean a considerable power loss in rheostatic resistance. In other words your machine is now operating at its highest efficiency, and any change you make will mean more expense for current.

Questions from Providence

F. J. Brown, Providence, R. I., asks:

(1) What is meant by a five-to-one or a four-to-one intermittent movement?

(2) Why are all short focus lenses small in diameter?

Reply: (1) Take any single film picture. It is moved in front of the aperture, held there a certain length of time, then moved on again to make room for the next picture. Now, a five-to-one movement means that the time required to exchange one picture for the picture following is just 1/5 as long as the time during which the picture is held motionless before the aperture. It might also be explained in this way by saying that with a five-to-one intermittent the film is moving 1/5 of the time and is stationary the remaining 4/5.

The difference between a six-to-one, five-to-one or four-to-one movement lies entirely in the design of the cam, which is the part that drives the intermittent.

(2) Short focus lenses are not usually made of greater diameter because the excess glass would be of little use. The light rays from an arc pass through the central part of the objective, at least the greater portion of the rays. But remember this—the focus of the lens has nothing to do with its diameter. A lens of a given focus may be secured in many commercial diameters.

Bad Case of Punch Holes

Motion Picture News.

Gentlemen:—Enclosed you will find a sample of punch marks which I think are worthy of attention. The strip of film is from "Day Dreams" (Goldwyn) Reel No. 40, No. 5, five-reel feature, shown by me (the projectionist) today. As you will see, the film is in first-class condition, and the amount of punchholes in it are what we might expect were the picture used a considerable number of times. This style of punching continued throughout the five reels in the same manner, combined with other scratches and different style holes.

I could not cut out any more film, as I did not wish to spoil any part of the picture. A good remedy for such work as this is for the film exchange to issue orders to each manager of a theatre on their list to forbid the "projectionist" or reel boy or anybody else to use or have a punch in their possession that will tend to spoil his or any other make of picture.

One other way is to lend to the theatre whom you suspect a fire-reel feature free from punch-holes and then examine it closely when it returns, and they will soon find out who does the dirty work.

I have been employed at the Comedy theatre as "Projectionist" for five years and have been in the profession very near fourteen years and I can not remember ever using a punch for the purpose of mutilating a picture. If a man is careful and works right he need never worry about "change overs" or punch holes.

I hope you can land this "heart-shaped puncher."

Very truly yours, (Signed) Frederick R. Miller, Comedy Theatre, Jamaica, New York.

Answer: The strip of film submitted by Mr. Miller was 19 inches in length and contained thirty-nine heart-shaped punch holes in addition to the stencil punched by the exchange. There are many samples of punched film sent to us for examination but few have been as striking in their appearance as the one described above.

If the "heart-shaped puncher" is present will he kindly stand up, so that all may have a look at him.

The film strip is being sent to the Goldwyn studio together with the facts supplied by Mr. Miller.

Wants Examination Questions

Motion Picture News,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:

I am thinking of joining the Operators' Union. Could you give me the necessary questions or else tell me the address of the company from which I could get this information?

Sincerely, Mallard C. Zwang,
Lyric Theatre,
Sheldon, Ia.

Reply: I am sorry to say that there are no printed questions available for those wishing to join the Operators' Union. As you can readily see it would be foolish to have certain questions asked over and over again, as any one by memorizing such questions would have no trouble in passing the examination and joining the Union.

The best and only way to prepare yourself for the examination is by studying all the material you can get on the question of motion picture machines, also books on elementary electricity, and furthermore get in touch with an operator who has already passed the examination. It is probable that he would be very glad to help you out on those points which are a little difficult.

"Give the Soldiers a Chance"

THE article under the above title which appeared in the March 15 issue of the Motion Picture News was submitted by Mr. Alfred B. Werham of Massillon, O., to whom full credit should have been given. Mr. Werham by frequent communications to the Projection Department has shown a sound interest in projection problems and for this reason the omission of his name was doubly unfortunate.

Renovating Gold Fibre Screens

Mr. E. J. Bregger, Crystal Falls, Mich. asks: "Can you tell us what to use to remove spots from a gold fibre screen?"

Reply: We regret to say there is no dependable way of doing this. If the spots are not particles of dust, they can be removed only by returning the screen to the factory and having it resurfaced there. Whenever cleaning has been tried the screen has been harmed rather than improved. We would suggest, therefore, that you get in touch with the makers of your screen and arrange with them for its disposal.

Painting a Muslin Curtain

Camp Custer, January 21, 1919.

Motion Picture News, Inc.,
New York City, N. Y.

Sirs: We have a muslin curtain here and we would like to have you send us a formula for painting it.

I read in the projection department when I was operating at Hastings, Mich., about a way to do it, but I have forgotten it.

I would like to know if, when I was drafted in the army that would throw me out of the N. A. M. L. I was No. 818.

Thanking you, I am,

Lyle E. Wilcox, Pvt.,
Care of K. of C. Bldg., No. 572, Camp Custer, Mich.

Reply: After sizing your screen in the usual way, apply a coat of any of the patented white wall paints which can be purchased at any paint stores. These paints are composed principally of calcimine and have given fine satisfaction as screen surfaces. There are many formulas which have been "discovered" by makers of home-made screens, but a standard preparation is cheaper in the end, besides being easier to prepare.

If you are now operating you are still a member of the N. A. M. L. Simply keep us posted on your change of address so that any important N. A. M. L. matter will reach you without trouble.

Sixty-three Shows Every Six Days

With the photograph which we reproduce herewith, Mr. Bemis (the man in the center) sent the following note:

"I have been here at Camp Lee since May 30, 1918, where I am employed as a motion picture machine and film supervisor. It is some job. I have twenty machines to look after and turn out sixty-three shows a week (six days) at Y. M. C. A. buildings. Enclosed find a photo of carpenter, movie man and machinist.

"I guess you will remember me from Hudson County Local I. A., No. 384.

"With best wishes,

"W. A. Bemis, Film Supervisor,
"Care of Y. M. C. A. Adm. Bldg., Camp Lee, Va."

Important Notice!

Simplex Mechanism No. 4283 and Intermittent No. 4269 have been stolen from S. Epstein's Majestic theatre, 2424 Kensington avenue, Philadelphia. A New Animated Advertising Device

W. G. KIRBY, who has been a motion picture operator for 15 years, the last five of which he has been with C. H. Miles in the Orpheum theatre of Detroit, has lately perfected a device that is described as the last word in advertising for a theatre. After studying the means of advertising on the screen for several years, Mr. Kirby has evolved a device that can be attached to any projecting machine in a few minutes. The device projects the advance billing on the screen in an animated fashion and it is so unusual that the spectators are struck with the originality of the idea while being informed of the coming attractions and other notices. In a few moments a ribbon with the desired lettering can be made. A limited number are to be placed in the Michigan territory.

As soon as more details are obtained from the inventor of the above device, it will be fully described in the Theatre Equipment Section of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. The editors intend to present a readable description of every new device pertaining to motion picture houses, as soon as information on which to base the description is received.

Western Simplex Distributors Expand

MESSRS. DUTTON AND DOUGLASS, two husaling executives of the Exhibitors Supply Company, distributers for Simplex in Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin, were in New York last week on a business trip and included in their itinerary a tour of inspection of the Simplex factory.

They report that the sales of Simplex Projectors is so heavy since the let-up of war hostilities and the clearing up of the "flu" epidemic that they are forced to move to large quarters for their main office in Chicago, and are about to locate in the Famous Players-Lasky Building at 845 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago. The rapid advancement made by the Exhibitors Supply Company since the inception of this progressive concern in 1915 is the real indication of the type of its energetic officials. Starting at that time with a limited floor space of three hundred feet, this concern grew so rapidly that before the first year had ended it was necessary to seek larger quarters, which were located in the fifth floor of the Mallers Building, where six hundred square feet of space was available and quite necessary. By the following January the volume of business again required large quarters and two additional rooms in the same building were taken. Meanwhile, branch offices had been established at 157 North Illinois Street, Indianapolis, and 204 Manhattan Building, Milwaukee.

At the new quarters the entire second floor of the Famous Players building has been taken and the general offices, sales rooms and sales offices will be located here, using the present headquarters for a supply base.

It might be noted that the untiring efforts of Messrs. Dutton, Douglass and Lincoln resulted in the Simplex machine being used exclusively in the "loop" section of Chicago, and while somewhat modest by nature, Mr. Dutton enthusiastically claims that outside of the 100 per cent "loop" section, Chicago is at the present writing 90 per cent Simplex and still gaining.

Chemical Fog

By J. I. Crabtree

(Cntinued from last week)

Substitutes for Potassium Salts

In view of the present scarcity of potassium salts and their greater expense as compared with sodium salts, the question arises as to what extent they can be replaced by salts of sodium or ammonium.

As a general rule, for photographic purposes, a potassium salt can be replaced by a sodium salt weight for weight, the error caused by the difference in molecular weight of the two salts being usually negligible. There are many exceptions, however, where there is a difference in the physical properties of the two salts for example, potassium carbonate and sodium bichromate are deliquescent, while sodium carbonate and potassium bichromate are not.

Substitution in Developing Formulae

1. The Developing Agent

As a general rule it is not possible to replace one developing agent by another and obtain a developer with identical properties, because each developing agent has its own characteristics as regards rate of development, fog, color of image produced, etc. In some cases, however, a close approximation can be made, for example by substituting Elon by kodelon (or paramidophenol) providing the developer is sufficiently dilute to permit of sufficient paraminophenol being dissolved. This applies either to an all Elon or an Elon-hydroquinone formula.

If in an Elon-hydroquinone (or E-H) formula paraminophenol is substituted for the Elon and the activity of the developer is increased by the addition of alkali, the effect of the alkali is proportionately greater on the hydroquinone than on the paramidophenol so that a rapid hard working developer is obtained. To avoid this, proportionally more paramidophenol is required than if Elon is used.

2. The preservative

It is now customary to substitute sodium bisulphite for potassium metabisulphite weight by weight, though in a plain fixing bath-sodium bisulphite has a slightly greater tendency to produce sulphurization than the potassium salt.

The question is often asked as to the difference in action between sodium sulphite and sodium bisulphite. Sodium bisulphite may be considered as a compound of sodium sulphite and sulphurous acid, and therefore reacts acid, while sodium sulphite is alkaline so that in the case of a two-solution pyro formula where the pyro A solution is preserved with oxalic acid or sodium bisulphite, an equal weight of sodium sulphite would not preserve so well since pyro oxidizes much more readily in alkaline than in acid solution.

In the case of a one-solution developer containing, say, sodium sulphite, sodium bisulphite and sodium carbonate, the bisulphite is converted to sulphite by the sodium carbonate according to the following equation:

Sodium Bisulphite+Sodium Carbonate=Sodium Sulphite+Sodium Bicarbonate so that a corresponding amount of sodium sulphite might just as well have been added in the first place. Sodium bisulphite also neutralizes or destroys an equivalent amount of sodium carbonate thus reducing the proportion of alkali and therefore exerts an apparent restraining action, while the developer apparently keeps longer because some of the carbonate has been destroyed. The relative amounts of the different salts which produce the same preserving action is given in the following table:

Sodium Sulphite	1.0 parts
Sodium Bisulphite	0.83 parts
Potassium Metabisulphite	0.88 parts

For a two-solution developer therefore use sodium bisulphite, but in the case of a single solution developer containing alkali use sodium sulphite, because in this case no advantage is gained by using a mixture of sulphite and bisulphite.

3. The alkali

The common alkalis are the carbonates and hydroxides of sodium, potassium or ammonium. Substances like acetone, tribasic sodium phosphate, borax, and amines are occasionally used but will not be considered here.

When sodium carbonate is dissolved in water a small proportion of it reacts with the water forming caustic soda and sodium bicarbonate; this is called hydrolysis though only a small portion of the carbonate is hydrolyzed at any moment. As the caustic soda formed is used up in development, more carbonate hydrolyses so that we can consider that carbonate acts as a reservoir of caustic alkali. If in the first place a solution of caustic soda was used of the same alkalinity as the carbonate this would soon be used up. The use of carbonate therefore enables us to use a small concentration of alkali and yet keep it constant during development.

It is rarely possible therefore to replace caustic alkalis by carbonated alkalis such as sodium or potassium carbonate.

Potassium carbonate is slightly more active than sodium carbonate in solution because it hydrolyses to a greater extent. For developing motion picture film on a reel when the developer may splash on the floor, potassium carbonate cannot be substituted by sodium carbonate since, because of the deliquescent nature of potassium carbonate, the splashes of solution remain moist thus preventing the formation of carbonate dust in the air.

Caustic soda and caustic potash may be replaced weight for weight in most formulae.

Ammonia and ammonium carbonate are seldom used in developers on account of the odor and the fact that they tend to cause dichroic fog.

Desiccated and Crystal Sodas

Sodium carbonate and sodium sulphite are often supplied in two forms: Crystals and the desiccated or dry variety, which is sometimes called anhydrous because it does not contain water of crystallization.

Desiccated sodas possess the advantage that they occupy less than half the bulk of the crystals, while desiccated sodium sulphite is much less liable to oxidation by the air than the crystalline variety.

The sodas should be substituted as follows:

1 part by weight of sodium carbonate (desiccated) for 3 parts by weight of the crystals.

1 part by weight of sodium sulphite (desiccated) for two parts by weight of the crystals.

4. The Restrainer

Potassium bromide may be substituted by an equal weight of sodium bromide. Ammonium bromide should not be used in a developer because the alkali liberates ammonia gas and this tends to produce diachroic fog as above.

SUBSTITUTION IN THE FIXING BATH

Sulphites and Bisulphites

The same remarks apply as to preservatives in the developer.

Alums

An alum is a compound or double salt of aluminum sulphate or chromium sulphate with either sodium, potassium or ammonium sulphate. The hardening action is only produced by the aluminum or chromium sulphate, so that equivalent weights of aluminum sulphate and of sodium, potassium, or ammonium alum should exert the same hardening action.

As a result of a series of practical tests by the author the following conclusions have been drawn:

(a) Equivalent amounts of potash alum and aluminum sulphate exert the same hardening action, two parts by weight of aluminum sulphate, being equivalent to three parts by weight of potash alum. Commercially pure aluminum sulphate is satisfactory if this does not contain an excess of iron, though if the sample is acid the solution should be neutralized with ammonia. When mixing the usual liquid hardener formula with commercial aluminum sulphate, a slight milky suspension is formed which should be allowed to settle and filtered off.

(b) There is no appreciable difference between sodium, potassium and ammonium alum in their hardening action when substituted weight for weight in the usual formulae. In practice, if any difference in hardening action occurs, this is due to the use of impure alums, in which case, providing the impurities are harmless, an increased amount of the alum should be used so that its content of aluminum sulphate is the same as that in the potash alum called for by the particular formula.

When using ammonium alum, if the fixing bath becomes alkaline by virtue of a neutralization of the acid by the developer carried over, ammonia will be liberated resulting in the production of dichroic fog and stain. No trouble will be experienced, however, if care is taken to keep the bath acid.

Pure chrome alum may also be substituted for potash alum, as above, though it has a slightly greater tendency to precipitate sulphur than potash alum. It has the advantage, however, that it does not form a basic sulphite as rapidly as potash alum so that a chrome alum fixing bath remains clear even when appreciably alkaline.

Acids

The most commonly used acids are acetic, citric, tartaric, and sometimes lactic acid. Strong acids like sulphuric are seldom used because of the great tendency to liberate sulphur. Weeker acids like the above bear the same relation to a strong acid as a carbonated alkali to a caustic alkali, that is they act as a reservoir of acid, so that only a small proportion of the acid is available for reaction in solution at any one time.

Acetic acid is usually supplied in two strengths, glacial (98%) and 28% acid, so that one volume of glacial acid is equivalent to three and a half volumes of 28% acid.

Citric and tartaric may be substituted weight for weight and when used in place of acetic, substitute in the ratio of one gram of citric for every 3 ccs. of 28% acetic acid.

However these acids are not quite so satisfactory as acetic because for a given degree of acidity as measured by the amount of alkaline developer which can be added to the fixing bath before the bath becomes neutral, citric and tartaric acids have a greater tendency to precipitate sulphur from the hypo than acetic acid.

PURITY OF CHEMICALS

The Water Supply

Water is the most important chemical used in photography, and it is therefore important to know to what extent the impurities present may be harmful to the various operations and how these impurities may be removed.

Excluding distilled water, rain water, and water from melted ice or snow, the following impurities may be present:

1. Dissolved salts such as bicarbonates, chlorides, and sulphates of calcium, magnesium, sodium and potassium. In case calcium salts are present and a developing formula is used containing sodium bisulphite or potassium metabisulphite, fine needle-shaped crystals of calcium sulphite are apt to separate out in the developer as a sludge on standing. The sludge is harmless if allowed to settle though the developer is robbed of sulphite to the extent of the amount required to form the sludge. If the developer is agitated, the sludge will cause trouble by setting out on the emulsions of plates, films, etc. Other salts have usually little effect on a developer although chlorides and bromides exert a restraining action.

Dissolved salts often cause trouble by crystallizing on the film after drying, and although not always visible as crystals to the eye, they detract from its transparency.

2. Suspended matter in the form of dirt and iron rust, which if not filtered or allowed to settle will cause spots.

3. Slime, consisting of animal or vegetable colloidal matter and which is not removed by filtering. If such water is used for mixing solutions, the colloidal matter gradually coagulates and settles out in the solution as a sludge.

4. Dissolved gases such as air, sulphuretted hydrogen, etc. Water dissolves about 2% of air at 70° F. and when a developing agent like hydroquinone is dissolved without the addition of sulphite, the oxygen present in the water combines with the developing agent forming an oxidation product which will cause chemical fog.

Sulphuretted hydrogen gas will also cause bad chemical fog, but the gas may be removed by boiling or by precipitation with lead acetate.

PURIFICATION OF WATER

Water may be purified as follows:

1. By distillation: Distilled water should be used whenever possible for mixing solutions.

2. By boiling: This coagulates the colloidal matter and changes certain lime salts to the insoluble condition which then settle out, while dissolved gases such as air, sulphuretted hydrogen, etc., are removed. Therefore, unless the water contains an excessive amount of dissolved salts it is usually sufficient to boil the water and allow it to settle.

3. By chemical treatment: If large quantities of water are required, chemical methods of purification must be employed, though it is only possible to remove lime salts, slime and colloidal matter in this way.

Excessive amounts of dissolved lime salts are very objectionable, because after washing if drops of water are allowed to remain on the plates or film, when the water evaporates the dissolved salts in the water become visible as a white scum.

The following methods of chemical purification may be adopted:

a. Add alum to the water in the proportion of one gram to four liters. This coagulates the slime which carries down any suspended particles, and the solution rapidly clears. This method does not remove dissolved salts, while the small amount of alum introduced into the water has no harmful effect on the developer.

b. Add a solution of sodium oxalate until no further precipitate forms. This method removes the calcium and magnesium salts and coagulates the slime, though sodium and potassium salts are left in solution.

c. Most of the commercial methods of water softening may be employed though such methods do not remove sodium and potassium salts.

The "Decalso" process of water softening is one which can be recommended. The water is passed through a tank containing sodium aluminum silicate which is a Zeolite, and possesses the power of exchanging its sodium for the calcium and magnesium present in the water. When the Zeolite thus loaded with calcium and magnesium is washed in a strong solution of common salt (sodium chloride) it exchanges the calcium and magnesium again for sodium and is thus regenerated, and is in a condition for further softening. Full particulars may be obtained from the American Water Softening Company, 1011 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Impurities in Developing and Fixing Chemicals

It is beyond the scope of the present article to indicate all the possible impurities which may be present in photographic chemicals. For a more detailed account the reader is referred to the paper by H. T. Clarke on "The Examination of Organic Developing Agents" (Phot. J. Amer., Nov. 1918, p. 481), which contains a number of analyses of developers recently placed on the market under fancy names and containing such substances as starch, sugar, salt, borax, etc.

In this article we are only concerned with the impurities usually present in chemicals which are not intentionally added as adulterants.

Impurities may have access to photographic chemicals in three ways: (a) during manufacture, (b) during storage, (c) during mixing and storage of the solution.

(a) If chemicals of repute are purchased, the photographer need not worry about impurities.

If the elon, hydroquinone or pyro is colored, the presence of fogging agents should be suspected, although some colored samples do not give any more fog than colorless ones.

Cue Sheets Latest Hits — Music — Musical Equipment

What is Music to the Motion Picture?

IT is hardly necessary to emphasize that a printed page full of music is not music. It only carries the signs that point the way. The piano untouched is only a piece of furniture. The violin unstrung is dead. The cornet but a bit of twisted brass. The organ an unknown volume of secrecy. All are next to nothing. All are non-essentials until touched by a hand and guided by the spirit of music. The child is guided by the mother's song. The heart is warmed by familiar melodies. The home brightens with songs of the past. The church vibrates with consecrated tones, which soften into heart throbs as they penetrate the soul. Music puts vigor into marching troops. It forces tears into a strange spectator's eyes at the sight of a passing funeral. It speaks the words of love to golden youth. It even guides the mountain shepherd and his flock. It is a story of eternal life. It is joy, sorrow and death.

What is a Motion Picture? It is expressing the sorrows of the world. It is bringing joy to our generations. It travels with us from the icelands of the North to the deserts of the South. It shows us the crosses on France's fields. It shows us everything —but we cannot hear the tramping of the marching troops. It cannot speak to us about the secrets of the hidden world. It is mute. It is an unstrung violin. It is an untouched organ. Where is the spirit that can guide it to reality?

It is the spirit of the music. It is the vigor of the martial sounds that makes us hear what we see. It is the sentimento of the cello that tells a story of a mournful past. It is the Waltz, the Trot, the One-Step that makes us dance wih the screen. It is the "Silver Threads Among the Gold" that puts tears into mother's eyes. It is "My Country 'Tis of Thee" that keeps us thinking as Americans." It is "Home Sweet Home" that makes us hear the voice of our dearest. It is the power of the sound that speaks to us in every language. It speaks the tongue of the praying Arab on the field of Mecca. It tells us the story of the world we do not know—We never heard of. It speaks our language no matter where it is residing. We hear our boys singing songs of home. We hear them come. We see them go. We live, we see, we hear and feel, because Music is the Master. Who was it first who said "Music is non-essential to the Motion Picture?"

Two New Novelettes Issued

AMONG the many recent new issues which have been announced by the House of Sam Fox, of Cleveland, Ohio, there are two instrumental numbers which are worthy of special mention.

"Carnations," by Fred G. Albers, is the newest addition to their famous Flower Series. It is a pretty little gavotte conceived along similar lines to Mr. Albers' former success, "Basket of Roses." "Carnations" is at once fascinating and melodious and is characterized by a swinging rhythmic tempo.

Walter E. Miles, the composer of the famous "Sparklets," offers, in his newest composition, "Butterfly Dance," a bright, pleasing little novelette, written in that typical and characteristic Miles style. Surely no other composer can give us novelettes of such character and melody as can this very successful young writer. The number is as dainty and as bright as the name implies; it is truly a "Butterfly Dance."

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Tears" (of love) is a world beater. It cleaned up in a big production recently. The general verdict is "It will be the 1919 hit." Try it over and you will know why. It will haunt you. (J. W. Stern & Co., 101 W. 38th St., N. Y.)

2—"Shot and Shell" is declared by people who know, to be the best of all the home-coming songs. No, it's not a war song—nor a peace song neither. It's the musical expression of what the whole world is discussing—of what concerns us and YOU. In other words, it's the PSYCHOLOGICAL SONG OF THE MOMENT. (J. W. Stern.)

3—"My Chocolate Soldier Sammy Boy"—one-step. A rapid-fire, ripping, rollicking one-step—a regular knockout. (J. H. Remick, 217 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

4—"You Don't Know"—Another new one by Lee S. Roberts. It's going to be a regular hit. (Remick & Co.)

5—"My Cairo Love," fox-trot, by J. S. Zamecnik. An Egyptian serenade also published as a concert number. An exquisite Oriental melody, originally conceived for concert use and now published as a fox-trot, and as such, it has won immediate popularity. You will have many calls for it this season, as it has become a favorite in hotel, theatre and dramatic circles. (Sam Fox, Cleveland, Ohio.)

7—"Salvation Lassie of Mine," by Caddigan & Story. The Doughboy's tribute to the Doughgirl—the Lass of the Doughnut. It's a big ballad hit. Waltz. (Feist Edition, 249 W. 40th St., N. Y.)

8—"You Can Have It, I Don't Want It"—A fox-trot of the foxiest kind. It will guarantee encores every time. (McKinley Music Co., 147 W. 45th St., N. Y.)

9—"Yankee Tars," by John Boulton. One of the most inspiring American Navy march with excerpts from famous sea song. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.)

10—"At Twilight," by Ernest S. Golden. A beautiful romance of exceptional musical conception; a number equally effective for concert or theatre. (Belwin, Inc.)

11—"Norma," by Ernest Luz. An original melodious waltz, consisting of four double movements, with complete coda and finale, exceptionally suited for theatre, concert or dance. (Belwin, Inc.)

12—"Tragic Suite"—What greater composers than Mozart or Gottschalk could be offered as a combination in a classic suite? "Adagio" and "Cradle Song" contained in the Tragic Suite have never been published before for orchestra and musicians will find these two numbers musical gems. (Belwin, Inc.)

Everything the Showman Needs on Every Picture Released

The Complete Plan Book

Compiled by Peter Milne

Pictures Reviewed in Advance

[In addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under his heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

Two Outing-Chesters

LYMAN HOWE tints are injected in Outing-Chester Pictures beginning with the fifth and sixth subjects, just released. The photography is very clear in these scenics and the laboratory work with the improved color effects seems to bring the beautiful mountains, valleys and rivers right to your feet.

And there are many thrills in both subjects. Also an amusing thread of light comedy which naturally tends to make each patron in the audience feel that they are part and parcel of a personally conducted excursion through the wilds.

A sort of running story in scenics is a novel idea, and this is what Katharine Hilliker manages to convey in the many descriptive inserts. Subject Number 5 is entitled "Guided and Miss Guided," and pictures a jaunt into the Canadian Rockies covering the Lake Louise region, showing the Swiss village of Edelweiss and the climbing of Mt. Lafroy, as the climax. A determined young lady in knickerbockers accompanies the climbers and cheerfully accepts all the bruises undoubtedly accumulated in her hazardous trip.

Subject Number 6—"A Waswanipae Week-End"—shows some real thrills when the Indians shoot the various swift running rapids. No portaging for them. They tempt the perils of the falls in a wonderful close-up which should bring an exquisite shudder to even the most blase. The wind-up is an Indian village in the James Bay region of Canada. One-reel subject every week. Released through First National exchanges except in a very few territories.—Tom Hamlin.

"Well I'll Be ———"

(Vitagraph—Two-Reel Comedy, with Larry Semon)

"JUST about the cleverest combination of a western serial episode burlesqued and an uproarious comedy," is the way one observer summed "Well I'll Be ———" up as he left the projecting room. This two-reeler, the first in Larry Semon's new special series for Vitagraph, is all of that—which is another way of saying that as far as comedy goes it is A1.

Semon has a style all his own. He does not imitate. He is unique both in makeup and in action and business. He plays the clown in this comedy to perfection. He is the court jester to a t. If we were a king we would have Semon wield the fool's baton. He can handle it with as much art as a musical director wields his. His art as a director lies in contrast, in this picture at least. In one of those "typical" bad man towns he introduces himself as the timid sheriff. And he is timid. The constant contrast between the sheriff and the bad, bad men of the municipality makes for the most in comedy.

As a comedian Semon's art lies in accepting the perfectly ridiculous situations as the most natural things in the world. Thus when his hat is blown from his head by the villains he arises from his bed, dons his hat and marches from the door (the only remaining piece of carpentry of the entire building) as if nothing had happened. He is serious to the extreme; that is real art in comedy.

Lucille Zintheo is about the best looking comedienne that we have seen in short subjects. She has a pretty face, a pretty figure and talent. What more can be said?—Peter Milne.

"Captain Kidd, Jr.," with Mary Pickford

(Artcraft—Directed by William D. Taylor)

You had to wait quite a long time for a new Mary Pickford picture, but when "Captain Kidd, Jr." gets around to you, you will be more than repaid for that wait, because it will, no doubt, give excellent satisfaction to all tastes. To begin with, the story is interesting, then follows the fact that clean and wholesome comedy is its predominating element. This comedy is caused, not only by the situations, but also by the cleverly written subtitles. But what will cause most of the laughs is a parrot, who is made to swear successfully, as an old experienced hand at the game, and in general say lots of funny things.

The story depicts a little clean love affair. The young hero's uncle dies, leaving a chart, denoting where treasure is buried, and a letter, instructing him to go and dig for it. The chart with the letter, by chance, fall in the hands of the heroine, who returns it to the owner. They both decide to go together in quest of the treasure. They reach the spot, and, after much digging, they find the box; but, instead of gold, they find a letter giving the young man nothing but advice. In the end, however, the hero finds out that he is really an heir to some fortune; and as he now loves the heroine, being in turn loved by her, they become engaged.

The acting of the star is as good as ever; the character of Willie, the young hero, is cleverly delineated by Robert Gordon; the supporting cast is excellent, Victor Potel, the well known tall former Essanay Comedian, in particular, making a very comical rural constable. Release date not yet announced. Length, 5 reels.—P. S. HARRISON.

What have you to offer?

Young man, 5 years experienced as manager in large New York theatre. Can deliver the goods. Honorably discharged from army.

"EXPERIMENTAL MARRIAGE"—SELECT

Stage Play Successfully Turned Into Film Drama

AS is well known, it is not always that a successful stage play can be turned into a successful picture, for various reasons. " Experimental Marriage," based on the stage play " Saturday to Monday," by William J. Hurlbut, is one of those exceptions in which the attempt is successful. It couldn't help but give satisfaction, because, for one thing, it holds the interest, for another, it creates good hearty laughs. In fact, it may well be considered as good a picture as any in which Miss Constance Talmadge has ever appeared.

The foundational idea of the plot is rather odd. It is a contract marriage of the two principals, binding them to consider themselves as husband and wife only from Saturday to Monday, the acts of either not being subject to criticism from the other party during the remainder of the week. But woman will always be woman, as his wife, heroine of the story, through jealousy, becomes dissatisfied with the agreement and demands its cancellation so that they may be husband and wife all the time.

The picture is free from any suggestion; it should give good satisfaction to all, especially to high class neighborhoods.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ——— theatre have long since accepted Constance Talmadge as one of their prime favorites. Her long line of Select pictures have established her firmly. The management takes great pleasure in announcing, therefore, that included in the coming attractions scheduled for exhibition at the ——— theatre, is " Experimental Marriage," Miss Talmadge's latest comedy. Adapted from William J. Hurlbut's play, " Saturday to Monday," this picture presents the story of a young widow, spirited and charming, who, unwilling to " bind " herself again by matrimonial ties, decides to frame her own marriage contract and be a wife from Saturday to Monday only—a free woman the rest of the time. There are humorous complications galore when the husband, selected as one of the principals of this experiment, decides to teach his wife a lesson. Miss Talmadge and her leading man, Harrison Ford, render a brace of delightful performances.

PRESS NOTICE

The latest Select picture starring Constance Talmadge and entitled " Experimental Marriage " will be the feature attraction on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— ——— week. This is an adaptation of a play by William J. Hurlbut and has as its central character a charming young widow, Suzanne Ercoll by name, who doesn't quite like the idea of entering into matrimony again even though she does love Foxcroft Grey, who has proposed. So Suzanne hits upon what she believes to be a clever idea. They will be married, conventionally enough, but the marriage contract will bind them only from Saturday to Monday of each week. From Monday to Saturday, this means they will be as free as all single folk.

Now this plan doesn't appeal to Foxcroft Grey in the least. He loves Suzanne and he wants her for his wife and he doesn't want any freak strings atached to the proposition. But wise lawyer that he is, he sees a way out and decides to accept Suzanne's plan. And so they are married! This point is usually the windup in the careers of screen characters, but it is only the beginning of the careers of Suzanne and Foxcroft. How Suzanne's plan worked out (?), how her husband abided by the contract to the letter and how finally things came to such a climax that the young wife decided that the old folks who made the marriage laws knew something about marriage after all, are events which make a photoplay of the most delightfully humorous situations.

Miss Talmadge again has as her leading man the popular Harrison Ford, while others in the cast are Walter Hiers, Raymond Hatton, Vera Sisson, Edythe Chapman and Maym Kelso.

THE STORY

Suzanne, a charming young woman, hasn't been a widow very long when she receives an offer of marriage from Foxcroft Grey, a lawyer. Suzanne loves Grey, but hates the idea of surrendering her freedom through the conventional marriage ties. As a result she proposes to Grey that they sign a marriage contract under which the service will bind them as man and wife from Saturday to Monday, but which will permit them perfect freedom from Monday to Saturday. Grey is loathe to do this, but sees that it is the only way of winning Suzanne. The plan is put through and when Monday morning arrives, the wily husband, though he hates to lose his wife, shows no emotion about doing so. This worries Suzanne and she determines to keep a watchful eye on Grey.

In the apartment above Grey's queer things have been going on. Dot Harrington has foolishly accepted a dare to visit one Charlie Hamilton after a late dance. It's a bachelor apartment and the superintendent is very strict about permitting ladies to enter. They appeal to Grey in their predicament and, in endeavoring to get Dot away, the cards are shuffled and she lands in his apartment, just as Suzanne returns. She is very much disturbed about it all, but Grey offers no explanation, as according to the terms of the marriage contract, he is free to do what he wants during this period.

Very much peeved Suzanne decides to play the same game and proceeds to visit one Arthur Bernard, a mutual friend. Grey arrives and finds her there but, seeing through the scheme, puts up no rumpus whatsoever as she had expected. A few more such complications and Suzanne is convinced that she prefers the old, conventional marriage contract to any one of her own making.

SUGGESTIONS

The manner in which the Constance Talmadge pictures are going leaves no room for doubt that they constitute what is probably the most successful series of pictures available on the market today. The pleasing personality of the star, the light, original and somewhat spicy character of the stories, the support, the settings, all these meritorious qualities have long since become known to your public if you have played the previous Constance Talmadge pictures. Then in announcing the new one, " Experimental Marriage," all that you should really need is a line to the effect that Constance is the star. Doubtless this will bring the people to the doors. In other words the star's name has come to mean a certain type of entertainment. Select has brought her name to count for something in a certain line, something of the best. They offer you the best selling argument in her name alone.

Certainly, however, with the case of " Experimental Marriage " the company has provided you with a title that will make them sit up and take notice. It is mysterious, you wonder what it means. " Experimental Marriage "—something unheard of. Display it then as prominently as possible. Give it as much prominence as you do the star's name if possible. And any descriptive advertising that you do should carry out the suggestion of spice—of something naughty but nice—that is implied by this title. The catch lines elsewhere on this page have been written with this end in view. See if they won't fit. And naturally in your pictures or sketches that you employ in the advertisements the same note of smartness, implying that the picture is high, brilliant, sparkling comedy should be incorporated.

In your supporting cast there is Harrison Ford who has been prominent in all the Constance Talmadge pictures. Of course he has collected a following too. Mention him then. There are other prominent members of the screen profession in the cast. One or more of them may be individually popular in your neighborhood. Look over the cast and find out.

CATCH LINES

Suzanne didn't like the old fashioned marriage laws—they didn't give one enough latitude—freedom, and so she drew up a contract wherein it stated that from Saturday to Monday she would be married, but from Monday to Saturday she would be single! The consequences are startling and humorous. See them in Constance Talmadge's latest Select picture, " Experimental Marriage."

She wanted to be married from Saturday to Monday of each week and unmarried the rest of the time! But she became suspicious when her husband agreed to the proposition! And then she found another woman in his apartment! She had never bargained for that, no inded! But see " Experimental Marriage," it's Constance Talmadge's latest Select picture and you know how good it must be with that spicy plot.

Hint to Husbands: Don't ever let your wife think you're the least bit jealous and you'll win out. Foxcroft Grey followed this plan in " Experimental Marriage " and Suzanne just had to give in.

"THOU SHALT NOT"—FOX

Should Satisfy Fans Who Patronize This Type

AS all past Fox contributions featuring Evelyn Nesbit, this one also deals with the sex question, except that, in this instance, it is innocence betrayed instead of the usual disgrace brought upon the heroine through the force of circumstances. She meets the young city man and they fall in love. The father objects to her marrying him, therefore, he induces her to run away with him to the city. There he persuades her to live as his wife, falsely promising that he will soon have the marriage ceremony performed. Finally he tires of her and bids her go.

The minister from the home town, who always loved the heroine, comes to the city to seek her. He finds and persuades her to return to her dying mother. Father and mother receive her with open arms. The minister attempts to reinstate her into the church, but his congregation revolts and a big row results. In the end, he marries her and they leave town.

Although the sixth reel appears more or less as an exaggeration, the picture on the whole should satisfy those of picturegoers who are attracted by this star and the kind of photoplays in which she appears. Women, in particular, will sympathize with the role of the heroine, just because she is the innocent victim. Miss Nesbit's acting helps a great deal to put this picture over. It is more flexible, and more human than that of any of her past contributions.—Released March 23.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Ruth	Evelyn Nesbit
Her father	Ned Burton
Her mother	Florida Kingsley
Alec Peters	Gladden James
The minister	Crawford Kent
A rural swain	Eddie Lawrence

Scenario and Direction by Charles J. Brabin.

PRESS NOTICE

"Thou Shalt Not," a Fox picture starring Evelyn Nesbit will be the piece de resistance of the bill at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. As written and produced by Charles Brabin, this picture tells the story of a popular small town girl, the very apple of her father's eye, who came under the influence of Alec Peters, a member of the shiftless element of the town. Though she was a reigning belle in her own circles, Ruth capitulated to the soft words of Peters and, when her father and mother remonstrated with her, she left her home and went with the man she loved to the city.

Here Ruth's course followed that laid down by many another innocent in the big city. After a short time she was deserted by Peters and forced on the very streets. But there was a minister from her home town whose creed it was to practice that which he preached and it was due him that Ruth returned to the town that had gloried in the girl before. Her reception there, her pitiful plea to be taken back in the graces of the folk that previously called her friend, the final denunciation of his hypocritical congregation by the minister,—these are events that conclude the photoplay in a sequence of dramatically powerful scenes.

Miss Nesbit lends herself to the steller role admirably and plays it with sincere feeling and deep appreciation. The producers have surrounded her with a particularly competent supporting cast included in which are Crauford Kent as the minister and Gladden James as the betrayer. Mr. Brabin believes that the theme of "Thou Shalt Not" is the most appealing and forceful that he has ever handled and judging from advance reports he is quite correct in his opinion.

Ruth was the reigning belle of Bedford, a little New England village. No party, large or small, was complete without her. She was the pride of all the inhabitants, not the least of her father and mother, who though strict to the letter in every way, shared the girl's delight in her popularity. Then one day Ruth, as she was passing the station, came face to face with Alec Peters. Peters was only a brakeman on the railroad but brakeman or no, he had a way with him and before many more meetings Ruth was completely captivated. Her stern father remonstrated and told her that he knew better than she what company she should keep. It was to no avail. In the end after a stormy scene, she left her home and went to Peters for protection. And all the protection she got was a promise of marriage after they reached the city.

But there was no ceremony forthcoming after many weeks of it in the new place and eventually Peters cast her off. There in the city, alone, disillusioned, Ruth went the way of scores of others. At length she was found by the Bedford minister, who urged her to return for her mother's sake. And she did, though with certain fears that she could not regain her old place in the heart of the town. Her fears were realized. Though they listened to the minister's gospel, his sermon to forgive the Magdalene even as He had forgiven, they could not. And so the minister tendered his resignation rather than serve the bigoted. Taking Ruth with him he left the church and the town of Bedford behind him.

CATCH LINES

When it came to an actual carrying out of a religious principle, the minister was ready—but his congregation? It could not practice what he preached. But he defied public opinion and went his bidden way. See the dramatic "Thou Shalt Not," now at the M——— theatre.

Do you know what happens to girls who mysteriously drop out of sight? The papers carry reports of such cases every once in a while. Nothing is heard of them, very seldom do they reappear. But Ruth came back and told her story. And where was the promised sympathy of her friends? See "Thou Shalt Not."

From Belle of a little New England village to the streets of New York!

Many that are with sin take part in a stoning. The citizens of Bedford "stoned" Ruth because she had fallen and returned repentant. But were they capable to judge? Were their own records clear? See "Thou Shalt Not."

The story of a girl who loved not wisely but too well—a story done with tremendous effect—see "Thou Shalt Not."

A minister renounced his pulpit because his congregation was of little faith.

PROGRAM READER

A story of a modern Magdalene is presented in "Thou Shalt Not," a Fox feature shortly to be seen at the ——— theatre. Written and produced by Charles Brabin and starring Evelyn Nesbit, this picture promises to be one of the most powerful that the management has had the pleasure in presenting for some time. Mr. Brabin himself considers that it surpasses in strength, moral force and sustained drama "The Stoning," a three-reel Edison picture, which he produced some years ago and which was given special notice by various societies throughout the country. "Thou Shalt Not" contains somewhat the same idea as "The Stoning" only the modern technique of the director has endowed it with considerably more in strength and appeal than was possible in the earlier days of picture production. Miss Nesbit is seen to appealing advantage in the principal part while Crauford Kent and Gladden James are prominent in her support.

SUGGESTIONS

The story of "Thou Shalt Not," as can be gleaned from a reading of the synopsis, is one of the oldest favored by the picture producer. In fact, its source goes all the way back to the New Testament. However, it has proven one of the most appealing of all plots and as handled here it certainly makes the strongest picture in which Miss Nesbit has appeared. In advertising the picture bring out as forcefully as possible just what the story is—of a modern Magdalene who endeavored to live down her shame.

The statement of this fact alone will arouse considerable interest and if you reinforce it with suitable pictures or drawings and with some PAPER:—Two 1-sheets, two 3-sheets, one 6-sheet, one 24-sheet. Paper is in three colors and well brings out the sensational tone of the production.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—Twelve 8x10 black and white photographs, twelve 11x14 and three 22x28 (colored).

PRODUCTION CUTS AND MATS:—Three 2-column, two 1-column. The 2-columns shed the small town, homely atmosphere of the opening scenes of the production.

ADVERTISING CUTS:—One 1-column, three 2-column, one 3-column. These are all line cuts done by an artist and reproduce to better purpose than the cut based on the photograph. "THE CAMBRIC MASK"—VITAGRAPH

Alice Joyce in Version of Unusual Chambers Story

THE drawing power of this feature can not be underestimated. There is Alice Joyce, the star, and Robert W. Chambers, the author. Here indeed is a combination sufficiently well known to attract the great mass of picture going folk—which, after all, means the great mass of the population of the country.

And after this mass is attracted it will not be disappointed. For while "The Cambric Mask" is a feature that calls for some criticism in the way of editing and subtitles, it presents a thoroughly delightful romance, a romance sustained throughout by a vein of melodrama that maintains the interest at a high pitch.

Miss Joyce is, as usual, a perfect delight. The role of Rose Ember, the Southern beauty, whose activities include protecting her sweetheart from a band of "White Raiders," a mysterious, evil aggregation of country-side folk, suits her admirably. Maurice Costello returns again as her leading man and gives a suitable interpretation as the hero.

Director Tom Terris has laid the picture in a variety of attractive settings, while to say that he has managed the headlights of the plot expertly, is quite superfluous considering his past record with the Vitagraph company.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 7.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Rose Ember	Alice Joyce
Robert Ember	Herbert Pattee
John Snark	Maurice Costello
Henry Murden	Roy Applegate
David Creed	Bernard Siegel
Daniel Guernsey	Jules Cowles
Reggie Lanark	Martin Faust
Mrs. Lanark	Florence Deshon

By Robert W. Chambers.
Directed by Tom Terriss.

PRESS NOTICE

Alice Joyce, the beautiful and talented Vitagraph star, will be seen in her latest picture, "The Cambric Mask," at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is an adaptation of a story by Robert W. Chambers and is considered one of the most elaborate and highly entertaining pictures in which the star has appeared. Under the direction of Tom Terriss the picture has been given a masterful production with such a well-known player as Maurice Costello playing opposite the star and with a supporting cast including artists of the most superior sort, among which Herbert Pattee, Roy Applegate, Bernard Siegel, Jules Cowles, Martin Faust and Florence Deshon are prominent.

Miss Joyce assumes the role of a southern girl, the daughter of an old gentleman whose business and estate have long since decayed owing to his passion for drink. Instead of reigning in the home of her ancestors Rose, the girl in question, now spends her time serving as secretary to one John Snark who has bought her father's property. But there are plotters afoot. They plan to inveigle Snark to sell his property at a small figure with the idea of reselling it to a railroad company for a sum considerably in advance of what they paid for it. Failing in this they plan to do away with Snark through the White Rider band!

The White Rider band is a relic of the old Civil War days and just what its function is is not to be revealed save in the picture itself. Suffice it to say that through this medium the production draws to an exceedingly dramatic close. "The Cambric Mask" is as exciting a story as Chambers ever wrote, produced on the celluloid with all faithfulness to detail, and this is, in itself high praise indeed.

Rose Ember is assistant to John Snark, a naturalist. Time was when Robert Ember, Rose's father, owned the vast estate now occupied by Snark. But drink and a sinister power wielded over him by one Henry Murden, had lost him his home, his fortune and his standing in the community. Murden, the postmaster of the village, by opening the mails learns that the Snark property is to increase in value when the railroad builds through the town. He endeavors to buy the land. The information containing the railroad's contemplated purchase reaches Greed, a miser of the village. With his partner, Guernsey, he plans to purchase the property. But Snark has promised Ember that he will sell the land to no one but Ember, providing he keeps it in trust for Rose. Of course this stand of his precipitates a serious situation and his refusal to sell eventually causes Murden to fall back on his band of White Riders.

The White Riders are a relic of the Civil War days, but their purpose is to terrorize. At the summons of Murden they gather to make Snark captive. Rose overhears the plot because her father, due to the power held over him by Murden, is one of their members. He is told to make ready to join them on the appointed night but drink again affects him and he is unable to answer the summons. Instead, Rose dons the white, ghostlike costume and rides in his place. It is Murden's plan to throw Snark in a swamp. As he makes ready to do so Rose hands Snark a revolver and he knocks Murden senseless. The others believing there are traitors in their midst take fright and ride away. Snark is saved and, on the way home, he voices his love for the girl who saved his life.

SUGGESTIONS

Vitagraph offers a universally popular star and a universally popular author in this production—a combination that is hard to beat when it comes down to cases. In the first place you have Alice Joyce, an actress who has remained among the foremost ever since pictures became a real vogue. Even those who are not "fans" know her name—know her reputation, who she is. This certainly is an asset that you cannot well afford to overlook. Feature her name, in any press stories dwell on her long and successful career before the camera. Play her up as a big star. She is, without a doubt. Mention the Vitagraph special feature in which she only recently appeared, "The Lion and the Mouse." This is just out and is still going strong throughout the country. In fact it hasn't begun to strike its stride yet. Let them know that she is the star of that picture and the star of this one, too.

On the other hand you have Robert W. Chambers. Of all the modern authors of the day probably Chambers is the most popular with the mass of the magazine-reading public. What does this mean to you? It ought to convey a lot. Because Chambers is popular with the magazine-reading public it means that he has just as big a hold on the picture-going public. Many of his works have been transferred to the screen but, disregarding this fact altogether, it is due to the fact that Chambers is read in magazines that they flock to see him in pictures. Use his name, feature it in as big type as the star's in your advertisements and theatre cards. Don't let a chance pass to play it up. Chambers is a name everyone knows—make the most of it.

PROGRAM READER

In the world of fiction Robert W. Chambers stands supreme. His readers are numbered by the hundreds of thousands. Originality of plot and crispness of dialogue are a pair of the greatest elements that go to make up his various works. "The Cambric Mask," young as far as literature goes, is the latest of his works to be transferred to the screen by the Vitagraph company, and, it must be confessed with all due modesty, it is one of the most successful pictures made from a work of fiction. It is this feature that is scheduled to hold prior position on our bill on next ———. That the picture is worthy of particular note is a fact substantiated by the various reviews on it printed in the trade journals throughout the country. Without exception they have heralded it as one of the best in with Alice Joyce, the popular Vitagraph star, has appeared. Telling the story of a romance of the old south, a romance severely menaced by an ancient secret society, a relic of the days of the Civil War, the picture can well claim to be one of the most unusual and swift moving that has been shown on the ——— theatre screen. Miss Joyce, resplendent in the stellar role, is supported by such well-known and competent players as Maurice Costello, Florence Deshon, Jules Cowles, Bernard Siegel, Roy Applegate, Herbert Pattee and Martin Faust.

CATCH LINES

Alice Joyce in a story as fascinating as ever Robert W. Chambers wrote—see "The Cambric Mask"—it's "on the go" from start to finish.

Many a man has accused a woman of faithlessness when all the while she has been endeavoring to help him out of a terrible difficulty. Man is short-sighted when it comes to this show-down. See "The Cambric Mask." Here is a situation that touches every emotional string in the human instrument.

Alice Joyce in her latest Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature supported by Maurice Costello and a distinguished cast of Vitagraph players.

"THE POOR BOOB"—PARAMOUNT

Absurdity Is Chief Entertaining Point of This One

THIS picture is thoroughly enjoyable from start to finish. It is true that the story is somewhat absurd, but in its absurdity really lies its entertaining power, chiefly because, in transferring it to the screen, the director has not tried to present it as something serious; so it resulted in a picture that ought to satisfy the tired brain of any pleasure seeker. In other words, it is a regular Bryant Washburn contribution, the kind that makes a spectator relax himself and take it all in good humor.

The indirectly conveyed moral of the story is "Bluff wins out." The hero of the story, through lack of experience and nerve, loses his canning factory, so he is reduced to the point of having to work as a plain clerk for a living. Towards the end of the story, however, he is induced to bluff it out. He returns to his native town, and although penniless, succeeds in posing as a millionaire. Thus he wins back his canning factory and a girl.

Simpson Hightower of Hightower, N. Y., is a failure as far as business goes—and as far as love goes for that matter. Bamboozled out of his right to the local canning factory he makes ready to depart from his native town, carrying with him the nickname of "Simp." In New York he becomes a clerk in Platt's Provision office. But his ivory refuses to function properly even here. A colossal error in dealing with a rival company, earns him the much-feared pink slip in his pay envelope. But although his boss quite well agrees with the citizens of Hightower as regards the inner condition of Simp's cranium, Hope, the stenographer, and Jimmy, the office boy, determine to show the world of what stuff he is made.

So a plan is hatched whereby Simp is to return to his home town posing as a millionaire. Hope is to be his secretary and Jimmy his valet. The town, as all towns will do, turns its color and comes out to greet the returning hero. And then Simp starts to rise. His old employer is due to meet a business acquaintance in the town to sign important papers. The man fails to appear and Simp signs in his stead, saving a large sum of money for the man who fired him. However, he exacts a large commission. Then his old sweetheart, Tiny, appears. Tiny had married the man who stole Simp's factory. He still thought he loved her but she shows up at least seventy-five pounds heavier than she was before!

Simp is cured. By another stroke of luck and long hidden business perspicacity, Simp wins back his factory. And now he is a man of means by right, not only by bluff. And then Simp turns to Hope, whom he had admired all along and whom he now realizes he loves.

SUGGESTIONS

First off you have a title that will attract attention in this feature. Advertise it prominently. It will immediately get the eye owing to its slangy familiarity.

Then you have the author, Margaret Mayo, one of the best known farce playwrights of the stage. She is author of "Twin Beds," "Baby Mine" and a number of other plays. But just these two need be mentioned. They played successfully on the city stages and toured extensively throughout the country. Moreover one of them has been put into pictures. Certainly mention of them will help you to pull the crowds to your theatre. Just use a line, "By Margaret Mayo, author of 'Twin Beds' and 'Baby Mine'," under your main title. It may seem a small thing to do but its the little things that count and those ten words will count a lot.

In Bryant Washburn you have a star that the Paramount Company is feeding on the very best of farces that it can secure. If you advertise him properly you should make his name practically synonymous with this type of picture. As stated before in these columns, this sort of advertising is what has made the biggest stars of the day. Each is known for his or her particular variety of pictures. So try to make Washburn's variety known, fix it in your public's mind so that when you flash his name in electrics and on the bills the people will know the type of picture you are showing.

Wanda Hawley and Mary Thurman are both worthy of mention in ads or news stories on this picture.

PROGRAM READER

Margaret Mayo, known as the author of "Twin Beds" and "Baby Mine," two of the biggest farce hits of the speaking stage, contributes "Poor Boob" to the list of Paramount comedies. Starring Bryant Washburn, this picture will be among the early features to be shown at the ——— theatre and the management has selected it because of its wonderful value as a farce and the little lesson in business success that it carries with it. The hero of "Poor Boob" is a boob in every sense of the word—because he has been told he is one. No one gave him any confidence in himself. They all laughed at him. And then one day the right girl comes along and convinces him that he is not a boob. So, blessed with her confidence, he returns to his home town posing as a millionaire and, before he is through, the real dollars come knocking at his pocket door. The part fits Mr. Washburn admirably well while in his support appear Wanda Hawley, one of the screen's real beauties, and Mary Thurman, another pretty Miss, who however, carries an astonishingly odd role. "Poor Boob" comes to the ——— theatre for ———.

PRESS NOTICES

"Poor Boob," with Bryant Washburn featured, will hold the place of honor on the bill of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The style of picture comedy that this Paramount star has been offering in his past releases has won him a firm place in the hearts of local fans. In fact, ever since his appearance in the never-to-be-forgotten "Skinner" pictures, Mr. Washburn might well have boasted of as large a following as any of the screen luminaries of the day. His natural, easy going manner, his skill of expression and gesture, his ability to live his roles on the screen—these are qualities that have brought him rapidly to the fore.

In "Poor Boob" Mr. Washburn is afforded an excellent vehicle taken from the stage play by Margaret Mayo. Miss Mayo has contributed a number of successes to the stage, chief of which are "Twin Beds" and "Baby Mine." In "Poor Boob" she conceived the role of a small town man who was regarded as a failure by all those who knew him. But he had the "makings" and two people found it out. One was a stenographer and the other an office boy. In the city whither the "Simp" had gone, these two persuaded him to return to his native village posing as a millionaire. And they return with him as part and parcel of his retinue.

How the bluff carries through, how Simp makes the home folk sit up and take notice and how he eventually wins real money for himself and his friends forms a thoroughly amusing and entertaining picture. Mr. Washburn receives sterling support from Wanda Hawley, Dick Rosson, Mary Thurman and Raymond Hatton. The picture was produced under the direction of Donald Crisp.

CATCH LINES

Without a dollar to his name he returned to his home town a millionaire! Impossible? No, but very funny; see "Poor Boob," Bryant Washburn's latest.

At the instigation of a pretty girl he threw a grand bluff at being a millionaire! And before he got through he had backed up his bluff with real dollars! See "Poor Boob," a rollicking Paramount farce.

By Margaret Mayo, author of "Baby Mine" and "Twin Beds."

Two of the prettiest leading women on the screen today support the star in "Poor Boob"—Wanda Hawley and Mary Thurman—it's a garden of beauty and a feast of comedy.

All Simp could make was errors. No dollars ever came his way. Then he recalled Barnum's words, "there's one born every minute," and he determined to prove that he wasn't one of the one's. He started to bluff and then the dollars came to back up his bluff. See "Poor Boob."

"CALIBRE 38"—EDGAR LEWIS-SHERRY

Melodrama Based on Murder Mystery; Story Well Constructed

THOSE of picture patronizers who like the strong melodrama, the kind that is based on a murder mystery, will undoubtedly enjoy this picture immensely. To begin with, the story, barring some minor faults that should not affect the general entertaining qualities of the picture. is well constructed, causing the interest to remain tense all the way through; and as the mystery is not explained until towards the end, it holds the spectator in fairly strong suspense. The human appeal in some of the situations also helps to increase its entertaining values.

A young man's father is murdered, and the crime, due to the clever manipulations of the real murderer, is fastened upon the son. Towards the end of the story the son is caught and is about to be lynched, when the hero, who has evidence of the young man's innocence, intervenes and saves his life. He also exposes the real murderer.

PROGRAM READER

Edgar Lewis, director of such well known feature pictures as "The Barrier," "The Great Divide" and "The Nigger," is responsible for one of the strongest pictures that will be presented at the ——— theatre next ———. This is "Calibre 38," a special production written and produced by Mr. Lewis which centers around a murder mystery in the Montana cattle country. Certainly this is an original locale for such a type of story and certainly may our patrons look forward to seeing a fast moving, unusual and forceful picture in "Calibre 38," Mr. Lewis is one of the star directors in the art. His name generally "carries" a production without the added value of a star's presence. However, with the case of "Calibre 38" our patrons will see the return of an old picture favorite in Mitchell Lewis, whose great work in the production, "The Barrier," brought such favorable comment. His performance in the present case in the role of Austin Brandt, the cattle-man, is as good as any could require. In his support appear such competent players as Victor Sutherland, Hedda Nova, Lola Pauzdrovna and William A. Williams.

PRESS NOTICE

While there are stars of undeniable position in "Calibre 38," the feature which will hold stellar position on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, the real star is Edgar Lewis, its producer and director. Mr. Lewis was the man behind the cameraman on such important features as "The Barrier," "The Great Divide" and "The Nigger," pictures that cut more than the average figure in the business. His work on "Calibre 38" evidences itself in a dramatic story, excellent characterization, broad views of the far western cattle-country and a unity of force that grows to a big sweep as the picture nears its climax.

"Calibre 38" centers about the murder committed in a lawless town of the West. The unfortunate victim is Robert Barton, a capitalist from the East who had made the journey West to discuss a deal with Brandt, a large cattle owner. They had quarreled and, for this reason, Ford Barton, the son, believes Brandt guilty of the crime. This complicates matters as Ford is in love with Brandt's niece, Joan. How the mystery is solved through the unusual calibre of the bullet used in committing the crime forms a story of highly sustained interest.

Mitchell Lewis appears in the role of Austin Brandt and creates one of those truly appealing characters for which he is famous. His Brandt here is quite worthy to rank on the same level as his 'Poleon Doret in "The Barrier." Others in the exceptional cast are Victor Sutherland, Hedda Nova, Lola Pauzdrovna, Mary Kennevan Carr, William A. Williams and Edward F. Roseman.

Austin Brandt, a young Montana cattleman is jilted by the girl he loves, Rosemary, who elopes with a stranger named Greer. Subsequently Brandt settles down to his business to bury his sorrow, and derives some happiness from the love of his small niece. With the passing of twenty years this girl, Joan, has grown into a beautiful woman. A wonderful attachment has sprung up between Brandt and the girl. She is the very apple of his eye.

To the town of Custer City, Greer returns with Rosemary to conduct a saloon and dance hall. Rosemary, embittered toward her husband because of his gross mistreatment of her, is but the shadow of her former self. Into the town comes Robert Barton, an eastern capitalist and his son, Ford. Barton's trip has been made necessary through a financial misunderstanding with Brandt. Ford, a handsome young fellow, enters somewhat dangerously into the rough spirit of the town and is reprimanded by his father. The next morning the old gentleman is found dead in his bed. Ford, knowing that Brandt had quarreled with his father believes that he committed the crime. Greer and his gang claim that the son committed the murder himself.

Ford is thrown from his horse and rescued by Joan and her uncle who tend his injuries. Discovering the identity of Brandt, Ford attacks him but is easily repulsed. Convinced of his innocence, Ford asks Brandt to help him find the real murderer. A clue is given by the fact that Barton was shot with a 38 calibre bullet and it is a known fact that Greer carries such a revolver. Greer's mob storm Brandt's house demanding Ford be taken a prisoner. But when the danger seems at its height Brandt forces a confession from Greer and he is dragged away to pay the penalty. Rosemary departs again after her husband's death, leaving a farewell note explaining her love for Brandt. Joan and Ford are happy in each other's love.

CATCH LINES

Mitchell Lewis in a wonderfully strong picture, centering about a mysterious murder in the Montana cattle country.

Produced by Edgar Lewis, the man who gave "The Barrier," "The Nigger" and "The Great Divide" to the picture public.

He wanted to kill the only man in the strange town who was his friend.

Mitchell Lewis, star of "The Barrier," in a new, yet thoroughly appealing role.

A picture laid in the great Montana cattle country.

A murder mystery that loomed insoluble!

The murderer made one mistake in his carefully laid plan. He forgot that all cattlemen used 45 calibre revolvers. He used a 38! And there was one man who knew it! See "Calibre 38."

"Calibre 38" is a sure shot for perfect entertainment.

She turned down a great, unselfish love for one that proved shallow!

SUGGESTIONS

Herewith the exhibitor has a good producer-star combination to play up. Edgar Lewis' work is favorably known to the trade and the pictures he has made have nearly all been of the extra big kind. Consequently the probability is that they have made an impression on the public. As a result even though your crowd is not acquainted with the name of Edgar Lewis, recall those previous pictures of his to them. Mention "The Barrier," "The Nigger," "Souls in Bondage," "The Great Divide" and others you have run. Then link up the name of Edgar Lewis with them and say that he is the producer of the present picture. If the people remember these others that will immediately catch the suggestion of strength, unusualness, etc., that is carried in this announcement.

Then the star you have is Mitchell Lewis. He too has had many picture successes. Some of his recent Select productions may be recalled if you have played them. But his biggest and greatest success was in Edgar Lewis' own, "The Barrier," when he appeared as 'Poleon Doret, the half-breed, in Rex Beach's powerful story. Here then is your opportunity to tie up still further the producer and the star. Let the people know that they form a most valuable combination in the making of pictures and that "Calibre 38" is the latest joint effort of theirs.

The character of the story is of the mystery type. Bring this out in your advertising and also state that the locale is the Montana cattle country.

ACCESSORIES

PAPER:—Two one-sheets; two three-sheets; one six-sheet. All paper shows Mitchell Lewis in prominent poses with the exception of the one's. His name, however, is not mentioned. The producer's name is featured in all instances.

"THE LITTLE INTRUDER"—WORLD

A Most Satisfactory Comedy-Drama Starring Louise Huff

LOUISE HUFF'S grace and charm, plus some of Johnny Hines' comedy and a sustaining, cleverly evolved story, make "The Little Intruder," a well rounded and charming piece of pictorial entertainment. The presiding genius, however, was Oscar Apfel, the director. He can always be counted upon to produce a picture which, in its various essentials, presents a strong and wide appeal. Even the settings of "The Little Intruder" give evidence of being selected by a real artist. They are some of the best that World has given us.

The story tells of a girl who is mistaken for a crook by a married man, exceedingly anxious about his frivolous wife. He introduces the girl as his niece in order that she may watch the other woman. The plot takes several original twists and turns, introduces a pleasant romantic and comedy thread, as well as the more melodramatic affair of the wife and a particularly strenuous admirer who really seeks her jewels. In the end the girl turns out to be the man's real niece after all.

For light, yet thoroughly sustaining entertainment "The Little Intruder" may be counted upon to fill any manager's bill. It will get the laughs and it will hold the attention. Others in the cast who give creditable performances are George MacQuarrie, Stuart Holmes and Christine Mayo.—Length, 5 reels. —Released April 7.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

The Little Intruder	Louise Huff
Geo. Conklin	Geo. MacQuarrie
Virginia Conklin	Christine Mayo
"Billy" Kent	John Hines
Henry Harding	Stuart Holmes

PRESS NOTICE

Officers of the law were a new and dangerous thing to the little blonde girl who hurried along one of New York's fashionable streets just before nightfall. When she collided with one, she almost passed away from the fright of it. In fact, she did not regain her composure quickly enough to avoid the suspicion of the officer. She hurried along the street again but this time she was shadowed. Coming in front of the residence of George Conklin she hesitated for she saw that the door was open. Should she go in? Should she risk the officer's wrath? She might persuade him to believe that she really lived there! So she took the chance and in she darted. The house was empty, not a soul stirred. The girl explored. Upstairs she found a variety of beautiful gowns and decided to try one on for the fun of it. Then suddenly George Conklin entered. He pointed a pistol at her. He accused her of being a crook! And the policeman entered and called her "Philadelphia Mary." She was lost! But then suddenly Conklin turned around and told the policeman that she was his niece!

Sounds like a real mystery, doesn't it? Well, to tell the truth it is, and a cracker-jack mystery tale it is too. You will see it all, all the mystery, the comedy, the romance, the big punches in the latest World film release, "The Little Intruder," which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week with dainty Louise Huff as the star. She is supported by Johnny Hines who offers some fine comedy, by Stuart Holmes who presents a perfect villain and by George MacQuarrie, Christine Mayo and other accomplished players. The picture was produced under the direction of Oscar Apfel, a guarantee of its excellence.

George Conklin believes the innocent flirtations of his wife a personal affront to him and he departs from the seaside resort to the city with the purpose of hiring a detective to put on Mrs. Conklin's trail. His town house has been deserted by the drunken butler and taken possession of by a pretty girl whom George encounters when she is trying on one of his wife's gowns. On the statement of the policeman he believes her a crook but lies to the officer, saying that she is his niece. The Little Intruder accepts this identification and also the terms that go with it, that she must look after Mrs. Conklin's love affair with one Henry Harding.

Later the Intruder is safely installed in the Conklin home and ardently made love to by Mrs. Conklin's brother, Billy Kent. But things don't go well with the Conklins themselves. The wife, driven desperate by her husband's unreasonable jealousy, practically throws herself on the mercy of Harding. This precipitates a situation that even the Intruder finds difficult to penetrate. But she sees a solution. Overhearing Harding's conversation she soon realizes that it is Mrs. Conklin's jewels that he really desires and not her love. The woman, believing he loves her, arranges an elopement.

There follow a number of rapid events, carefully planned by the Intruder, in which she pitches Harding headlong into the clutches of the law with a box of candy under his arm instead of the jewels. The meek wife returns for her husband's forgiveness and the two are summoned to the police station to exonerate Billy and his new wife—the Intruder. And after that it develops that the Intruder was Conklin's real niece after all, sd everything is very sweet all around.

PROGRAM READER

That picture which contains the perfect balance—the one, we mean, that offers a generous portion of romance, a delightful side dish of subtle comedy, a little bit of desert that is flavored with a highly dramatic sustaining interest—that picture is the complete bill of fare as far as a single picture can go. And that complete bill of fare will be found in the latest World picture starring Louise Huff and entitled "The Little Intruder," which will constitute the main portion of the ——— theatre's bill next ———. "The Little Intruder" is nothing lavish, we can't go into ecstacies about its settings, its epoch making story, or anything like that. But we can say that it is one of the most thoroughly enjoyable pictures that have come to our notice for many a day. Miss Huff is simply charming in the title role. Johnny Hines, the gay buffoon of so many World pictures, offers a fine measure of comedy, and a serious domestic situation is unravelled after many hazards by George MacQuarrie and Christine Mayo as the husband and wife. Oscar Apfel, an artist in directing, had charge of the production of the picture.

SUGGESTIONS

From her many appearances as co-star with Jack Pickford and again as star in her own right in World pictures, Louise Huff has gained a folowing of no inconsiderable size. As the producers have furnished her a most suitable vehicle in "The Little Intruder," we would not hesitate to call it the best picture she hsa done for this company. Feature her big and lay particular stress on her sweet and youthful personality in any exploitation that you may do in newspaper stories.

Then glance over the supporting cast too. Johnny Hines has done a lot of fine comedy work for the World Film Company. In "The Little Intruder" he has a role that will get the laughs from all. The boy is a natural born comedian and is rising in ability with each successive appearance. Let them have his name a few times in the advertising. Stuart Holmes is a well known villain and George MacQuarrie and Christine Mayo, who take the other principal roles have appeared in many pictures. The cast is, all things considered, one that you can pay special attention to.

As regards the story advertising of this feature, we would pay special attention to the heroine's role. The catch lines were written with this practice in mind. Shroud it with a little mystery in your advertising matter but at the same time bringing out the romantic element of it and the fact that there is considerable comedy in the picture. Look those catch lines over. Any one of them might suit your copy.

CATCH LINES

The jewels were stolen, they were sure of that. The police had the strong box in their possession. The key presented them, they opened it and found—a few dozen bonbons! A trick? Sure. See it and get one hour's worth of the finest entertainment on the screen in "The Little Intruder."

Pretty romance and delightful comedy—Louise Huff and Johnny Hines supply that. Awful villainy—leave that to Stuart Holmes. A matrimonial mishap that turns out all right after all—George MacQuarrie and Christine Mayo take this in hand. It's a perfect combination, true enough, this picture called "The Little Intruder." To see it is to find an hour's pure pleasure.

ACCESSORIES

PAPER:—One 6-sheet, two 3-sheets, two 1-sheets.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—Two 22x28 colored photographs, eight 8x10 black and white photographs and title card.

CUTS AND MATS (Advertising):—Two 1-column, one 2-column. These serve to bring out the comedy character of the picture, all of them showing Louise Huff and Johnny Hines in intimate scenes.

(Production):—One 2-column, two 3-column. These cuts, unlike the advertising, are more dramatic in character than the others. But they are also fully characteristic of the picture's action.

(Special Cuts):—One 2-column, one 3-column.. These contain poses of the principal players, not in character, but "at play" in the studio. A long caption is provided with each one. Mats of these are furnished at World Film Headquarters.

"THE WOMAN ON THE INDEX"—GOLDWYN

Genuine Goldwyn Success, Filled with Real Suspense

THIS Pauline Frederick contribution on the Goldwyn program may safely be called a success. It is a well developed melodrama, hardly ever going to extremes. For one thing it holds the attention; for another, as the outcome of the story cannot be guessed in advance, it holds the spectator in suspense.

The story deals with the heroine, who marries, not knowing the man is a notorious crook. Chased while on a job, the heroine's husband runs to the house, which is surrounded by the police; but rather than surrender he shoots and kills himself. The heroine is falsely accused by one of the confederates as having murdered her husband, but is acquitted by the jury for lack of evidence. In the course of the story she marries again, a wealthy man. Her services are now used by a government agent in trailing a Bolsheviki who is trying to spread the doctrines in this country. Her queer actions arouse the suspicions of her husband, but, in the end, everything is explained to him satisfactorily.

There are no repulsive features in the picture, and as it is free from suggestiveness, it should have a wide appeal.—Released Feb. 23.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

"The Woman on the Index" is THE picture on the index of good pictures—don't miss it.

Pauline Frederick supported by Wyndham Standing and Willard Mack.

PRESS NOTICE

Pauline Frederick will be the star at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in her first Goldwyn picture entitled "The Woman on the Index." Special interest is attached to this picture in that Miss Frederick assumes a modern society role which taxes her veried emotional ability to the utmost. Suffice it to say that she arises to every occasion offered her in the picture with splendid effect.

"The Woman on the Index" is an adaptation from the play by the same name by Lillian Trimble Bradley and George Broadhurst which was produced in New York early this season with signal success. The scenario was done by Willard Mack, the star's husband, while the direction was in charge of Hobart Henley, Goldwyn's senior director in point of service and probably the most brilliant man on the company's producing staff. Miss Frederick is supported by a brilliant supporting cast including such popular and competent players as Mr. Mack himself, Wyndham Standing, Jere Austin and Francis Joyner.

The story of the picture tells of a woman with a past. The widow of a notorious crook she becomes the secretary of a wealthy man and eventually his wife. In going over his books one day she comes upon a police record in which she finds her own name! Fearful lest her husband discover her past the wife is almost driven to distraction when a man, once a detective, but now head of the Secret Service, appears and recognizes her. How she repays her debt to the government, how she first damns and then exonerates herself in the eyes of her husband are events which form one of the most exciting photoplays ever seen on the ———— screen.

Sylvia Martin leaves the home of her mercenary parents who take every penny she earns and, fainting and cold, succumbs on the street. She is carried home by Louis Gordon, leader of a band of crooks. Before she realizes his occupation she marries him. The truth of the situation only dawns on her when the police raid his hiding. To prevent capture, which he knows will mean a long jail sentence, Gordon shoots himself before Sylvia can prevent it. She is accused of causing his death and serves a term in jail as a result. Eventually she is exonerated and a number of years later she is found serving as the secretary to David Maber. Shortly they are married and lead an ideal existence.

One day Sylvia chances upon a police record in her husband's library. In it, on the index, she sees her name as one of the principals of the Gordon gang. From then on she is fearful lest he discover her past and her fears rise when a detective who conducted the raid appears as head of the Secret Service. He promises friendship provided she play a game to procure evidence sufficient to convict one Hugo Declasse of fomenting a Bolshevik uprising. Fearful least her secret become known Sylvia lays a campaign to court Declasse's attention. He grows bold and seeks to return the advances of the beautiful woman. David grows suspicious and, eventually, seeing his wife in a compromising position with Declasse, drives her away from his home.

But Declasse suspects her. Believing to test her he leaves an envelope of blank papers on his desk and sees her hurridly seize them. Meanwhile he gives another parcel of papers to his Japanese valet. Warned, the Secret Service men enter and surround the suspect. He fears nothing but it proves that Sylvia has the incriminating papers as the valet was in league with her. A reunion between Sylvia and her husband follows.

PROGRAM READER

Because a play was a good play, it doesn't always follow that it will make a good picture—in fact, many a failure of the speaking stage has been turned into a triumphant picture success. With the case of the Goldwyn picture, "The Woman on the Index," the first Goldwyn to star Pauline Frederick, there is a half-way story to tell. Produced in New York early this season it attracted only mild attention. It was a good play but no one loudly proclaimed it a world beater. Despite this fact the bidding of the picture producers was heavy to obtain the celluloid rights to it. Not a paradox exactly. Merely the fact that it contained true picture material. That Goldwyn was lucky in securing the rights is proved beyond the shadow of a doubt in the picture itself. For as far as strong, surprising and highly sustained melodrama goes it must be confessed "The Woman on the Index" fairly establishes a record of its own. Miss Frederick brings all the varied emotional capabilities for which she is noted to the role of the woman who, through the clutch of circumstances, was forced to act the unfaithful wife before the husband she adored and who adored her. Wyndham Standing as the husband and Willard Mack as the third party complete a triangle of unusual excellence and ability. "The Woman on the Index" is one of the early features coming to the ———— theatre.

SUGGESTIONS

That Pauline Frederick is celebrated as an emotional actress no modern exhibitor needs to be told. That she be billed as such is advice more or less superfluous. But in "The Woman on the Index" she has what is generally conceded to be her strongest part—one in which her emotional ability is given its fullest play. Don't fail to lay stress on this fact. The exhibitor will also find a number of prominent names in the supporting cast, notably Wyndham Standing and Willard Mack. As Mr. Mack is known as the star's husband and as he also adapted the scenario for the picture from the play, these facts can be made the basis of an interesting press story for your local newspapers. At all events use his name in the billing. If you have played other Goldwyn pictures such as the Will Rogers and the Frank McIntyre features use the name of the director, Hobart Henley.

The Goldwyn Company itself offers you numerous fine advertising suggestions. The design of the twenty-four-sheet, numerous hands pointing at the star's head, suits very well for an advertisement, and one which will attract attention through its unusualness and which will arouse interest and suggest mystery through the same quality. Anything along this line will suit for your advertising. Be sure to bring out the

"THE POPPY GIRL'S HUSBAND"—ARTCRAFT

New Style Picture for Two-Gun Hero; Should Win Out.

WILLIAM S. HART should be proud of this picture. The story calls for mostly emotional work, but he acquits himself in that line; and although the tax on his acting is rather heavy, he hardly ever crosses the line of naturalness. He will undoubtedly win the sympathy, love, and good will of the spectator. He should also make many new friends on the strength of this picture; it is entirely different than any of those in which he has appeared in the past.

The picture opens showing the hero, a crook, behind the bars, serving his tenth year. Flashbacks reveal the cause of his incarceration. It is brought about by his young wife, whom he worships, ignorant of the fact that she is unfaithful to him. When he comes out of the penitentiary, he finds out the truth. His son, however, whom he meets by chance, prevents him from carrying out his plans for revenge. He intended to brand his wife with a hot iron on the face, and thus destroy the beauty which caused her downfall. In the end he takes his boy and leaves for a remote place.—Released March 16. —Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

Something entirely new for Mr. Hart—a wonderfully human story of San Francisco crooks—one of the Boston Blackie series by Jack Boyle—don't miss it—you will see a new Hart and get a new thrill.

For ten long years behind the bars the thought of the wife he adored—the Poppy Girl—had kept up Hairpin Harry's spirits. Now he was released—free again to breathe free air. He looked for his wife outside the prison gates, but she was nowhere to be found. Then his pal, Boston Blackie, spoke and his worst fears were realized! The Poppy Girl had proven faithless. Ten years of waiting for this! And he planned a terible revenge!

You know the Boston Blackie stories by Jack Boyle that make even brighter the pages of the Red Book magazine from time to time—you know how brisk and refreshing and unusual are these stories—you know the fascination of Mr. Boyle's style—now then see "The Poppy Girl's Husband," an Artcraft feature made from one of the best of these and with William S. Hart in the star part. It's different. It's a treat.

William S. Hart's next Artcraft feature, "The Poppy Girl's Husband," which will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week for the first time in this city, affords this rugged star an entirely new role. Instead of the time-honored bandit of the West he portrays the part of a San Francisco crook, Hairpin Harry Dutton, who, as the picture opens, is just finishing a ten-year term in jail. He is released to find that his wife has been faithless and transferred her affections to another man. A revenge as sweet to Harry as it appears terrible to the average mortal is planned by the ex-convict. But at the last moment a better influence enters the man's life and, leaving the woman he once loved to lead her own life, he departs for other places.

"The Poppy Girl's Husband" is taken from one of the popular Red Book Magazine stories by Jack Boyle. Mr. Boyle's series concerning the adventures of Boston Blackie and his coterie of friends comprises some of the most interesting and dramatic fiction published in the pages of the Red Book. The stories seem to lend themselves particularly well to picture production. Bert Lytell and Priscilla Dean are two stars who have already appeared in adaptations from this series with signal success. "The Poppy Girl's Husband" has had the benefit of the best producing talent in the field. C. Gardner Sullivan prepared the scenario from the Boyle story while the direction is due to the joint efforts of the star and Lambert Hillyer.

After serving ten years of his fourteen-year sentence, Hairpin Harry Dutton is paroled on good conduct. He turns from the prison gate when once again he breathes the free air and looks eagerly for his wife—the Poppy Girl, but she is nowhere to be seen. Instead Boston Blackie, Harry's pal, whom he had entrusted to protect the Poppy Girl and his little son, steps up to him. And his news fairly staggers the released convict. Polly, the Poppy Girl, had married Mike McCafferty, a detective who was instrumental in sending Harry up, only one short year after his imprisonment. The woman he had loved and adored was faithless!

Embittered toward the whole world Harry journeys to San Francisco, there to make his headquarters at Mother McGinnis' hotel, the headquarters of the western crooks. With a feverish energy he pores all night long over a copper plate on which he is scratching a design. During the day time Harry hovers near the public school so that he may see his boy, Donald. The two become fast friends after a time and play various games together. But during this time Polly has had a vague uneasiness. A premonition of disaster haunts her. So she asks Mike to "frame" Harry and send him up again.

Harry is warned of this both by his boy and Boston Blackie and he is on his guard. He escapes the trap and, copper plate in hand, goes to Polly's apartment. Here she meets him in all her splendor and is afraid. He shows her the plate. On it is a picture of a woman pushing a convict into an open grave. He will brand her with this, he says, and leave her to carry the mark of her shame through life. But the boy appears—Harry relents and, after the little fellow has bid his mother goodbye, they depart to make their home in the mountains.

PROGRAM READER

Most of our patrons are acquainted with the Boston Blackie stories by Jack Boyle that appear from time to time in the Red Book Magazine. Some of the most fascinating of fiction printed in the last few years has appeared under this author's name. One of the recent numbers of this series, "The Poppy Girl's Husband," was adapted for William S. Hart's latest Artcraft picture and will be the feature attraction here next ———. The combination of one of these engrossing pieces of fiction and the rugged star, previously associated with the western plains, makes for one of the most well balanced and delightful slices of pictorial entertainment that it has ever been the management's pleasure to present. Not only does the plot offer Mr. Hart a new role, that of a San Francisco crook—one of the honest variety—but in essentials itself the picture contains all those elements of good drama that go to make the exceptional photoplay. We feel that our patrons will be only too glad to welcome Mr. Hart in this new role. All those concerned in the picture's production were the most skilled members of the picture art that money could secure. C. Gardner Sullivan prepared the scenario, it was produced by Mr. Hart in collaboration with Lambert Hillyer while Juanita Hansen, Walter Long, Georgie Stone and Fred Starr are seen in the supporting cast.

SUGGESTIONS

Throw out your old stock cuts of the star in his western rig and get hold of the new accessories to exploit this picture. Be sure that you make the point clear to your patrons that "The Poppy Girl's Husband" is "different." It is not the western photoplay, it is a Jack Boyle, Red Book Magazine story—one of the Boston Blackie series—a crook story of San Francisco. In the first place the title of the picture helps you to distinguish it from the majority of Hart plays. It implies something different. If you back up this suggestion by using new cuts—or original drawings based on the stills—and telling the picture's source, you will have it firmly established that this Artcraft is something quite apart from its mates.

You can't go too strong on the author's name, the name of the series from which the story is taken, and the magazine in which it was first published. Without handing the Red Book Magazine any free advertising it may safely be stated that it is as well read as any purely fiction monthly now on the market—perhaps more so. And these Boston Blackie stories have gained great popularity. Other picture companies have produced others in the series and with success. So by all means dwell on the above-mentioned facts. It would do no harm to take copies of the magazine—the issue in which the story appeared and use them for additional lobby display. This idea has been suggested before in these columns and apparently it is a profitable one. Open one of the issues, or several of them to some exciting passages in the story and place them in your lobby frames. Advertising can be based on the same principle, using either a page of the story or the cover of the magazine as a back-ground for your announcement.

"HEARTS ASLEEP"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Joy for Barriscale Fans; May Find Fault with Story

BECAUSE of Miss Barriscale's personality, and the intelligent handling of the production, this picture will, no doubt, satisfy a large number of picture goers, especially the Barriscale fans; but the plot is not as strong as those in some of this star's past contributions.

The theory that a woman doesn't have to descend from an illustrious ancestry in order to be a lady, but that she can be picked up even from the gutter, and, under the proper tutelage, be made into one, forms the foundation of the story. The chief weakness of such a story, however, lies in the fact that it undertakes to prove a theory—an argument you may call it—not by natural means, but by fiction. The spectator knows all the time that it is fiction and that the success or failure of the experiment depends solely upon whether the author wishes to give it a solution, favorable or adverse; consequently, it fails to create the illusion upon which the life of a picture depends. Besides, as the same idea has been exploited many times in the past, the spectator knows right from the beginning what the outcome is going to be; as a natural consequence, his interest somewhat declines.

Since the picture is free from many repulsive features, however, also owing to the popularity of the star, I am sure no serious kicks will be heard from any source; in fact, it leaves rather a pleasant taste. —Released through the Exhibitors' Mutual.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Bessie Barriscale's best role and her best picture—see her in "Hearts Asleep" with a brilliant supporting cast.

THE STORY

Mother Hawkins, the notorious "fence" for a gang of equally known crooks, is in despair over Nancy. Despite all her teachings Nancy positively refuses to be a crook. She scrubs and earns an honest living, much to the scorn of Mother Hawkins and all those who frequent her establishment. But Nancy scrubs happily on. In the apartment house where she plies her trade lives John Lewis, a wealthy bachelor, who, however, looks on life from a different angle than that taken by the majority of his wealthy friends. Once in an argument with Calvert, an old southern gentleman, he had loudly proclaimed that ladies are made and not born despite all Calvert's contentions to the contrary.

Then one night Nancy knocks on Lewis' door. Mother Hawkins had forced her into partaking in a night raid with Gentleman "Chi," the idol of all the crooks. Chi had paid Mother Hawkins one hundred dollars and looked upon Nancy as his woman. Thus her hurried retreat to Lewis, her only friend. Lewis is astonished but readily protects the girl and then his argument with Calvert flashes across his mind. This is the chance to show him.

Five years later Nancy is introduced as Lewis' niece. Thorough schooling and the proper environment have caused her to blossom forth a gorgeous butterfly. She becomes fast friends with Calvert's daughter, Virginia. All goes well until Chi again puts in an appearance and lays suit for Virginia's hand. Here Nancy finds herself confronted with the alternative of saving Virginia and revealing her own past to her friends or keeping silent and seeing the girl she loves go to destruction. Her breeding tells. She speaks the truth for Virginia's sake and then finds true love with her "Uncle" John.

PRESS NOTICE

Bessie Barriscale, the talented actress whose two previous pictures, "A Trick of Fate" and "All of a Sudden Norma," gave her a new grip on her admirers, will return again to the——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest feature, "Hearts Asleep." This is considered one of the very best pictures in which Miss Barriscale has appeared. She takes the role of Nancy, the "ward" of Mother Hawkins. Mother Hawkins is a notorious "fence" for the crooks of the city and is a perfectly happy and evil individual except for one thing. She can not force Nancy to go about earning her living in a decent way! Nancy insists on working and since she has no education she has to scrub floors for a living. This rankles in the hard bosom of Mother Hawkins until one day she becomes desperate and practically sells Nancy to "Gentleman Chi," one of the leading crooks of her acquaintance.

But this is more than Nancy can stand. She deserts Chi and seeks shelter with the only friend she knows, John Lewis, one of the tenants in the apartment house where she was wont to ply her mop. The consequences of her visit to Lewis are some of the most amazing ever revealed in a photoplay and constitute the remaining portion of "Hearts Asleep." There is a charming element of romance introduced while the true worth of Nancy comes to a severe test in the climax of the story, a test which, it is needless to say, she meets squarely and fairly.

Miss Barriscale receives excellent support from a cast in which Frank Whitson. Vola Vale, George Fisher, Henry Woodward, Thomas Guise and Anna Dodge are prominent. Other features on the bill of the ——— theatre for these dates are ———.

PROGRAM READER

Bessie Barriscale, last seen here in "A Trick of Fate," admittedly one of the most thoroughly enjoyable pictures that the management has presented in many weeks, returns again on ——— in her latest feature production entitled "Hearts Asleep." This picture presents the story of a girl reared among crooks who refused to join them in any of their evil practices. When they attempt to force her into theft she runs away to the only friend she knows. John Lewis, a wealthy bachelor. Lewis had only that day indulged in a heated argument with a southerner who claimed that ladies were born and not made. Lewis thought differently on the subject and so the sudden appearance of this girl seemed a real opportunity for him to prove his theory. How it worked is delightfully told in the remaining reels of "Heart's Asleep." Miss Barriscale is surrounded by a cast of peculiar excellence including such well-known players as Frank Whitson, Vola Geore gFisher, Henry Woodward, Thomas Guise and Anna Dodge. The picture was produced under the direction of Howard Hickman, Miss Barriscale's husband, who also was in active supervision over "A Trick of Fate."

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising "Hearts Asleep" to your patrons center your advertising arguments and pictures about the central situation in the play, i.e., the scrub-girl being educated into a lady. While this situation is not altogether unusual in pictures it is certainly striking and arguments built around it should attract considerable attention provided they are worded properly. The final situation of the story also affords another opportunity for special appeal to the public. This one arrives when the heroine is forced to decide between making a confession that will sacrifice her own happiness yet will save an innocent girl from harm; or keeping silent and seeing the other girl go to her ruin. This can be played up to good effect. It is strong in its essentials and, handled correctly, should also present a real appeal to your patrons.

Not only use these two situations in your newspaper adevrtising but make them the center of any special paintings or drawings you may have done for additional lobby display. The cards could be placed in frames on either side of the lobby to good effect.

Play up the star's name. Miss Barriscale is not one of the pretty little ingenues of the screen but her name carries with it the significance of real acting ability. Dwell on the fact that her role of Nancy in this picture affords this ability of hers considerable latitude and let it be known that it is probably her best part since starting her own company. Interest will also center in the announcement that the picture was produced by Howard Hickman, the star's husband.

"THAT'S GOOD"—METRO

This Comedy-Drama a Trifle Slow, but Mildly Amusing

THAT "That's Good" fails to measure up to the exceedingly fine standard that Metro has been maintaining recently is not a great reflection on its individual worth. It passes as a mildly amusing comedy-drama, just a trifle slow to pass the minutes away with complete success, with Hale Hamilton's ingratiating personality and manner always in the foreground.

The picture is an adaptation of another Saturday Evening Post story by Richard Washburn Child and tells of a village haberdasher, set down as an easy mark by Chicago crooks, who wins Josephine, one of their number, over to the side of right—which means that he wins her as his wife—before the plot is over. There is a pleasant touch at the end when it is disclosed that the hero was aware of Josephine's identity all the while and that the trick of the crooks didn't fool him.

Mr. Hamilton's leading lady in this instance is Stella Gray, an actress known on Broadway by another name. Her performance is a little stiff and her profile isn't treated kindly by the camera, but there is a certain appeal about her—an appeal lying in her eyes—that in some measure counterbalances her shortcomings.—Length, 5 reels.—Released March 24.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Marcellus Starr	Hale Hamilton
Josephine Pollock	Stella Gray
Barrett Prentice	Herbert Prior
Ed. Freeze	James Duffy

THE STORY

Marcellus Starr runs the men's furnishings store in the little town of Rodbank. By the people of the town he is generally looked upon as a "desirable catch" and an easy mark. For instance one of the matrons of the vilage thinks to smuggle away a tie for her husband when Mark isn't looking. But next month said husband finds the tie charged to him on his bill. Mark isn't exactly a boob after all. But a group of Chicago crooks have a different opinion of him. They have Mark marked as a "sucker." They know he has at least fifteen thousand in the bank and they envy him its possession. And so they lay their scheme.

So to Rodbank one day come Barrett Prentice and his "niece," Josephine Pollock. Barrett is thinking of amalgamating a chain of men's furnishing stores, he says, and wants Mark to get in on the ground floor before the proposition starts going up. Mark "falls" for Josephine. They bring him to Chicago and there lay a trap guaranteed to catch even the most wary boob. Mark returns to his home town much impressed and several days later Josephine follows him to finish up the game. She at length succeeds in influencing him to invest all his money, as well as five thousand he holds in trust for his little niece, in their proposition.

And then at the last moment Josephine can not go on. Its not so bad to swindle Mark—but his innocent niece, never! And so she steals the envelope containing her five thousand—but discovers in it only newspaper with a note from Mark saying that he knew she would steal it to save the little girl. And so Josephine finds true love and happiness with Mark, the man she thought a fool but who turned out to be a wise man.

CATCH LINES

Because Marcellus Starr was always pleasant and made known his abiding faith in human nature a gang of Chicago crooks set him down as "easy money." They laid their trap for him and thought they had him caught and tied! But they were wrong. Faith triumphed over crookedness—see how it worked in the fascinating Metro play, "That's Good."

An honest man pitted aaginst a gang of crooks! He didn't call in the police or make any sort of a rumpus and yet he won out! His faith in human nature did the trick. See how in "That's Good."

Would you entrust your fortune to a gang of crooks on the chance that your faith in human nature would guard your money? See the course Marcellus Starr took in "That's Good."

Can the forces of wickedness be put to rout through simple faith in human nature? See "That's Good."

Are you wisely foolish or foolishly wise? Which would you prefer to be? See the answer in "That's Good."

PROGRAM READER

Hale Hamilton in "That's Good" will come to the ———— theatre at an early date. Mr. Hamilton's one of the newer stars in the Metro constellation is, at the same time, one of the brightest. His work, savored by long years of experience on the speaking stage, is undeniably clever and his personality is always ingratiating. His work in "That's Good" will doubtless bring him nearer to the many admirers he has already made through his few appearances on the screen. "That's Good" is from a Saturday Evening Post story by Richard Washburn Child and offers the star the role of the proprietor of a small town men's furnishing store. This fellow is generally looked upon as a boob by the townsfolk and this reputation spreads to Chicago where a gang of crooks single him out as an easy mark. How they lay their trap for him through the services of Josephine, one of their number, how finally his faith in human nature triumphs over their crookedness, are events which make "That's Good" a comedy-drama to be enjoyed every minute of the way. Mr. Hamilton is supported by a strong cast headed by Stella Grey, an actress known on the stage as Grace LaRue.

PRESS NOTICE

"That's Good, That's Good." Because Marcellus Starr always said "That's Good" in answer to everything that was said to him people thought he was a fool. In reality he wasn't at all. He did have an abiding faith in human nature, a sincere conviction that there was a little bit of good in everyone. That's where the gang of Chicago crooks erred in their judgment. Because Mark believed in human nature they thought him a fool. In reality he was a wise man. At any rate Marcellus Starr, proprietor of the "gent's emporium" at Rodbank was marked by this gang as easy picking and straightway they laid their plan to fleece him of the fifteen thousand they knew he had stored away in the bank.

But there was a flaw in their calculations somewhere. Just where it was will be revealed in "That's Good," the new Metro comedy-drama which will be shown for the first time in this city on ———— of ———— week at the ———— theatre. The star of this picture is Hale Hamilton, one of the international favorites of the stage who has been making a fine record in Metro pictures. The role of Marcellus Starr suits him well. He brings to it that ingratiating personality and manner that won him the great success in "Get Rich Quick Wallingford" on the stage. He is both human and humorous and there are few actors on the screen today who can successfully achieve this combination.

Mr. Hamilton has a fine supporting cast headed by Stella Grey. "That's Good" is an adaptation of Richard Washburn Child's Saturday Evening Post story of the same name and was produced under the direction of Harry L. Franklin.

SUGGESTIONS

If you care to make a novel announcement in your advertisement you can easily frame one by playing on the title. That is, using it as descriptive of the picture itself. A number of novel lines will immediately suggest themselves to the exhibitor if he looks at the title from this angle.

For catch lines and the angle of the story to stress, see the catch lines published elsewhere on this page. The important points in the story have been brought out in them and we have tried to suit them to advertising form.

Hale Hamilton is a star who deserves boosting. He is an appealing personality and his career on the stage, togoether with the popularity that he has earned for himself there, should count largely in his favor when he comes to your theatre screen.

The author is Richard Washburn Child and as the story first appeared in the columns of the Saturday Evening Post, he also deserves mention in the advertising together with a line stating the original source of the story.

ACCESSORIES

"THE GIRL WHO STAYED AT HOME"—ARTCRAFT

Hardly a Flaw from Production Angle

WITH Mr. Griffith's keenness for taking advantage of every opportunity to insert a human touch, and with his well-known care for detail, it goes without saying that hardly a flaw can be found in this picture, judged solely from the production angle.

There is nothing out of the ordinary about the story, however. The theme is a romantic love affair, with much of the action developed on the battlefields of France. As there are many hundred feet of this "war stuff," with occasional bits of horrors realistically reproduced, it is up to Mr. Exhibitor, who is acquainted with his patrons and their viewpoint, to judge of the entertaining value.

The latest D. W. Griffith-Artcraft feature will hold the place of honor on the ———— theatre's bill on ———— of ———— week. How the women fared at home during men's absence in the war is the theme of this picture which bears the significant title, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home." While there are some scenes of war shown, the major portion of the picture reveals the trials and tribulations of two girls whose loved ones were serving in the ranks of their country.

The producer has again endowed his picture with a handful of really human characters. The little cabaret singer, Cutie Beautiful, before whom a new life opens when the man she loves departs in the service of his country, is one of the most realistic characters that Griffith has ever introduced into a picture. In striking contrast to her there is Mlle. Blossom, the daughter of the old outcast living in France. The two girls are loved by two brothers, Ralph and Jim Grey. Here again is the valuable element of contrast brought into play. Ralph is a serious-minded, dutiful boy, while Jim is a strong-headed, impetuous fellow, inclined to having more fun than is really good for him.

This quartette of characters is played by Clarine Seymour, Carol Dempster, Richard Barthelmess and Robert Harron. The three first mentioned are new players in Griffith pictures yet their work compares favorably with that of Robert Harron whose many performances under the guiding hand of the master-director have won him immense popularity. The remaining members of the cast were selected with care and perform to advantage.

Monsieur Le France is the name by which an old soldier in the Confederate army of the South is known. Since the cause he fought for was lost he has made his home in France—a man without a country. His daughter is his only friend. Grey, an American shipbuilder, visits France and looks his old friend up. His son, Ralph, falls in love with Blossom but unhappily for him there is a French count to whom Blossom has been practically given by her father. When the Greys return to New York Le France and his daughter accompany them and here they meet Jim Grey, the other son of the shipbuilder.

Jim is a wild, careless youth, very much in love with a cabaret girl of the name of Cutie Beautiful. When the war breaks out Jim is loathe to follow the example of his brother and enlist but the draft calls him and, despite himself, he gets into a uniform, a uniform which is the pride of Cutie. The Le Frances, returned to their home in France, find themselves right in the war zone. One day the Count is brought in wounded and shortly afterward dies in Blossom's arms.

Jim and Ralph find themselves in the same regiment when the time comes for action. The story of the regiment, the lost battalion, is written in history. Both Jim and Ralph cover themselves with glory and the latter has ths satisfaction of rescuing the girl he loves from personal contact with the enemy. Ralph returns to America with his wife and Jim comes home to find a faithful Cutie Beautiful awaiting him. And old Grey is proud of his sons. "We've always been a fighting family," he declares, even though before America's entrance into the war he had been listed as an ardent pacifist!

PROGRAM READER

D. W. Griffith's latest creation, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," is one of the productions that will be seen at the ———— theatre before many days. In this picture Griffith has taken as his principal characters two girls who were obliged to smile and bid their loved ones goodbye as they went off to fight in the world's war in France. Griffith has given us much of battle, of the life in the trenches, of the hardships the soldiers had to bear during the war. But in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" he branches off on this new theme and has presented it with all the artistry at his command which is no little. We will not endeavor to tell the story here. A story of Griffith's can never be justified in cold type. But suffice it to say that in the lives of his four principal characters, Cutie, the cabaret dancer, Blossom the innocent child of an old recluse, and the two brothers, Jim and Ralph Grey, he has molded plot and counterplot that provide excellent entertainment from the beginning to the end of the picture. Robert Harron, the cleverest juvenile actor on the screen, appears as Jim Grey, while the other three roles are carried by players new to the Griffith banner, Clarine Seymour, Carol Dempster and Richard Barthelmess. Others who appear in the cast are Tully Marshall, George Fawcett, Adolphe Lestina, Frances Parks, Syn de Conde, Kate Bruce, Edward Peil and David Butler.

SUGGESTIONS

No exhibitor need be told the correct manner in which to advertise the Griffith productions. Above all things make most prominent his name. Don't let a chance go by to mention Griffith in your publicity and advertising of whatever form. The name of this producer is a box-office asset in itself, as everyone knows. It is to pictures what the names of Belasco and Cohan are to the stage. Capitalize it as extensively as you can.

With the case of "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" you have a good title and a different type of story to play up. Although there is plenty of war stuff in the picture certainly don't make this your leading advertising point unless your audience has signified its approval of this type of picture. Pull your crowds by advertising the picture as based on the theme of women's part in the war at home. Tell them of the two girls in this picture who watched their men go away with a smile, who then were obliged to knuckle down to fights, each one of them every bit as difficult though not as all important as the men's tasks.

You won't be misrepresenting the picture if you follow these lines and it is not likely your patrons are going to complain about the actual war stuff in the picture. Griffith knows how to present this better than any other producer. He always makes his battle stuff thrilling. But mention of it is hardly the right thing to do to pull the crowds these days.

Among the cast you have Robert Harron, one of the best known male stars on the screen. Tully Marshall and George Fawcett. Three of the principals have not appeared in Griffith productions before. They are Clare Seymour, Carol Dempster and Richard Barthelmess. As they give very fine performance in the picture, stories regarding the manner in which Griffith is able to bring out the best in any actor or actress who comes under his direction would be in good taste.

"WHAT AM I BID?"—UNIVERSAL

Holds Interest All the Way; Discriminate Fans May Find Fault

THE one thing that can be said about this picture is that it does hold the interest alive all the way through. To many a pleasure seeker this feature alone is considered as worth the time and money spent; and when the fact be taken into consideration that the picture has been photographed way up in some beautiful mountains, among enchanting natural scenery, it should be taken for granted that it will satisfy a great number of picture goers.

The only point that discriminate audiences, especially family patronages, might pick out to criticize is the fact that, although the theme is a love affair between two young folk efficiently portrayed, the story is based more or less on whiskey drinking; incidentally, one of the characters, given the role of a saloon keeper, has evil thoughts about the heroine, although his plans, by which he hopes to obtain her, miscarry. To the writer these features seem to rob the picture of the pleasant feeling it is entitled to when a sweet love affair forms its basis. It is not a question of morals nor of temperance, but a study of public taste, as even moderate drinkers hardly desire to have a drunkard thrust upon their face while devoting an hour or so to their entertainment.

If your patrons are lovers of nature they should enjoy this picture, because the mountain scenery, with the river and lake in the background, is really beautiful.—Released April 14.—Length, 6 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Directed by Robert Z. Leonard.

PRESS NOTICE

"What Am I Bid?" is the feature holding the place of honor on the .... theatre's bill for .... of .... week. This is a late Universal offering with Mae Murray as the star and in its story by Harvey Thew and John Clymer it reveals a thoroughly charming romance between a girl of the northern mountains and a revenue officer. While these characters may appear conventional at first glance, the plot in which they are the principals is far from such. The authors, indeed, have fashioned a most unusual and dramatic series of incidents through which the lovers are piloted with a skill that merits the highest praise.

Miss Murray has the role of Betty Yarnell, known around the countryside as "that brat of Yarnell's," She has no friends, no companions. Yarnell, once prosperous, has sunk to a low level through drink. The only thing that he has given Betty is a fine assortment of bad words. These she fires at the townsfolk whenever she journeys to the village to retrieve her father from Abner Grimp's saloon. So the good folk shun her as if she were possessed of the plague.

On one of these trips to Grimp's saloon, fat and ugly Abner notices that Betty is blossoming into womanhood and so he makes a bargain with Yarnell, who is his debtor, to provide him with all the liquor he needs in return for the girl! Into this almosot hopeless situation then comes the clean cut, manly Ralph McGibbon from the city and here the romance begins. It is a romance fraught with danger, however, as can well be imagined when the fury of the brute Abner Grimp is stirred. But the incidents are too many and unusual to tell here.

Up in the North Woods old John Yarnell, a drink-sodden, sunken man lives with his daughter Betty. Betty has no friends. Her father gradually loses every sense of decency and never gives her that slight affection that she had previously received from him. Her only friend is a little lamb that a passing sheepherder had given her. To this creature Betty confides her woes and her "Cuss words." She has learned a large list of these from Yarnell and the little lamb is the only one who is never shocked at them. As for the village folk, whenever Betty ventures among them for the purpose of piloting her father home from Abner Grimp's saloon, she is shunned.

Grimp notices that Betty is approaching womanhood and covets her. Yarnell, in debt to him, is easily persuaded to sign a paper, turning his daughter off to Grimp in return for all the drink he wishes. Then Grimp comes to the cabin to take the girl. But at this moment Ralph McGibbon arrives from the city. He is a revenue offiocer on a trip to look up the illicit whiskey traffic going on in the neighborhood. Betty's cries reach his ears and he goes to her rescue. Foiled in his first attempt Grimp sends Dark Cloud, his Indian partner, to get the girl, but again Ralph comes to the rescue. This time, however, he is beaten senseless by Dark Cloud and Grimp. Then they discover that he is a revenue officer and, believing they have killed him they flee to the further mountains.

Betty nurses Ralph, killing her pet lamb in order to provide broth for him. Ralph's father and fiancee arrive and move him to a hotel, telling Betty that she need never hope to reach his level. The sheriff decides to auction the troublesome girl off and she is placed on the block. Grimp presents his paper and demands that the girl be turned over to him. But Ralph is not to be kept from the girl he loves. Again he fights Grimp and again he wins and Betty goes to his arms.

PROGRAM READER

Mae Murray who has appeared in some of the most unusual features that the management has presented here will return shortly in her latest Universal feature entitled "What Am I Bid?" And a mere glance at this title will suffice to suggest to the reader that this picture presents another unusual story. 'What Am I Bid?" was written by Harvey F. Thew and John B. Clymer, two of the most expert writers for the screen and producd under the direction of Robert Leonard, Miss Murray's director on all her recent pictures such as "Her Body in Bond," "Danger—Go Slow," and "The Bride's Awakening." This picture is laid for the most part in the mountains surrounding a backwoods town. Miss Murray assumes the role of the daughter of a drunken degenerate who sells her to the saloon keeper of the town. She is rescued from this horrible fate by a young revenue officer present in the mountains on duty. But the rescue is not complete before many thrilling and original situations have been introduced. The authors have developed their material splendidly and it has been handled with the utmost skill by Director Leonard. The locations reveal a variety of beautiful outdoor scenery while against this background the plot takes on a power and significance that cannot be denied even by the most hardened picture "fan."

CATCH LINES

She was innocent of all harm and yet these hypocritical townsfolk placed her on the block —the sheriff made ready to auction her off to the highest bidder! And Abner Grimp, the fat, ugly, wicked, proprietor of the town saloon claimed her as his! See "What Am I Bid?"

Auctioned off to the highest bidder—was there no friend to save her!

SUGGESTIONS

Universal comes through again with another good title in "What Am I Bid?" It arouses the interest in itself alone. But you can make it five or six times as effective if you follow out its suggestion in picturing an auction block with the star, in rags, standing thereon. This is the picture that is seen on the sixsheet and also on one of the production cuts, and if you can get the same one into an advertisement you will certainly be getting your money's worth when you buy space in the newspapers. Follow this design out also on any special lobby paintings or drawings that you have made for additional display. Combined with the title this

"WHEN MY SHIP COMES IN"—INDEPENDENT SALES

A Melodrama of the Stage with Jane Grey Featured

ADAPTED from a Gouverneur Morris story of the same name, "When My Ship Comes In" tells the story of a young actress and a young playwright who found the going hard when they encountered the world's most famous theatrical producer. Said producer gets the young woman's signature on a fifty-dollar-a-week contract through misrepresentation and steals the young man's play. Eventually the producer is severely beaten up by the author, and the play is produced with the proper credit given.

The story is frankly of a melodramatic character and is acted and presented with emphasis on this element. It contains, by reason of its much persecuted pair of lovers and the cut-throat methods of the villain, an appeal that will probably reach the mass of photoplay patrons.

Jane Grey appears in the featured role to advantage and the hero is well played by Nigel Barrie. William J. Kelly's characterization of the villain is as melodramatic as could be conceived.—Length, 5 reels.—Released by Independent Sales Corporation.—Distributed through Film Clearing House.—Peter Milne.

Featuring Jane Grey supported by Nigel Barrie and William J. Kelly—an astonishing story of New York stage life.

PRESS NOTICE

On ——— of ——— week, Frank Hall will present "When My Ship Comes In," his latest feature at the ——— theatre. Those of our patrons who saw "Wanted For Murder," the last picture offered by Mr. Hall, can well formulate a pretty accurate opinion of the merit of this, his latest production. But whereas the former was a war picture, "When My Ship Comes In," is a story of the New York stage, differing altogether in character and treatment from its illustrious forerunner but providing an entertainment every bit as good if not surpassing that which was offered in the other.

"When My Ship Comes In" was adapted from the Governeur Morris magazine story of the same name which was one of the successes of last year's fiction season. It tells the story of a young woman and a young man, both of whom came in contact with a New York theatrical producer and discovered that the way to fame on the stage was no mere path of roses. The producer attempts to sign the girl up for a long term at a ridiculously small salary, while, on the other hand, he endeavors to steal the playwright's first effort for the stage. In both directions he is nearly successful when finally the playwright takes matters into his own hands and engages the villain in a terrific fight, winning and demanding justice after he has gained the upper hand.

The picture is filled with situations that for sheer dramatic intensity have seldom been equaled on the screen while the cast does work of an exceptional order. The Star is Jane Grey, an actress than whom there is none more proficient on the screen.

Paul Grayson, a young and successful mining engineer with aspirations to become a playwright submits his first opus to McKay Hedden, leading theatrical producer in the city. After making a copy of the play Hedden returns it to the writer saying that it is poor. In reality he likes it and departs on his yacht to study it. Grayson is disappointed and is persuaded to give up his writing to go on a yachting trip with Van Brunt, a mine owner by whom he was formerly employed. Hedden puts into port at Hanleytown and there renews his acquaintance with an old sea captain.. His daughter, Silver, he singles out as the leading dowan for the play. Later Grayson also meets her and a love springs up between them. Grayson departs to look after Van Brunt's mining property in the west and Hedden intercepts his letters to Silver.

Later in the city the play is in course of production with Silver taking the leading role. She learns that all Hedden's kindness is not without purpose when she discovers that he has inveigled her into signing a contract that awards her very little money. On the advice of a friend Grayson returns to the city. He discovers that it is his play Hedden is rehearsing. However, he agrees to say nothing as he does not wish to interfere with Silver's success. But the night before the opening, Hedden entraps Silver in an apartment. Grayson learns of his deed and rushes to the rescue. There ensues a furious fight in which Hedden is worsted. Before he leaves the apartment Grayson forces him into paying Silver sufficient money and into giving him credit for the writing of the play, which, when produced, is a great success.

PROGRAM READER

"When My Ship Comes In," an adaptation of a story by Gouverneur Morris and featuring Jane Grey, will be the main feature on the ——— theatre's bill next ———. Special interest is attached to this production in that it is a story of the New York stage, telling the romance of a young playwright and an actress, both of whom run afoul of a dishonest theatrical manager. Besides affording the observer an interesting peep behind the scenes of the metropolitan stage, "When My Ship Comes In" presents a story of strong dramatic crises that are cleverly handled by cast and director. Miss Grey, one of the most accomplished actresses on the American stage, brings a pleasing personality, good looks and a knowledge of technique to the role of the actress. She is supported by Nigel Barrie as the playwright and William J. Kelly as the theatrical producer. Mr. Barrie has just returned from duty overseas with a Canadian air squadron. The picture reveals a number of pretty locations and shows one of New York's most famous places on Broadway, the Hotel Claridge.

SUGGESTIONS

Play up the fact that "When My Ship Comes In" is a story of New York stage life. This is ever an interesting topic and if you advertise it in an attractive manner you should win large audiences. Use catch lines that allure but do not tell. Say that the picture tells of the life behind the scenes of a New York stage in an intense and dramatic way. You might also hint of the dangers and pitfalls that beset anyone who endeavors to make a way on the stage. But do not tell the story. "When My Ship Comes In" is a feature that better and more attractive descriptions can be written about.

You also have the name of Gouverneur Morris, a well-known author, to play up in your advertising. The best magazines have carried his works and he is probably as well known as any author of the day. So use his name. Jane Grey has done a number of pictures and is an actress of various accomplishments. She is the star. Nigel Barrie, leading man, has just returned from the service, while Robert Thornby, the director, has been with some of the leading companies of the day, including Lasky.

"WHAT AM I BID"

picture is probably the most effective one provided in this week's productions.

If you plan running the picture for a week or more this title also lends itself admirably well to a teaser campaign. The title alone repeated in the newspapers or in throwaways several times before your regular announcement is printed will certainly attract attention. If you follow this plan you might also print one of the short catch lines along with the title on the last day of the campaign. These catch lines were written with this purpose in view or for captions for the advertisement suggested above.

It will certainly pay to recall Mae Murray's other successes on the screen. They, too, were possessed of catchy titles, and if you ran them you certainly should make mention of them. Don't forget Robert Leonard either. He produced these previous pictures and also directed this one.

ACCESSORIES

PAPER:—Two one-sheets; one three-sheet; one six-sheet; one twenty-four-sheet.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—Photographs are provided in three sizes, 8 x 10, 11 x 14 and 22 x 28. These include star portraits and scenes from the production.

CUTS AND ELECTROS:—Two one-column; one two-column; one three-column. These cuts are suitable for use either in newspaper advertisements, text stories or for the exhibitor's own program announcements.

Other accessories provided at all Film Clearing House exchanges are slides, music cue sheets, heralds and press sheets.

"THE SILK LINED BURGLAR" UNIVERSAL

Entertaining Version of "Boston Blackie" Story

"BOSTON BLACKIE," the central character of Jack Boyle's fascinating series of Red Book Magazine stories, is an ideal screen personality, while the plots in which he is the pivotal person have an amount of fast action and sustaining interest that suit them admirably well for screen presentation.

"The Silk Lined Burglar," one of this series, offers the story in which Boston Blackie unwittingly turns his burglarizing activities to the assistance of the Government, when a young woman approaches him with the proposition to crack a safe. The interest is well maintained throughout and there is just the right touch of mystery to make the picture a real "go."

Priscilla Dean is featured as the girl, while Sam De Grasse has the Boston Blackie part, handling it well indeed. The picture was reviewed at length in the issue before last.—Length, 6 reels.—Released March 31.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Doris Macon	Priscilla Dean
Robert Melchoir	Ashton Dearholt
Boston Blackie	Sam De Grasse
Michael Delano	Sam Appel
Mary	Lillian West
Capt. von Hoffmeier	Fred Kelsey

By Jack Boyle.
Scenario by Fred Myton.
Directed by Jack Dillon.

CATCH LINES

Boston Blackie, the delightful character of Jack Boyle's Red Book Magazine stories, now appears in celluloid form. His activities in "The Silk Lined Burglar" are some of the liveliest of the times.

Priscilla Dean's latest feature—worthy to rank with her many wonderful successes of the past—to miss it is to miss one of the real treats the screen has to offer.

He had been caught opening a certain safe and realized that the game was up. Sought after by the police chiefs of a dozen cities, he had always evaded them until inveigled into this foolish escapade with an innocent girl. He was a lawbreaker a dozen times and more. A sentence, long and hard, loomed before him. Well, he had played and lost, he had to face the music. And then out of a clear sky he found himself a hero—a man honored by the police and the Secret Service! How? See "The Silk Lined Burglar."

He had to take his jail sentence at last—had to face the music—then suddenly the music turned around and faced him—and made him a hero!

PRESS NOTICE

All readers of good fiction know the Boston Blackie stories of Jack Boyle's that appear with regularity in the Red Book Magazine. It is one of these that has been made into the picture, "The Silk Lined Burglar," by Universal, and which will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. These stories lend themselves particularly well to screen presentation, a number of them having already been put into celluloid form with great success. In "The Silk Lined Burglar," Priscilla Dean, the brilliant Universal star, is seen in the heroine's role, while Sam De Grasse plays the Boston Blackie part.

The story tells of an advertisement that attracts the master crook's eye. It asks for an expert safe-cracker! The way it is worded brings a reply from Blackie, despite the entreaties of his wife to the contrary. He finds the advertiser a beautiful young woman who refuses to give the reason that prompts her to desire the safe in a certain house to be opened. And Blackie, believing her straight, decides to trun the trick for her. The outcome of this adventure brings "The Silk Lined Burglar" to a climax of the most exciting character, one that is pictured on the screen with a remarkable degree of sustaining power.

Boston Blackie, that lovable crook who had eluded a hundred different police chiefs in as many cities, was lying low after a certain job when he read a peculiar "want ad" in the daily newspaper. The ad asked for an expert safe-cracker, and Blackie decided that he would be the first applicant for the job. He knew from the way the ad was worded that it wasn't a frame-up by the police. And his knowledge was proven certain indeed when he arranged a meeting with the writer of the ad and found her to be a beautiful girl, Doris Macon by name, very uneasy and nervous about something.

Doris told Blackie that the safe in a certain house simply must be opened and its contents removed. And she agreed to pay him a price for turning the trick. And so that night they enter the place and blow the safe. Just as the door flies off the owner enters. In consternation he rushes, not to his safe, but to his phonograph! While he is out summoning assistance Doris grabs certain papers in the safe and Blackie takes the phonograph records and the needle! But they are captured, and by secret service men at that. One of them, Robert Melchoir, is Doris' sweetheart. She had rifled the safe knowing it to belong to Captain von Hoffmeier. The captain was under suspicion as a spy but no one could get the evidence on him. And it looks as if Doris had failed for the papers reveal nothing. But Blackie had not had years of experience for nothing. The phonograph records, when played with a special needle, prove to contain valuable secrets. The lovers were happy, the captain was jailed, and Blackie decided that he could work better for the Government than against it!

SUGGESTIONS

Jack Boyle's "Boston Blackie" stories, which appear in the Red Book Magazine, comprise one of the principal factors of that publication's rapid rise during the past year. Therefore it would certainly be an oversight if the exhibitor neglected to mention that "The Silk Lined Burglar" finds its original source in one of these stories. Boston Blackie is a character known wherever popular fiction is read and he has appeared on the screen heretofore. Spread yourself then, on announcing the fact that the picture is one of this popular series of Jack Boyle.

You can advertise this picture well by announcing the fact that just when Boston Blackie thought the game was up, that he would be turned over to the police, luck turned and he discovered that, unwittingly enough, he had been working for the Government all the time instead of against it. This will give you a chance to build up the mystery of the picture, and a very good idea this is, for the production contains much of this element.

Priscilla Dean, the star, should be advertised heavily also. Her past productions have boosted her to a position enviable indeed in the ranks of leading actresses, and not to cash in on her popularity, when it is at its crest, would be a mistake.

PLAN BOOK SERVICE

THE Motion Picture News Plan Book is the most complete service ever offered the exhibitor.

This is the consensus of various opinions expressed by readers.

Motion Picture News was the first trade paper to bring such a service to the field.

The old days of the review here—the synopsis there—the ad talk somewhere else—those old days are no more.

In the Complete Plan Book you have it all in one place.

ACCESSORIES

PAPER:—Two one-sheets; two three-sheets; one six-sheet; one twenty-four-sheet.

LOBBY DISPLAY:—Scene and star stills with synopsis and title cards are provided in the regular standard sizes. If desirable some of these stills may also be used in the making of special cuts.

PRODUCTION CUTS:—Production cuts are furnished in one, two and three-column size and are adequate in suggesting the sustaining, mysterious character of the production.

ADVERTISING CUTS:—These cuts (line) are also furnished in one, two and three-column sizes, containing good scenes and well written arguments.

STAR CUTS:—One and two-column cuts of Priscilla Dean are also on hand at all Universal exchanges.

SLIDE AND MUSIC CUE SHEET are also obtainable at all exchanges handling the picture.

"GOOD GRACIOUS ANNABELLE"—PARAMOUNT

Regular Billie Burke Type of Film; Mining Atmosphere

A LITTLE comedy, more romance and some suspense, contribute toward making this picture enjoyable. The story upon which it has been based is of the light, delightful variety, the kind that brings pleasure without causing undue strain, leaving a happy taste. It is the regular Billie Burke type of a picture, in which the charms of the star add a great deal to the entertaining values.

The story starts in a mining town out West, where the father of the heroine is killed in a row with another miner. The hero, a miner himself, in order to save the heroine, takes her away from the scene and carries her to his cabin; he then induces her to marry him so that he may protect her and her interests.

After the marriage, she becomes dissatisfied and returns East. But she gets into trouble and into debt because of her vengeance. In time, her husband returns East unrecognized because he is minus his beard. Towards the end of the story, however, real love develops between them, and when he discloses his identity, her happiness is without bounds.

The picture is clean and will have a better appeal among the cultured type of audiences. Released March 2.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising this picture to your public bring out the fact that it was a successful play by Clare Kummer. Miss Kummer is enjoying quite a vogue in the big cities with her plays and doubtless some of your patrons have seen one or more of her plays or have read of her work.

Get into all advertising an atmosphere of smartness. Don't use just conventional wording or conventional drawings. Get some spirit into the copy. Take a look at the picture and then write your ad. If you can incorporate some of this high spirit of the comedy itself into your newspaper announcements you will be accomplishing a lot.

There is one situation in the picture that you can play up. It will mystify and amuse. It will get people talking and coming to your theatre. That situation is the fact that two people are married and don't know each other. On this hinges all the comedy in the picture and on this you should be able to build a most attractive advertisement.

Play up the star, Billie Burke, and say that the role of Annabelle suits her admirably well. Use Herbert Rawlinson's name also. He is a star in his own right, has had a lot of publicity and has done some fine work.

PRESS NOTICE

Billie Burke in "Good Gracious Annabelle," a film version of one of the most amusing plays ever produced on Broadway, will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Clare Kummer, author of such successful comedies as "A Successful Calamity" and "Be Calm Camilla," wrote "Good Gracious Annabelle" and the play contained a lot of humorous dialogue, cleverly written, and was fraught with the unusual in the way of comedy situations. All the original spirit of the play has been communicated to the screen by the director, George Melford, with the result that the picture stands as one of the best that Miss Burke has done.

Annabelle, a miner's daughter, had been whisked away by a hermit when she was sixteen years old and had spent the night in his cave. The next morning she told him that he had compromised her and so he married her. When she started to cry, however, he thought it over and decided he didn't want a wife. He sent Annabelle away to the city and regularly thereafter forwarded money to her. The peculiar thing about it was that Annabelle never even knew her husband's name!

The miner strikes it rich and, after six years, arrives in the city, taking up his residence at the same hotel in which his wife resides. As neither of them recognizes the other, it may be surmised that from here on the comedy is abundant. Miss Burke appears to exceptional advantage in the stellar role, while Herbert Rawlinson makes a most satisfactory hero. Gilbert Douglas and Crauford Kent are also seen in the cast.

When Annabelle Leigh is but sixteen years old she is kidnapped by John Rawson, a hermit miner who takes her to his cave. She spends the night there and the next morning Annabelle tells him she is terrible compromised as a result. So Rawson marries her. When Annabelle starts to cry, he ejects her from the cave and she journeys to a nearby city. The fact is she doesn't even know this husband's name! But shortly afterwards Rawson makes a strike and, for six years, regularly sends Annabelle a remittance. This she spends lavishly in entertaining.

Then one day one of the checks she presents at the hotel is turned back to her marked N. G. Annabelle is peeved not to say hurt. Rawson arrives in town and registers at the same hotel as Annabelle. Neither recognizes the other. Rawson's mission is to secure two blocks of stock held by his wife. One of her banquets doomed to failure because of lack of funds, Annabelle grasps at a last straw and invites Rawson, whom she learns is rich. He accepts—and has to foot the bill for the banquet.

Without funds Annabelle decides to accept a position as cook in a Long Island country home. Her friends think it's a lark and turn up in other menial positions. So Rawson, who has fallen in love with his wife, rents the place. After this events move rapidly. Annabelle has some suspicion cast on her name in a contemplated divorce case. Through this Rawson learns that she is his wife and he finally reveals his identity to her. This is particularly satisfactory to Annabelle as she has truly fallen in love with her husband.

PROGRAM READER

"Good Gracious Annabelle," a film version of one of Clare Kummer's popular plays with Billie Burke as the star, will be seen at this theatre shortly. This is a comedy in which the principals, husband and wife, do not know each other, strange as that may seem, and the fun is derived from the peculiar situations in which they move throughout the play. Miss Kummer is noted for her originality, her freshing humor. Her plays are popular because of these qualities. "Good Gracious Annabelle" is her best play to date and the reason for this will not be hard to distinguish after one has witnessed the picture. Miss Burke appears to exceptional advantage in the principal role while the support she receives from such expert players as Herbert Rawlinson, Crauford Kent and Gilbert Douglas is of the best possible sort. George Melford was entrusted with the direction of the picture and his work shows to advantage in its every scene.

strength of the picture, however, and center your advertising around the character portrayed by the star. Although the story itself is not a mystery, you can very well envelope her character in mystery in your advertising copy. In this case it is excellent showmanship. Another advertisement you might use could be fashioned from a page index of small type. With this as your background, run your announcement and theatre lettering over it and use a head of Miss Frederick breaking through the center of the page. This will illustrate the title in a way and also will serve to attract attention through its novelty.

"THE SAWDUST DOLL"—PATHE

One of Best Marie Osborne Pictures; Heart Appeal

TO write a story for a child actress and keep within the bounds of logic is, indeed, a difficult undertaking. The author has always to keep in mind the physical as well as the mental development that would, in real life, be natural to a child of that age. This time, however, the producers have again struck it right, as the story in "The Sawdust Doll," besides being interesting, is heart appealing as well. It also offers some genuine thrills. In fact, the picture may be placed in equal rank with the best Marie Osborne contributions.

The star is presented as a motherless little girl, living with her blacksmith father. She wants to have a mother, and thinks that a stranded young lady who has obtained a position in a local ice cream parlor would be an ideal one. The father woes the young girl and they eventually marry; but soon she tires of the monotony of that life and seeks new conquests. Towards the end of the story, however, the kindness of the little heroine softens her heart; so, when she is told by the child of an overheard conversation in which some bad characters stated they were about to wreck a train full of soldiers, with her husband aboard, risks her life to flag the train.

SUGGESTIONS

The Baby Marie Osborne pictures are ideal subjects for children's matinees. Are you putting them to this purpose? While they are usually enjoyed by all sorts of audiences, it would be an oversight if they weren't put to this purpose. Circularize your women patrons, especially those that you know to be mothers, and invite them to bring the kiddies. Tell them about Baby Marie and the little pickaninny. They have played together many times before. And they are popular. Let them know that their team work is again to be found in "The Sawdust Doll."

In putting on one of these matinees you might take a tip from the title of the picture and offer some sort of a prize for the best dressed doll—or best doll made out of sawdust by a child. This would stimulate interest in the matinee and you would very likely draw a good crowd of the little folks.

PRESS NOTICE

Baby Marie Osborne, the clever Pathe child star, returned to the ——— theatre on —— of ———— week in her latest feature entitled "The Sawdust Doll." Those who have found the previous Baby Marie subjects of interest will certainly enjoy this, the latest of her efforts before the camera, for the plot has a refreshing originality about it, is developed with skill, and contains generous amounts of comedy and suspense. Baby Marie plays her role with her usual sincerity and zest while the supporting cast includes Jack Connolly, Claire Du Brey, William Quinn and the inevitable little pickaninny of all Baby Marie pictures.

The star assumes the role of Sally Lou, the motherless daughter of Jim Davis, the village blacksmith. The manner in which the picture gains its title is brought in through the medium of a clever little episode. The child gets her father to buy her a large sawdust doll, almost as large as a human being, that she may have a "mother." But this scarcely serves to fill the void in Sally Lou's life. There comes her opportunity to get a real mother and she makes the most of it. A travelling beauty doctor's demonstrator, Rose Budd, a former cabaret performer, has been stranded in the town and Sally Lou naively suggests that her father make her his wife! And Jim Davis thinks somewhat kindly of the idea too.

This is as far as we will pilot the characters here. Their adventures, however, constitute a most amusing photoplay. It was written by Agnes Johnston, a scenarist who has contributed several of Mary Pickford's continuites and who knows screen values as well as any other in the field.

Sally Lou is the motherless daughter of Jim Davis, the village blacksmith. Jim hasn't much time for his child and she leads a very lonely existence. She persuades her father to buy her an immense sawdust doll to take the place of the real mother. And for a time she is happy with the imitation. There comes to the village a travelling beauty doctor and his demonstrator, Rose Budd, once a cabaret performer. The townsfolk do not take kindly to the doctor's beauty recipes, so he leaves the place in haste, deserting the girl.

Through the good offices of Jim she obtains employment in the local drug store. Sally Lou is attracted to Rose and eventually tells her father that she wouldn't make a bad mother. Jim thinks the suggestion a pretty good one himself and a short while afterward Rose and he are married. But the ex-cabaret performer doesn't make a very good blacksmith's wife. She turns to the druggist, Raynor, for a flirtation which, though it starts innocently enough, soon assumes serious proportions.

Jim determines to enlist and Rose determines to elope. But Sally Lou saves the day. She hears from her pickaninny friend that Raynor plans to dynamite the troop train on which Jim will be travelling. This information she communicates to Rose. Between them they manage to flag the train by igniting Sally Lou's doll. The troops are saved and Sally Lou is the heroine of the day. And this near-catastrophe reunites Jim and his wife.

CATCH LINES

Baby Marie Osborne and the delightful little pickaninny again in a comedy-drama that all will enjoy.

Sally Lou wanted a mother so she suggested that her father marry Rose Budd, a former cabaret performer. Rose was quite willing and so was Jim but see how the union was brought about in "The Sawdust Doll," Baby Marie Osborne's latest.

A story for women and children and men—written from the woman's viewpoint by a woman.

The Sawdust Doll saved the troop train.

PROGRAM READER

Baby Marie Osborne, the charming little Pathe star will be seen here shortly in her latest Pathe feature entitled "The Sawdust Doll." This is considered one of the best of her subjects by the producers as, besides offering the diminutive star, a thoroughly congenial role, it provides a plot filled with comedy and sustaining situations. It was written by Agnes Johnston, a skilled scenarist who has contributed a number of continuities to Mary Pickford's productions and who is able to get a refreshing viewpoint on all the plots that she turns out. "The Sawdust Doll" is by no means the least of her work. The comedy in it most of our patrons will recognize as quite new while the play between the star and her little companion, the pickaninny, is delightful to the extreme. "The Sawdust Doll" is scheduled for exhibition here on ———— ———— and the management has secured a number of other pictures of interest to complete the program.

"THOU SHALT NOT"

small descriptive matter couched in appropriate language, it should bring you good houses all through the showing. Don't be afraid of this theme because it is old—that is, don't be afraid of advertising it as old. In fact this might be the very way to advertise it. A statement to the fact that "Thou Shalt Not" is "older than modern civilization but as appealing as any drama ever pictured," will gain you your patrons' confidence and at the same time will be backing up the story with the truth.

Use Miss Nesbit's name prominently. Her name sells, even though today she is more than a name to many picture patrons. Play her up prominently and follow along with the title in just as prominent type and position. The combination should prove doubly alluring to the passerby. As for the rest of the cast both Crauford Kent and Gladden James are favorably known. They have worked with the biggest stars and with various companies. A line to the effect that they appear in the supporting cast will not come amiss.

Fox Studio Doings

Program for the production of William Farnum subjects for the Fox Company has been arranged for several months in advance, it was made known at the studios the week of March 22. Mr. Farnum has made the last scenes for the first subject he filmed since returning West, and the next picture to be filmed is an adaptation from Zane Grey's novel, "The Lone Star Ranger," and following this will come "The Last of the Duanes" by the same author. After this, it is proposed that Mr. Farnum shall be starred in a massive super-production which the Fox organization propose to make a classic of the screen. Story for this is now being prepared. J. Gordon Edwards, director general, is to continue as Mr. Farnum's director in the making of all of these subjects.

Mr. Farnum has returned from spending two weeks at Palm Springs Canyon, where the exteriors for "Wolves of the Night" were taken, and immediately preparations were made for a new picture. Living up to his past ability as a screen fighter, Mr. Farnum fought three men who had been the cause of his troubles in "Wolves of the Night," and, true to the script, was the victor of the battle against odds. Charles Clary, Lamar Johnstone and G. Raymond Nye were Farnum's opponents.

The William Fox western studio in the foothills of Hollywood was the location used for exteriors of "The Coming of the Law," being directed by Arthur Rosson, which has Tom Mix as star. It is planned that as soon as this picture is completed. Ed. Le Saint will begin the filming of "The Romance of Cow Hollow." Juanita Hansen has been engaged to play the role opposite Mix in this coming production.

General Manager Sol Wurtzel has added a number of exceptionally well-known players to the Fox list of supporting actors and actresses, and now Louise Lovely, Charles Clary, Betty Schade, Tom Santchi, Colleen Moore, Irene Rich, and a number of others are to be seen on the Fox studio stages daily working in the various productions now being made.

About Metro Players

Charles Swickard has been engaged by Metro to serve as director, and has already taken up the work of preparing to direct the next May Allison subject, which will be "Her Father's Wife," written by E. V. Durling. This has a Swiss mountain will spend ten days or two weeks in the vicinity of Truckee, Cal. Miss Lee's most setting, and to quote Miss Allison and her director such scenery is as scarce in California as the much discussed Swiss navy.

Bert Lytell is next to play under the direction of George D. Baker, taking the role of the young minister, who during the week conducted a grocery store as chronicled in the Saturday Evening Post story, "In the Lion's Den." Alice Lake is to continue as Lytell's leading woman in this picture.

The Viola Dana Company is home from two weeks spent in the redwood timber company on exteriors for "Madelon of the Redwood," and the Nazimova organization is continuing on the production of "The Brat." Almost all of one day this latter company had the use of a block in the downtown district of Los Angeles, and made scenes using the stage entrance of Grauman's theatre. The street was roped off and all traffic was stopped.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

The promised activities at the Lasky Hollywood studio have not materialized because of requirements in preparation of stories and settings, and but one company continues actively at work here, that finishing the C. B. De Mille Artcraft Special from the pen of Edgar Selwyn, "For Better for Worse."

Story has been prepared and filming will be started by Lila Lee and Company directed by Irvin Willat. This will be a snow picture, and while the settings are being prepared at the studio, the company recent subject filmed in Arizona and titled "Rustling a Bride," has been wholly completed.

Director James Cruze, with a company including Wallace Reid, Grace Darmond, and others, is still in Northern California making exteriors for "The Valley of Giants," and Robert Vignola is making the last scenes for the Vivian Martin picture, "A Home Town Girl," at the Morosco studios.

Tests have been made of make-up and costumes for the Capt. Robert Warwick Special Artcraft from the play, "Secret Service." Aside from the leading woman, Shirley Mason, no others have been cast for this film. Hugh Ford is to be the director.

Universal Newsettes

The Universal Company is shortly to introduce a new kind of animal pictures, and with this end in view have engaged Major Jack Allen to direct the making of these. All officers of the Universal are reticent with respect to the making of the new pictures, and about the only information given out is that Allen will direct and play the only human part in the animal comedies.

After four weeks preparatory work Allen Holubar began the filming of the coming Dorothy Phillips release, "The Light," with William Stowell and Robert Anderson in the principal roles of the supporting cast. It is expected that at least six weeks will be required for the filming of this play.

Director Paul Powell is nearing the completion of the Mary MacLaren story,

Bessie Barriscale, in the B. B. Feature, "A Trick of Fate," distributed by Robertson-Cole

"Prairie Gold," and with the assistance of his scenario writer, Elmer Elsworth, is preparing the next story. The present subject which has an exceptionally big cast of well-known players will be finished within a week.

The Lyons & Moran Company not content with one leading woman, have this week added the second in the person of Marion Mason. Mildred Moore, who has been with this company for the past several months, will also continue. Lyons and Moran have just finished filming "Fish Out of Water," and are now engaged in the making of "The Model Husband."

Universal City had more than a usual thrill this week when Charley, the big elephant, broke his chain and started to explore the San Fernando Valley. The riot call was sent to the cowboys, zoo attaches, and a posse of 200 horseman and footman were soon after the big beast that in many instances had proven to the beholder that he was temperamental. After three hours he was driven back to his barn, and induced to back in when a new chain was snapped about his left hind foot. Terror reigned throughout the entire valley while Charley was at liberty.

Harry Lyons, elder brother of Eddie Lyons, Universal comedian, died Wednesday, March 12, of heart disease, and the funeral was held Saturday, March 15. The deceased has played in films for the past three years, taking character parts under the name of Harry Nolan. He leaves a widow and children and a big circle of friends in the film colony.

Here and There

Plans are to be announced within the very near future by Thomas H. Ince for at least one company to work at New York in the making of two or three film plays for the Paramount Program. Dorothy Dalton is to be starred in these plays, and she will go East with a company as soon as the subject she is now playing in "A Man's Wife" is completed. This is now being directed by Joseph de Grasse.

The Enid Bennett Company directed by Fred Niblo has finished the filming of the story titled, "Stepping Out," and the star and friend husband, Director Niblo, are enjoying a well-earned vacation at Coronado. It is planned that several additional companies will shortly be organized at the Ince studio.

Samuel Goldwyn after five years of trying, has at last accomplished a desire—namely, that Thompson Buchanan, easily the best known young American playwright, is now a member of the Goldwyn scenario staff, which is in charge of J. G. Hawks. Mr. Goldwyn made a contract with Buchanan which becomes effective April 15, when he begins his work at the Goldwyn studios at Culver City. Buchanan will be remembered as the author of "A Woman's Way," Grace George's successful play; "Life," successful New York melodrama, and made his debut as a scenario writer with the Goldwyn production, starring Tom Moore in "Thirty a Week." The contract with Buchanan was consummated in Chicago when Mr. Goldwyn was en route to Los Angeles.

Madge Kennedy's next production is from a book and play written by Jerome K. Jerome, and its filming will present the story in its fourth form. Originally the play was produced, starring Fannie Ward, under the title of "The New Lady Bancock," next it came out as a novel under the title, "Fannie and the Servant Problem." Last season the story was used as a plot for the New Amsterdam theatre musical comedy, "The Rainbow Girl." It is not definitely stated which title will be used for the screen production. Miss Kennedy, who has enjoyed an extended vacation to the present time, will begin work in this production on Monday, March 24, under the direction of Clarence G. Badger.

Tom Moore within a few days will complete the scenes for "The City of Comrades,'" and his next vehicle is to be the screen adaptation of an extremely well-known play. Elaborate settings for this have been prepared, and cast will be named within a few days.

Tom Moore, it is stated by Mr. Goldwyn, is to continue as a Goldwyn star for the next five years, which is a corroboration of similar report carried in MOTION PICTURE NEWS several weeks ago. Moore originally made a three-year contract with the Goldwyn Film Corporation, and a few weeks ago this was extended two more years.

Plans have been perfected for the production of two new subjects at the Goldwyn studio, one to be another Rex Beach story directed by Reginald Barker, and the other a Mabel Normand subject filmed under the direction of Victor Schertzinger.

FILMS—ONE PRICE BUSINESS?

Fluctuation of quotations for films is exceptionally well illustrated by a deal recently completed by one of our well-known coast exchange managers. A New York company wired him quotations on a special short subject ten cents a foot with two prints for the territory. The exchangeman wired back an acceptance, but the stenographer made a mistake and instead of two prints said two cents per foot. Then came another wire from the east asking "what is the best price you will pay for the territory," and Mr. Exchangeman wired back ten cents per foot for the first print and five cents per foot for the second. Whereupon he added another $100 to the profit and loss column. It is suggested by the editor of HOOKUM that Mike Rosenberg buy a dinner for film rowites of Seattle, or at least a new dress for the stenographer.

IRISH CELEBRATE BIRTHDAYS

Two well-known characters of exactly the same age celebrated their birthdays on St. Patrick's Day, the same being March 17. Friend wife of one gave a dinner party at their palatian home in Hollywood which almost ended in a row. A wonderful birthday cake containing, well, we don't know how many candles, and at least four feet in width, was brought on to the table. Mounted on the top of this was an airplane, practical in every respect and operated by an electric button at the bottom of the cake. The other celebrater and his friends were chagrined that partiality should be shown by the hostess, all thinking there should be two cakes. There were threatening clouds and riotous murmurings, and then the waiter brought on a second cake to quiet the angry mob. It was even larger than the first, and built upon the top of it was a replica of the world's greatest theatre, the million dollar temple of the cinema art, electric lights, prices and everything. This quieted everyone, and a good time was had by all—and so the birthdays of Sid Chaplin and Sid Grauman ended peacefully.

Advertising Drive by the United

Trade Journals and Newspapers with Billboards in Principal Cities Exploit United Releases

J. A. BERST, President of United Picture Theatres, Inc., announces that following upon the high standard set for itself in its inaugural production with Dustin Farnum, in "The Light of Western Stars" and with releases of still greater magnitude following in quick succession, United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., is pursuing a widespread advertising and publicity campaign designed to drive home the successes already achieved and to give all possible aid and advantage to its exhibitor-members throughout the country in their exploitation of current United releases, and concentrate the attention of the movie-going public on forthcoming United offerings.

With this object in view a series of effective insert pages are being published by United in the Motion Picture Industry Journals, liberal newspaper advertising is being employed and a special billboard campaign carried out from all important centers throughout the country.

It is further announced that strikingly artistic twenty-four sheets have been produced in effective colors and designs for each of the United star attractions, Florence Reed, Kitty Gordon and Dustin Farnum, and lobby displays of a high degree of attractiveness are not the least feature in the exploitation program undertaken.

J. A. Berst, President of United, who has been on the Pacific Coast for several weeks engaged in intensive work in the interests of the United organization, is completing a tour of constructive inspection and will shortly return to his executive desk in the Mecca building.

Announcements of more than ordinary interest, it is rumored, are likely to be forthcoming upon his return to New York.

Mr. Berst reports a consensus of marked satisfaction among exhibitors throughout the country at the astonishingly high standard set by United in its releases to date. Dustin Farnum's second United feature is said especially to have received a widespread measure of exhibitor appreciation for its swiftly moving story, wonderful outdoor photography, and the effective artistry of Dustin Farnum in the star role, the laudatory comments upon this United production being the more notable in view of the difficulty that always exists in duplicating a high standard already set, which, in this case, was set by the "Light of Western Stars."

That this standard has been not only reached but exceeded is evidenced, it is said, by voluminous communication from exhibitors now playing "A Man in the Open," who testify that the second United Dustin Farnum is exceeding in box office receipts the returns of its predecessor.

Marion Davies Busy on Another Picture

After a two weeks' rest, Marion Davies, following the release by Select Pictures of "The Belle of New York," and the cutting by Allan Dwan of her comedy drama, "Getting Mary Married," will start work next week in the Paragon Studio, Fort Lee, which has just been leased for her use, on a pretentious new production, directed by Allan Dwan, the title of which has not yet been made public, according to C. F. Zittel, head of the Marion Davies Film Corp.

It is believed that the new story will be the screen version of a well-known novel, and the supporting cast will be an all-star one.

Praises Gordon Picture

"Playthings of Passion" was given a private showing before the prints were shipped to New York, and J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres, Inc., saw it and praised the new Kitty Gordon picture very enthustically.

It was written by William Anthony McGuire, and directed by Wallace Worsley.

Claims Big Variety of Interesting Features

Universal states that the greatest variety of features yet assembled in an issue of the New Screen Magazine are contained in the latest issue of the Universal weekly Number Seven scheduled for release on April 4.

The first feature of the issue shows the care of dogs and cats in a big animal hospital. The manner in which bowsers' broken leg is mended, his furry coat being washed and dried by special apparatus and a course in feline dentistry are shown.

Eileen Cotty, fifteen-year-old toe danger, with the "Good-Morning, Judge," show, demonstrates one of her latest dance steps before the camera, providing the Magazine with the seventh feature of a series of "Moments With the Broadway Stage Stars."

A first view of spring styles which are evolved from sketches by Hy Mayer and displayed by models from the Wooltex studios, "Familiar Types We Read About," "Laughographs," selected from the leading newspapers of the country, scenes demonstrating the art of selecting millinery for youthful wearers, "A Saw Log Joy Ride," and "Miracles in Mud," by Willie Hopkins, complete the release.

Select's General Manager Visits Omaha

Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures, is said to have held an enthusiastic sales conference at Omaha.

He is now closing a six weeks' tour of the largest cities throughout the South and Middle West, for the purpose of getting in closer touch with his branch managers, salesmen and especially the exhibitors personally.

The conference was held on March 17th and among those present besides Mr. Kane were C. W. Taylor, Omaha branch manager; Messrs. Leo Levy, B. T. Cale and M. A. Greenfield, roadmen, and also Harry E. Lotz, Denver branch manager for Select Pictures.

Tyrad Announces Trade Showing April 2

The first trade showing of "Your Wife and Mine" was scheduled for Wednesday, April 2, at 3 P. M., in Wurlitzer Hall, New York City. A great many state right buyers and exhibitors were expected as a general invitation to all was extended.

This is described as a super-feature made in England and France, and is controlled by Tyrad Pictures, Inc., of 729 Seventh avenue.

"In extending this invitation broadcast to the film trade, I wish to emphasize this point," said Jacques Tyrol, secretary-treasurer and director general of the corporation, "and that is that we expressly invite criticism. Our personal opinion is that in 'Your Wife and Mine' we have a rare box-office attraction, a production that will make money for the exhibitor because it has all the virtues of a tried and true money maker. And we want those who will attend our showing to tell us with all candor just what they think of it. We confidently believe that they will agree with us."

Says Picture Is Timely

An official of United Picture Theatres, Inc., says that at a time when activities for women, women's votes, congresswomen and women street car conductors are part of daily life they are presenting Kitty Gordon in a superpicture which, while in no sense carrying a mission, whether feminine or otherwise, is timely in subject and replete with modern day interest.

"Playthings of Passion," from the pen of William Anthony McGuire is described as a striking story of society and of tenement life depicting the adventures of a young society woman who interests herself in "uplift" work in the slums.

Geraghty with United

Tom J. Geraghty, formerly a New York newspaper man, has been engaged by President J. A. Berst, of United Picture Theatres, Inc., to write the scenarios of the forthcoming productions, featuring Kitty Gordon and Dustin Farnum.

Mr. Geraghty's latest endeavors have been "The Unpardonable Sin," "A Heart in Pawn" and "A One-Hundred Per-Cent American."

"The Red Lantern" is declared by Metro to be Nazimova's greatest production

Harma to Make Official "Mayflower" Picture

According to reports from England, a fine tribute has been paid to the British Film Industry. The Official Mayflower Celebration Committee, under the Presidency of His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, has authorized the Harma Film Company to produce the official "Mayflower" film, which will be exploited on both sides of the water in connection with the Mayflower Tercentenary.

Both President Wilson and the British Premier have expressed their interest in the project and have written to the company commending the idea, it is said.

"The plans of the 'Mayflower Celebration film,'" writes President Wilson, "interest me very much indeed, and I hope sincerely that these plans will meet with the most gratifying success. The trip of the Mayflower, as we now look back to it, has a new and fresh significance.

"It was the first movement of the shuttle which has woven so close a fabric of intimacy between the two sides of the water."

Lloyd-George says: "At this momentous time when America is indissolubly linked with us in extending liberty all over the world, the official cinematograph of the Mayflower story will do much to show the people both of America and of this country what we together owe to our forefathers, to quicken their love of Liberty and to establish that peace for which the descendants of the men of the 'Mayflower' have fought and died side by side with our British sons."

The theme of this big film is an international one, and with the official commendation of the heads of the two governments it will be looked upon on both sides of the water as a great historical production of mutual interest.

Harry Maze Jenks, the proprietor of Harma Photo-Plays, is most enthusiastic about this production, and is anxious that every detail in connection with the voyage of the Pilgrim Fathers from Plymouth Sound to America should be correct and authentic. He has just arrived in America with his technical adviser.

G. W. Bitzer Scores on Griffith Photography

No more beautiful photography has ever been seen in motion pictures, it is said, than that in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," D. W. Griffith's latest Artcraft production, which is released March 23. This photography, of course, is the work of George William Bitzer, who has been chief cameraman for Mr. Griffith since the latter's early Biograph days. Conspicuous for their beauty are a number of portrait close-ups of Carol Dempster and Richard Barthelmess, done in Mr. Bitzer's distinctive style and by the process which he himself discovered and made first use of in Mr. Griffith's Artcraft picture, "The Greatest Thing in Life." The longer shots, too, are said to be strikingly artistic, the great director and his cameraman outdoing even the best of their former efforts.

The role which Robert Harron has in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," is said to be probably the most interesting which that sterling young actor has yet essayed. It is that of the son of a man who owns a string of shipyards. A brother has enlisted in the army immediately after America's entrance into the war, but when our boy's card comes through Uncle Sam's mill it is found that he isn't any larger, any wiser or any better than the son of the poorest laborer in the employ of the shipyard owner. Despite the fact that the son is placed at work in the shipyard at a job the old man has decided is essential, the draft detectives insist that a woman can file time cards just as well as he can, and a few days later the young man awakes with a stiff back and sore feet, due to drilling about eight and one-half hours the preceding day. After some days of torture he learns how not to weaken. The role is said to open to Mr. Harron a new line of honors which even he himself did not know he deserved.

Jesse L. Lasky presents Fred Stone in "Johnny Get Your Gun," Artcraft release. Charles Ray appears to be making progress in "The Sheriff's Son," a Paramount. Vivian Martin stars in "Little Comrade"

Constance Talmadge in "Veiled Adventure"

"THE VEILED ADVENTURE" is the title of the Constance Talmadge production to follow her current Select release, "Experimental Marriage," which Lewis J. Selznick states is receiving an enormous volume of advance dates in first run houses throughout the country.

Julia Crawford Ivers wrote both the original story and the scenario of "The Veiled Adventure." This is the first original story to be used as picture material for Constance Talmadge this season, her most recent attractions, "Experimental Marriage," "Romance and Arabella," "Who Cares?" "A Lady's Name," "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots," "Sauce for the Goose," and "A Pair of Silk Stockings" having been adapted from plays or novels by prominent authors.

The story is being directed by Walter Edwards, and Miss Talmadge's leading man will be Harrison Ford.

The plot of "The Veiled Adventure" concerns Geraldine Barker, a young society girl, who is engaged to Reggie Crocker. One night she finds a woman's veil in his pocket, but before she has a chance to speak to him about it, Reggie goes away on a trip, saying that he will not be home until the night their engagement is made public. In the meantime, Geraldine becomes acquainted with Dick Annesly, a diamond in the rough from Texas.

Dick has a few ideas of his own concerning women, but Geraldine takes matters in hand and proceeds to "teach him a lesson."

According to the synopsis and advance information from the coast, "The Veiled Adventure" gives promise of being one of Miss Talmadge's most pleasing vehicles. There is plenty of action and an unusually entertaining plot. Another important consideration is a very capable cast, including in addition to Mr. Ford, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Vera Doria, Rosita Marstini, T. D. Crittenden, Eddie Sutherland, Margaret Loomis and Vera Sisson.

Raver Comments Upon "As a Man Thinks"

HARRY RAVER, producer, under Four Star auspices of "As a Man Thinks," film version of Augustus Thomas' speaking stage success of that name, now practically completed, considers the new picture to be a striking illustration of the value of direct co-operation between author, producer, director and star.

"The trouble with too many so-called adaptations," said Mr. Raver, "is that they are not adaptations at all, but mere mechanical make-shifts carrying titles that are considered to have commercial value, but having little else to commend them to the exhibitor.

"Everybody familiar with Augustus Thomas' work knows that his plays, from the time he wrote 'Editha's Burglar' in 1889 up to and including his latest offering, 'The Copperhead,' now enjoying success, have been action plays—plays in which people do things every minute, as distinguished from plays in which people say much and do little.

"'Alabama,' 'Colonel Carter of Cartersville,' 'The Earl of Pawtucket,' 'The Witching Hour,' 'The Education of Mr. Pipp,' and, in fact, all of the thirty-two Thomas plays I happen to recall, are so full of action, and the plots are so cohesive, that it would be quite possible to film the original speaking stage situations and achieve fairly satisfactory pictorial drama as a result."

Claims Denver Record

Mary Miles Minter in "The Amazing Impostor," is reported to have broken all box-office records in a three-day run at the Strand theatre in Denver.

A. F. Meaghan is said to have declared that "our patrons were delighted. The story was good, photography and lighting effects superb, the cast exceedingly well chosen, settings, acting and direction above criticism."

United Publishes Some Figures

A study of figures has been published by United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. They mark the course of United's intensive campaign for stock franchise members—a campaign that began on March 3 last.

These figures are really a growth-chart. They show an increase in the number of United Theatres of more than 473 per cent. in a period of five months.

These figures, which United officials say can be vouched for before a notary if necessary, show that on August 31 last United had 374 theatres. On September 30, United had 413 theatres. On October 31 United had 494 theatres. On November 30 there were 600 theatres in United. On December 31 the number of United theatres was 923—then began the big progress in United growth. On January 31, 1919, there were 1,411 theatres enrolled in United. On February 23 the number was 1,884. On March 22 there were 2,144 United theatres in the United States.

Fine Role Selected for Earle Williams

Vitagraph reports that in selecting Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey's sensational novel, "A Gentleman of Quality," as a screen production for Earle Williams, Vitagraph gave to Mr. Williams what will rank as perhaps the most powerful role he has had sinse he played "The Christian."

He is given the opportunity to do some extremely clever character work.

Pearl White Serial Progresses

Work is progressing rapidly on the big Pearl White-Robert W. Chambers serial, "In Secret," which is being produced by George B. Seitz, Inc., for release by Pathe. This striking combination of the talents of the world's most famous serial star and America's most popular author is arousing unusual interest among exhibitors and public alike.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to January 5, 1919.

WOMAN, WOMAN (FOX) EVELYN NESBIT (JAN. 26)....FEB. 8
" Deals boldly with sex question; morals of heroine lax."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—" Average business."

WORLD TO LIVE IN, THE (SELECT) ALICE BRADY (FEB. 17) ....MAR. 8
" Presents star in a new role; some situations exaggerated."—M.P.News.

Individual Opinions on Earlier Releases Received During the Past Week

" Girl of My Dreams" (Exhibitors-Mutual)—" Very good. Patrons were all pleased. Extra big business two days."

" Those Without Sin" (Blanche Sweet)—" Average business."

" Song of the Soul" (Alice Joyce)—" Average business."

" Under Four Flags" (World-U. S. Official)—" Big business."

" Out of the Wreck" (Kathlyn Williams)—" Poor business."

" Raffles" (State Rights)—" Good picture, but lacks star. Poor business."

" The Guilty Man" (Paramount)—" Very good, but did not come to expectations as a special. Average business."

" I'll Say So" (Fox)—" Seemed to like it. Big business."

" Playing the Game" (Paramount)—" Ray is getting stronger here all the time. Big business."

" Woman Who Gave" (Fox)—" Nothing but the star to draw and it did not satisfy those who came. Average business first day, big business second day."

" Borrowed Clothes" (Jewel)—" Advertised this as Mrs. Charles Chaplin and brought them in. Every one liked the picture. Well produced and wonderfully lighted."

" A Woman's Fool" (Universal)—" Fine picture to average business."

" Salome" (Fox)—" Padded, but fair picture. Extra big business first day then slumped to average business only at advanced prices."

" The Panther Woman" (First National)—" Average picture, but big business two days."

" Mickey" (State Rights)—" Extra big entire week after one big week at our other theatre. No comments necessary. Everyone pleased. Producer, cast, star and situations all great."

" Bondman" (Reissue)—" Very poor photography. Average business."

" Treat 'em Rough" (Fox)—" Splendid picture to big business."

" One Woman" (Select)—" Bad weather. Lost money. Don't think people liked it anyway. No one complimented it much and some said they didn't like it. Poor business."

" Up the Road with Sallie" (Select)—" Big business."

" Treat 'em Rough" (Fox)—" Mix a comer. Big business."

" Cannibals of the South Seas" (Exhibitors-Mutual)—" A very good drawing card and liked."

" Romance of Tarzan" (First National)—" First day S. R. O., second day fair. Pleased."

" Her Only Way" (Select)—" Good picture, fair business."

" The She Devil" (Fox)—" Big business in big down town house."

" Secret Marriage" (Triangle)—" Poor business."

" Bonnie Annie Laurie" (Fox)—" Average business."

" Under Four Flags" (World-U. S. Official)—" Five reels of weekly to average business."

" The Hell Cat" (Goldwyn)—" Star beginning to get them back."

" The Woman Who Gave" (Fox)—" Poor, but better than 'I Want to Forget.' Poor business."

" The Gypsy Trail" (Paramount)—" Pleased to average business."

" Ali Baba" (Fox)—" Good picture, but kids don't pull. Poor business."

" Cruise of the Make-Believes" (Paramount)—" Pretty. Clean. Pleasing. But don't draw."

" I'll Say So" (Fox)—" Good snappy picture. Lots of action. Not much to plot, but star puts it over. Good action picture for young folks. Big business three days."

" Make Believe Wife" (Paramount)—" Only fair picture. Average business."

" Sporting Life" (Paramount-Artcraft Special)—" Extra big business three days in conjunction with Arbuckle comedy."

" Women's Weapons" (Paramount)—" Average business."

" Her Great Chance" (Select)—" Brady don't go very well."

" Greatest Thing in Life" (Artcraft)—" Big business in spite of tough opposition."

" On the Quiet" (Paramount)—" Average business."

" Her Man" (Pathe)—" Average business two days."

" Marionettes" (Select)—" Average business."

" Temple of Dusk" (Exhibitors Mutual)—" The Jap came back strong to extra big business."

" Gypsy Trail" (Paramount)—" Not extra. Just fair. Average business."

" Marriage Price" (Artcraft)—" An entertaining picture. The popularity of the star drew them in and a larger part of our patrons were pleased."

" The One Woman" (Select-Special)—" Very strong dramatically. Created a great diversity of opinion. Very few of our regulars among the women patrons cared for it. Male critics on our daily papers were enthusiastic in their praise. But it did not prove a strong drawing card."

" Struggle Everlasting" (Special)—" Book this one, especially if you have middle-class to high class English speaking patronage. It's a corker all the way through, and of course Florence Reed is one of the best drawing cards we ever had in our houses. Never overlooked a bet with Florence in it."

" Japanese Nightingale" (Pathe)—" This is one of the few older pictures put out that still attracts. Fannie Ward is always a good drawing card and the picture has lost none of its charm and appeal."

" Ruling Passions" (Select Special)—" As a rule when Select puts out anything and calls it 'Special,' you can bank on it being one. This is true of 'Ruling Passions.' A wonderfully strong story with an almost flawless cast. Four days to big business."

" Tarzan of the Apes" (First National)—" Drew the same in two nights that 'Romance of Tarzan' drew in one. Exhibitors should advertise the fact that first picture would not be complete. This caused complaint from everybody."

" Rich Poor Man" (Metro)—" Bushman and Bayne drew well in a very fine and pleasing picture."

" Battling Jane" (Paramount)—" Light story but star pleases. Extra big business."

" Rosemary Climbs the Heights" (American-Pathe)—" Mary Miles Minter is a good card. Big business two days."

" Good Bye Bill" (Paramount)—" This so-called feature would make a swell two-reeler."

" Cruise of the Make-Believes" (Paramount)—" Just a fair picture. Big business."

" The Eleventh Commandment" (Ralph Ince)—" Excellent. Good business. New star for our house. Four-day run in high class down town house."

" The Gypsy Trail" (Paramount)—" Another picture like this will finish Washburn."

" The Hun Within" (Paramount)—" Extraordinary picture but the word 'Hun' killed it. If it had been given a name like 'The Mysterious Man Within' it would have gone over good. We have been Hunned to death and people hate the word, 'Hun'."

" Fedora" (Paramount)—" An average Frederick production. The kind that people don't give a continental for."

" Under the Greenwood Tree" (Artcraft)—" A high art picture. Classy atmosphere. Pleased highly. Poor business two days."

" Marriage Ring" (Paramount)—" Very good Bennett picture. Better than her other ones. Big business."

" Greatest Thing in Life" (Artcraft)—" It's the best Griffith ever but had too much competition."

" Winning of Beatrice"—" Very good picture to average business."

" Hugon the Mighty" (Universal)—" Very fine picture. Well acted and one of the cleanest Northern pictures we have had. Big business."

" The Risky Road" (Universal)—" Very good picture. When playing pictures only one night one cannot judge of the drawing power."

"Flashbacks" — New Theatres Building

"Eye for Eye" (Nazimova-Metro)—"Fascinating picture. Star does wonderful work. Extra big business."

"Too Many Millions" (Paramount)—"Average business."

"Les Miserables" (Fox)—"Extra big business. Best bet so far this season."

"City of Dim Faces" (Exhibitors Mutual)—"Average business with Hayakawa."

"The Lesson" (Select)—"Big business three days with Constance Talmadge."

"Sauce for the Goose" (Select)—"Not quite so good as most Constance Talmadge pictures. Big business."

"A Law Unto Herself" (Louise Glaum)—"Not a very strong picture. Star does not take here."

"The Lure of Luxury" (Bluebird)—"Took well with my Saturday crowd."

"Three X Gordon" (Hodkinson)—"This got over very good although didn't draw."

"Toys of Fate" (Nazimova-Metro)—"Star not known or liked here. Believe it a little of both."

"The Bells" (Keenan-Pathe)—"Pleased nobody and drew poor."

"The Goddess of Lost Lake" (Hodkinson)—"Best Louise Glaum we have ever had. Wonderful scenery. Indian type goes fine for a change. Average business."

"Unexpected Places" (Metro)—"Good. They like Bert Lytell. Average business."

"At the Mercy of Men" (Select)—"Alice Brady liked. Picture went over great at increased business the second day."

WHEN USED TO DESCRIBE A MOTION PICTURE MACHINE MEANS MORE THAN JUST A TRADE-NAME—MORE THAN AN ASSORTMENT OF GEARS AND SHAFTS.

IT REPRESENTS THE DETERMINED EFFORTS OF THE KEENEST BRAINS OF THE INDUSTRY TO GIVE TO THOSE WHO SHOW MOTION PICTURES ALL THAT CAN BE DESIRED IN SIMPLICITY—ALL THAT IS BEST IN WORKMANSHIP —ALL THAT CAN BE DEVISED IN SAFEGUARDING THE PUBLIC— AND ALL THAT IS NEEDED IN PROJECTING THE MASTERPIECES OF THE FILM MAKERS' ART IN THE MANNER IN WHICH THEY WERE INTENDED.

THE WORD "SIMPLEX" IN THE PROJECTION ROOM IS THE HALL-MARK FOR PEERLESS PROJECTION—PERFECT PROTECTION—IDEAL SELECTION.

"WHEN A GIRL LOVES"—JEWEL

Immense Both from the Box Office and from the Screen

THERE can be little, if any, doubt regarding the great value of this production, for besides offering the exhibitor a star in the person of Mrs. Charlie Chaplin, the story it presents is vitally strong, and to match its many dramatic highlights it has snatches of comedy that instantly appeal to the popular mind.

The reviewer was present at the Broadway Theatre at a crowded Saturday matinee exhibition of the film and the audience practically "ate the picture up." It was interested in the star, immensely so; there were whispers on her entrance and even the succeeding times she appeared comments could be heard throughout the house.

But "When a Girl Loves" offers real entertainment after it has drawn the crowds. The story of the bad man who assumes a minister's role, at first for evil purposes, and who is won over to the side of right by a combination of influences, proves intensely interesting.

Lois Weber in her direction of the picture has staged it with full command of her craft and has proven herself in this work excellent in the dual capacity of author and director. William Stowell makes a commanding hero.—Length, 6 reels.—Peter Milne.

Who Threw That Brick?

Peppy Polly—Right through a jewelry store window. And the judge said, "Three years."

You see, Polly had a pal—a poor little thing who had been sick and out of a job and had gone the easiest way. And when Polly, on a "visitors' day" saw the brutal way her little pal had been treated she decided on a clean-up.

So, to collect more evidence, Polly heaved that brick, and rode in the "black Maria."

In jail was Dr. Jim—there merely to call on his patients, of course; and the rest is a happy blending of laughs, tears and thrilling, heart-warming drama.

If you saw saucy, lovable Dorothy Gish in "Battling Jane" and as the Little Disturber in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," you'll know she gets what she goes after in "Peppy Polly"—including Dr. Jim.

By Marjorie Raynale. Scenario by M. M. Stearns. Directed by Elmer Clifton. Photographed by John Leezer. Leigh R. Smith, Technical Director.

There's Money in It!

"STELLA MARIS" was a clean-up for exhibitors, "Amarilly" was a riot, a gold mine. "M'Liss," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Johanna Enlists"—all the Mary Pickford Artcraft pictures brought big coin into the box-office window.

Now comes another Mary Pickford picture, the first in seven months.

From a famous play by a famous author.

With the same scenarioist, director and production that made all the others big money getters.

Cash in on it! There's money in it! Big money. And it's yours.

"The Girl Who Stayed At Home"

An ARTCRAFT Picture

WHAT people say is the strongest force in the world today. Word of mouth advertising has the biggest pull of all. These criticisms (on the opposite page) of "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" reflect the word of mouth advertising that comes to you when you show this picture.

These New York critics are not professional motion picture men. They are of the rank and file of the typical motion picture audience—the same sort of audience that comes to see your pictures. They judge just as the public judges—not alone the New York public, but the whole American public—people from all over the United States, the kind of people from the small towns and larger cities who fill the theatres of New York every night.

It's not a coincidence—there's a reason why all these laudatory criticisms agree. You will find that reason in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home."

Adapted from the story by S. E. V. Taylor
Photographed by G. W. Bitzer
Personally directed by D. W. Griffith

They Say Just What Your Audiences Will Say

N. Y. Times: "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," satisfies every expectation. Judged by the Griffith standard, it is good. In some ways it even adds to its producer's long list of achievements.

Mr. Griffith has been noted for his ability to handle plots of varied and extensive range, but he has never done it so well before in a photoplay designed for routine exhibition. "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" is not what is called in the trade a "super-production," it is a regular Artcraft release; yet it has all of the scope and wealth of treatment that might be put into a "super" film.

Another characteristic that it shares with the greater Griffith productions is its blending of melodrama, delineation of character and humor. And, of course, Mr. Griffith's subtlety and strength in making scenes of pure beauty and of dramatic meaning, has not failed him. He is not only an artist in pictorial composition, but, by technical skill, often along original lines, he produces effects that others in time learn to imitate. No pictures seem to have the perspective of his. And when Griffith does make a close up, it is a soft, delicately shaded portrait. These remarks, while general, are pertinent here because they appertain particularly to "The Girl Who Stayed at Home."

N. Y. Morning Sun: The picture has less scenes devoted to the world conflict itself than most ambitious war pictures, but Griffith once more reveals even in the swift glimpses shown that only Napoleon, Caesar and a few others surpassed him in staging a war. In Clarine Seymour, he has a player who can do a vibratory walk that is like shaking the shimmy without music. Robert Harron, Richard Barthelmess, George Fawcett, Tully Marshall and Carol Dempster carry the honors in a cast that is heavily coated with talent.

N. Y. Morning World: An excellent example of the artistic work of D. W. Griffith as a producer. Makes unusually good moving picture entertainment because of its dramatic action and effective photography.

N. Y. Herald: D. W. Griffith's new photo drama combines humor with war thrills. Bobby Harron in one of the best comedy parts he has had in a long time, and Miss Clarine Seymour as a charming little cabaret dancer, were the principals in a well chosen cast.

N. Y. American: Mr. Griffith has again done something different—not only in production, but in selecting the material and the cast, and it is a happy medium that serves to introduce new faces in a Griffith production.

One of the young women is Clarine Seymour. It took the unerring eye that gave us Mary Pickford and the Gish girls to feature her.

N. Y. Telegraph: Griffith has a fortunate habit of letting his audience into the secret that he is thoroughly enjoying the discomfiture, the pangs, and the aspirations of his young heroes and heroines. He lifts the commonplace above the ordinary by means of a little gentle, kindly humor.

It is in the treatment that Griffith shows what he can do with a simple tale. He makes it all real, and so plausible, and brings it very close to every one. . . . That is where Griffith gets his audience. He appeals to them each individually.

N. Y. Telegram: Even if the circus is coming the director at the Strand Theatre is not a bit worried. This week he is projecting D. W. Griffith's new production, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home." The story is dramatic and intensely interesting, lightened with touches of genuine comedy. The pictures show the genius of Mr. Griffith as a motion picture creator.

N. Y. Post: It is a typical Griffith piece, done on a gigantic scale, with thrilling battle scenes, a host of characters, beautiful scenes, several love stories, and a plot that never lags.

N. Y. Evening Sun: The great master of battle pieces ventures to hold the fearsome incidents of the field down to due proportion in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home." In direction and photography it is in every respect worthy of Mr. Griffith.

N. Y. Globe: A series of shadow impressions of the boys who marched away, the battles they fought, and the girls they left behind them. Clarine Seymour is one of these girls—a slangy, bewitching little tomboy—and Robert Harron and Richard Barthelmess are the very appealing young veterans.

N. Y. Mail: It is the best of his Artcraft series. No one is going to complain because "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" is a war picture. For that matter, Griffith's war pictures are about the only war pictures nowadays that have any thrill in them, the only ones that offer convincing imitations of the real thing. D. W. is a whole military school in himself. You cannot describe the plot because its producer has interwoven several plots in the manner of his earlier spectacle dramas. He is the only producer who is able to do this without offering his audience a screen jig-saw puzzle.

N. Y. Journal of Commerce: There are many features displayed in D. W. Griffith's latest photoplay, "The Girl Who Stayed at Home," that are refreshingly new. It cannot be called a war play. A few short chapters deal with actual fighting and have to do exclusively with the charge and siege of one of the lost companies that faced the Germans in the Argonne. While Robert Harron, George Fawcett and Tully Marshall are seen to great advantage in the more prominent roles, the little girl who stayed at home, as played by Clarine Seymour, won the most distinction. She possesses unusual beauty and intelligence.

HODKINSON TAKES LEAD WITH FOUR BIG LINES

1 Zane Grey Pictures, Inc.

Zane Grey's own company—the biggest series of pictures under production—starting off with a remarkable picturization of "Desert Gold," the famous novel of this most popular of all American novelists.

2 Augustus Thomas–Harry Raver
Four Star Artco Productions

A series of powerful photodramas, directed by George Irving and featuring Leah Baird, beginning with a splendid production of Mr. Thomas' famous play, "As a Man Thinks."

3 J. Warren Kerrigan

in even better pictures, concentrating all the proven popularity of this virile star in a new series of photoplays of the highest type.

4 Wait!

This one is so big in scope that we are going to hold it for a separate announcement, all its own. But watch for it—for it is going to be the most important series of productions actually initiated since the birth of motion pictures.

W. W. Hodkinson

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation now takes its long prepared-for position of leadership in the motion picture industry, with four big new lines of product that will stand out, taken together, as the best pictures now being produced. The opposite page tells you what they are.

THE first two have already been announced. The Kerrigan pictures are a living example of our selective machinery, for Kerrigan is the only line we have kept out of our entire past year's product.

The fourth new line is so big that we are holding its announcement for a later date. When we do announce it, present idols will totter.

We have taken the lead. No other concern is going to put out a better line of pictures, because no other concern is free to do it; no other concern is free from producer or exhibitor domination. We are.

If we can't get pictures that come up to our standards we will cut our releases down to one a month—or one a year. But this we stand on: We are going to lead and continue to lead from this day forward.

THE ETERNAL MAGDALENE

From the big stage success
by Robert H. Mc Laughlin

She strikes at the heart and the sympathy of humanity.

She is the ever-present sinner of all ages from the birth of the world till the end of the world.

She is in every city, town and village on earth—openly and boldly, or secretly.

She is civilization's greatest mystery.

The hunted woman.

The strange woman.

The painted woman.

All America will know her remarkably fascinating story in an unusual Goldwyn production, which begins its showings in the leading cities and theatres of the nation April 20.

Some great philosopher on affairs of the heart must have written the titles for "Daughter of Mine."

Some wise love doctor who knows that in America, in the new world, a difference in race or religion cannot keep a girl out of the arms of the boy she loves.

There's a lovely, sweet, laughable story in "Daughter of Mine." It is a clean taste picture. Long after you have seen it yourself you will be saying to friends: "I'll tell you a fine picture you ought to book in your theatre. My audiences thought it was great."

The tragi-comedy romance, the win-out-over-obstacles love story of Rosie Mendelsohn and George Howard will make everyone who sees it enjoy life more.

Where No Other Motion Picture Has Ever Been Shown

Several thousand schoolrooms, labor union lyceums and meeting places, churches, lodges and organizations of similar character have projection machines and show motion pictures of an educational character.

In nine out of every ten such cases, the one and only screen educational feature that is being shown and ever has been shown in such places is the Settlement houses make use of it regularly as the great Americanizer. It is rated as the first and best attraction of its kind.

FORD EDUCATIONAL

WEEKLY

In selecting an educational weekly it is impossible to think of any other one in the motion picture industry ahead of the Ford Educational Weekly—because there is no other one with its completeness, its quality, its fineness and value.

Goldwyn, as the distributor, is serving 4,000 theatre accounts regularly each week with the Ford Educational Weekly.

In addition to being prepared to serve quickly 1,000 additional small town theatres without delays we now announce that we can serve with equal promptness 1,000 more schools, lodges, granges, union lyceums, churches and factories or industrial organizations. The cost of this fine service is surprisingly and amazingly low. Ask the nearest Goldwyn office manager about it.

New exhibitor customers contract for the Betzwood-Louis Bennison Star Series at an average weekly rate of 300 theatres per week.

Exactly the theatres everywhere that play the Goldwyn productions book, play and are enthusiastic about Louis Bennison.

Louis Bennison is today playing in close to 2,000 theatres—and the remarkable fact is that three pictures have made him the fine success that he is.

You should be prompt to sign up for "Oh, Johnny!" "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U" and his four other forthcoming productions. "Speedy Meade" is pronounced to be one of the fastest western pictures of the season.

THE BORDER LEGION

Starring
Blanche Bates and Hobart Bosworth
Directed by
T. HAYES HUNTER

At least 5,000 motion picture theatres in the United States regard powerful melodrama as the best kind of attraction they can put on their screens to attract audiences.

These theatres, numbering among them the majority of the country's first run accounts, never tire of asking for pictures with a punch.

Therefore, it is no surprise to Goldwyn to witness the immediate convincing success of "The Border Legion" in all sections, for it is melodrama at its best. It has punch. It has thrills. It has a big, gripping love story.

It is a story of hard fighting and desperate riding in romantic California in the gold-mad days of '49. It is the kind of picture audiences remember. It has powerful, brilliant direction.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD

HAROLD LOCKWOOD, our friend and the friend of the millions in America will live for future generations through the magic of the screen.

As a tribute to him we have saved what we believe to be his greatest picture for the final presentation in the great Lockwood series of productions.

The character of David Smith which he portrays is typical of his own splendid battle toward success. It is clean as he was clean, manly as he was manly, romantic and lovable as he was, and living on, is lovable.

We suggest to the thousands of Exhibitors who will present this picture to their audiences that they present it as a tribute to a fine and manly character, the man of honor, who helped to make the screen a finer, better thing.

The Exhibitors of America

IMMEDIATELY following the first announcement that the Independent Sales Corporation would release the Rothapfel Unit Programme, leading theatres throughout the country literally deluged me with inquiries concerning the proposition, asking particularly to explain the meaning of "Unit Programme."

Later announcements stated that the "Unit Programme" consisted of a "complete show from overture to final curtain" including music arranged especially for the whole performance, lighting and scenic effects, magazine and novelty films, a high class comedy and a dramatic feature, all produced under the personal supervision of S. L. Rothapfel, formerly managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Strand theatres, New York City.

Since these announcements appeared, many exhibitors followed up their previous inquiries with contracts and applications for contracts for the entire series of six "Units," which to my mind is the most gratifying manifestation of confidence in the propositon they could possibly offer.

Being an exhibitor myself as well as a distributor naturally I have been interested in the proposition from the exhibitor's angle and I cannot refrain from telling you this much in advance—judging from the finished subjects I have seen, it may be truly said that the Rothapfel Unit Programme will prove beyond all question the Highest Class Entertainment in the World.

Your application for contract, if placed with the branch of the Independent Sales Corporation nearest your theatre, will receive immediate consideration.

SURGEON GENERAL BLUE of the U. S. Navy—
"It has a most striking and telling lesson."

MINISTER PEZET of Peru—
"There can be no doubt but that the performance will have great uplifting power and accomplish the good for which it was created."

RABBI SIMON of Washington Hebrew Congregation—
"If I could preach a sermon one-tenth as powerful, I would consider that I had achieved the triumph of my life."

MARTHA P. FALCONER, Chairman Social Hygiene Section, National Conference of Charities and Corrections—
"Everyone deeply impressed."

REV. ALEXANDER GRANT, Des Moines, Iowa—
"A powerful and eloquent sermon. I have never seen the wages of sin more powerfully set forth."

ESTELLE LAWSON, Chairman Welfare Committee, Los Angeles—
"I consider it a public blessing that such a play has been screened."

State Rights Now Selling!

State Rights are now being allotted on the celebrated feature production "Damaged Goods"—the biggest box-office attraction of a decade—a picture that has broken records in every theatre in which it has played. Not a print of it has been shown for months. All prints were long ago withdrawn from the market. Exhibitors have been so insistent for an opportunity of again showing "Damaged Goods" that we are now offering it to State Rights buyers.

Write! Wire!

Applications for territory are now being received. Write, wire or phone, stating territory in which you are interested. Applications will be considered in the order in which they are received.

A. G. FORBES, Manager Class A. Theatre, Spokane, Wash.—
"'Damaged Goods' has caused the greatest sensation in Spokane of any picture that has been shown here. We have turned them away at every performance. We had 16,000 paid admissions at 25 cents."

CHARLES J. HILLES, Manager Unique and Lyric Theatre, Eau Claire, Wis.
"'Damaged Goods' broke all records at the Lyric theatre. The people literally fought to get in. I never saw anything like it since I have been in the business. The nearest approach was with 'The Birth of a Nation.'"

H. A. SIMS, Manager Liberty Theatre, Salt Lake City, Utah—
"'Damaged Goods' showed to capacity business at every performance. It has broken all house records for this theatre. I consider it the strongest feature ever produced."

H. M. THOMAS, Strand Amusement Company, Omaha, Neb.—
"We have broken all records with 'Damaged Goods.' We had to use seven policemen to handle the crowds."

WALTER F. SCOTT, Mgr. Savoy Theatre, Wilmington, Delaware—
"Had to call police to handle the crowds trying to get into theatre last night. There were 300 people waiting in line when the theatre opened in the morning. 'Damaged Goods' is the talk of the town."

A picture rich in humor and snappy in action that will add new laurels to the splendid achievements of Miss Rhodes.

It is one of those corking comedy-dramas that follows a tear with a big wholesome laugh. It has a wind-up that is going to send your audiences out happier than they have been in a long time.

"The Love Call" is an adaptation of the widely read book of the same name by Marjorie Benton Cooke.

Modern Husbands

Produced by National Film Corporation of America

The full force of Walthall's compelling acting is strongly registered in this production.

In story, construction, dramatic and entertainment value it is regarded as Walthall's most notable achievement.

The gripping story pits him against a love pirate who is instrumental in wrecking his home. The splendid way in which he rises to the protection of friendship has never been told more beautifully or convincingly.

Re-Adjustment

A CAREFUL ANALYSIS OF RENTALS throughout the United States convinced United that 2,300 motion picture theatres, ranging from the biggest to the smallest in the country, would exactly enable United to break even on the total cost, of each of its productions, provided the percentages of this total cost, when paid in the form of rentals by these 2,300 theatres, were based upon the rentals these theatres were paying other companies for productions of a drawing power similar to those of United.

ON MARCH 29TH THE NUMBER OF THEATRES under contract with United in the United States was 2,195. In taking these contracts, United Salesmen and Managers, in some cases, insisted upon a percentage higher than the normal rentals paid by an exhibitor for productions similar in drawing power to those of United. In other cases, United Managers and Salesmen granted percentages lower than the normal rentals paid other companies for productions of a drawing power similar to those of United.

THE RE-ADJUSTMENT period has now begun. In many instances United has granted reductions in percentages. In many instances United has insisted upon an increase in such percentages.

The following is an example of the fairness of the average exhibitor who has entered United:

MR. A. FRANKEL, President of the Hawkeye Amusement Company, owner of the Rialto Theatre of Des Moines, Iowa, signed a stock franchise contract with United on November 20th, 1918. This contract called for two shares of United stock at $250.00 a share and provided for two playing days for each United production at a percentage classification of 1/20 of 1%. In actual rentals, this percentage of the total production and distribution cost amounted to $42.50 per day for each Dustin Farnum production; $41.00 per day for each Florence Reed production; and $37.00 per day for each Kitty Gordon production.

THE RIALTO THEATRE played Dustin Farnum in "The Light of Western Stars" to capacity business. It played Kitty Gordon in Adele—The Nurse's Story—to capacity business. It played each of the above productions four days. This was not in accordance with the Rialto's contract but was allowed by United in order that the Rialto Theatre might be thoroughly convinced of the drawing power of United productions.

On March 29th, Mr. A. Frankel called at the Home Office of United and signed a new stock franchise contract with United. Mr. Frankel admitted that he was paying United less rental than other companies whose productions had not proven as successful financially. On behalf of his company Mr. Frankel PURCHASED TWO ADDITIONAL SHARES of United stock. Under this new contract the Rialto Theatre is entitled to play each United production four days. Instead, however, of its original classification of 1/20 of 1%, the new contract calls for a percentage classification of 1/17 of 1%. This percentage classification amounts in rentals to—Dustin Farnum productions, $50.00 per day; Florence Reed productions, $48.23 per day; Kitty Gordon productions, $43.52 per day.

Mr. Frankel, on behalf of his company, THANKED UNITED FOR THE PRIVILEGE of allowing the Hawkeye Amusement Company to purchase two additional shares of United stock.

"I consider this franchise the most valuable one our Company has ever obtained," says Mr. Frankel, upon signing his new contract.

A SURE MONEY GETTING PRODUCTION

For State Right Buyers!

"THE LAW OF NATURE"

A BIG SPECIAL FEATURE

Produced By

David G. Fischer Productions

Under the personal direction of

David G. Fischer

DISTRIBUTED BY ARROW FILM CORP.

What the Critics Say:

Stephen Bush in "Billboard"

This is a massive and impressive feature. The director succeeded in assembling a remarkably good cast. All the characterization work is above the average. Miss NeMoyer was a revelation to those who saw the performance. Vincent Coleman gave a most convincing representation of a young man full of good intentions, but lacking in will and character. This picture being a special feature full constitutes an evening's entertainment.

George T. Pardy in "Exhibitors' Trade Review"

THIS PICTURE SHOULD BE HEAVILY BILLED AS A VERY SPECIAL FEATURE.

In every way it should be played up as a particularly strong attraction. Director Fischer presents a production with decidedly vigorous punch. The work of Frances NeMoyer as Gene Moore, the siren of the play, calls for unstinted praise. She moves through the hazy atmosphere of unbridled lust and feverish pleasures and evil incarnation of Panther like grace and dainty abandon, indolent, pitiless and withal alluring. She is the vampire par excellence, an artistic creation calculated to arouse feelings of envy in the breasts of many a star exponent of feminine screen wickedness.

Laurence Reid in "N. Y. Review"

"LAW OF NATURE"—POWERFUL DRAMA.

David G. Fischer Productions, Inc., who are presenting it will have no trouble in finding a market for it. For it contains a generous element of dramatic action and suspense. The picture derives its title from the right of every man to lead a clean healthy life. The drama contains a large amount of action, for it does not build from a single plot but many. "The Law of Nature" is a forceful lesson. It is adequately staged.

"Dramatic Mirror"

Well presented and well acted. As a timely subject this picture should prove a big box office attraction.

"N. Y. Sunday Telegraph"

The production is well set and the photography good. Virginia Thorne deserves a word of praise for her work as Lili Vanderbeck.

Community Motion Picture Bureau

Its lesson is tremendously important and could not have been driven home with greater force. Personally I regard the direction and acting as near perfect as it is possible to be. I think this is a film that can and should be used before practically every kind of audience.

"A Massive and Impressive Feature"

STEPHEN BUSH in BILLBOARD stated that "The Law of Nature" is a massive and impressive feature, and should be advertised as such.

State Right buyers consider this feature a sure money getting production as evidenced by their activity in securing territory.

A special advertising campaign has been prepared to assist buyers in booking the picture, and special help will be given buyers in their territory by the ARROW'S new Sales and Promotion department.

There is still some open territory, but buyers are urged to write or wire for terms at once.

"International" Black-and-White Comedies

¶ Seven minutes of concentrated laughter—simply mix with good music and serve. The cartoon comedy that has no waste footage, no dull moments—just rapid-fire fun that's funny. "It Beats the Dutch" is released this week.

The Robert C. Bruce American Scenics

¶ Best loved of all the scenic productions—and with reason. Robert C. Bruce knows the beauty spots, and knows best how to bring out the real entertainment value. "The Little High Horse" is the newest subject in Educational exchanges.

The Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement

¶ Much in little—seven stars in a single-reel. Issued once a month, just like the Magazine, and with the same clever photographs and snappy editorial style.

George D. Wright's "Mexico Today"

The Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature"

¶ Foremost among the animal pictures—fifty-three short reels—the cleverest combination of amusement, entertainment and educational value obtainable.

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 19, No. 15 April 12, 1919

Looking for Advice

AN exhibitor asks our advice on the subject of exhibitors co-operative booking concerns and suggests an open discussion in our columns.

"Some such plan is necessary," writes the exhibitor, "if such theatres as ours (he calls himself a small exhibitor) are to continue."

The idea of an open discussion of so important a subject strikes us as excellent.

It should involve and bring to light the biggest problems underlying this industry, problems so pressing right now that very shortly—within the year, perhaps—they will have to be brought to a conclusive head.

So we welcome such a discussion in the interests of the trade.

We would like to hear from Mr. Berst, Mr. Hodkinson, Mr. Rowland, Mr. Greene, Mr. Abrams, Mr. Kane and others—fram any practical and experienced distributor; it is on distribution that the matter hinges, and so, indeed, does this industry's present and future welfare.

* * * * *

What Harness Will Work?

IT is distribution, some new kind of distribution, that is going to regulate the troubles that now exist—with the exhibitor, distributor and producer.

How is it to be done?

Let's start with the exhibitor who writes us.

Here is a small, isolated house; by isolated we mean left to the owner's own resources in buying and selling pictures.

He wants, briefly, an assured and sufficient supply of good pictures at prices which will yield him a reasonable profit; he wants also that co-operation in selling his pictures to the public which every dealer expects today and generally gets from the manufacturer and distributor.

He wants help—and he wants help along the right lines so he may know that this help is stable and can be depended upon for the future as well as the present.

Must he turn to a co-operative booking concern—local or national in scope?

If so, what is his guarantee of good pictures—and enough good pictures?

What is his guarantee of the right rental prices?

Should these concerns be exhibitor owned?

Or, should he rely upon producer-owned distribution?

What is the guarantee here of enough good pictures at the right prices?

Should he be given open booking—that is, the right to book each picture on its merits only?

Should distribution be controlled by the producer, or is it healthier for the industry, and more profitable to producer and exhibitor, that the distributor be an entirely free agent, selecting and selling on merit only?

What about service with the picture? Who will guarantee it and how?

Here are some points to start with.

And why not take the gloves off, gentlemen, and go at them?

These are the big questions that practical picture men are talking about every day.

What are the answers?

* * * * *

Who Will Take the Gloves Off?

SEVERAL thousand theatres like the above are looking for light. They are vaguely groping for something solid to tie up to; a lot of them are tying up. Prominent exhibitors are making trips to New York—talking, listening, questioning—in an effort to find out in advance just how the industry is going to jump.

They want to know, and they've got to know.

And we assume, of course, that the distributors here in New York, or some of them, at least, feel perfectly free and willing to talk straight out.

Let's go!

Who will start the discussion?

* * * * *

Hurray for Nebraska!

CONGRATULATIONS, Nebraska!

You won your fight against censorship, won it hands down; and your campaign was so admirably conducted that you have given a working plan which will prove effective in every State in the Union—

Provided, of course, the right kind of organization and an equal amount of hard, sincere work are put back of the plan.

Nebraska did not wait until the bill was in committee.

Some keen mind or minds evidently analyzed the situation from the ground up.

* * * * *

Starting at the Beginning

THEY saw that the opposition always begins work clearly in advance; so they also began working.

They realized that the sponsors of censorship, however active and determined, represent but a very small minority of the public; so they got in touch with the great majority.

Petitions were placed in the hands of every theatre manager, and the lackadaisical exhibitor was hounded till he got and filed his names.

We fancy that every legislator in the State capitol was confronted one morning with a desk piled high with petitions—petitions from his own district, with the names of

Editorially Speaking:

personally known citizens, who in this way made their wishes clear to their legislative representatives.

These names mean votes. The opposition gets them, only a few, comparatively, but these few weigh heavily with the representative because there are no names to oppose them. The real public doesn't speak out.

* * * * *

Using Every Angle

THEN the newspapers were brought into play. They willingly co-operated because newspapers, good newspapers, stand for Americanism and because censorship is as abhorrent to the press as to the picture.

First page stories, articles by prominent people, and ringing editorials appeared in Omaha's leading dailies. These editorials were afterwards featured in page advertisements. Newspapers in other towns took up the cudgel, and thus State-wide public sentiment was appealed to and aroused.

All of which means, simply, that the truth of the situation was fully presented—not within the narrow confines of a legislative committee room at the eleventh hour, but to the sane minds of the liberty-loving citizens of the entire State—the workers, taxpayers, home-makers, whose majority vote makes the State legislature.

That's the place to carry the fight against censorship or any form of fanaticism—to the people, to the voters!

Our congratulations, too, in closing to H. M. Thomas, exhibitor, and to G. M. Akers, exchange manager, who led their State organization to victory.

We Elbow Our Way In

WE have followed with interest the discussion originated among exhibitors by the First National Exhibitors Association on the subject of trade papers, their proper number, and their support by the trade as against those publications devoted to the allied theatrical interests.

We have a good deal of respect for a company courageous enough to get back of so frank a discussion, just as we have always had respect for the company which, after an intelligent investigation of the trade press selected on merit its one or more mediums and gave a flat and sustained "no" to the others.

And we have the reverse degree of respect for any publication whether wholly or partly in the picture trade which solicits advertising by giving puffs on the one hand or threatening blackmail on the other. Neither kind of publication can help or hurt anyone in the business because such publications, if read at all, lack utterly the respect of the readers. The advertiser ought to be aware, by this time, of so patent a fact.

Just why five trade papers, however, are considered necessary either in the readers' or advertisers' interest, we cannot see; and considerable personal contact leads us to believe that most exhibitors and many advertisers feel exactly the same way about it. Indeed the exhibitors who are taking part in the discussion referred to seem, for the most part, to feel that two papers are enough.

No more than two trade papers can be read or are read; and assuredly no more than two are needed in a field in which each must so closely parallel the other in reader interest.

Two are mostly needed for purposes of honest and healthy competition, in the best interests of all branches of the industry—and in the best interests of the trade papers themselves.

This industry won't support five papers—that is the plain fact of the case. So why encourage losing propositions?

Most other trades have only two papers; in each instance these are survivals of the fittest. The automobile trade is a notable exception to the rule simply because it has several diverse and distinct reader appeals, for instance, the ultimate consumer or motorist, the territorial dealer, the garage and the engineer and manufacturer.

Last Fall when the influenza scare brought the producers and distributors into close contact one of the matters discussed was that of waste in trade paper advertising. Duplication was complained of, and some bitterness felt toward the entire trade press.

The fault is not that of the trade press. It is the fault of the advertiser. The very men who were discussing the matter have no one but themselves to blame. And as long as they continue to give or promise advertising in many papers which duplicate each other in reader interest there will be too many trade papers in the field.

Two Hundred Thousand Strong

TWO hundred thousand names were signed to the Buffalo petition urging Sunday motion pictures for that city. This represents more than the total number of voters in Buffalo.

Petitions like this will secure Sunday opening in any state in the Union.

Again we urge that here is the basis of the fight against censorship, for Sunday opening or against any Blue law or illiberal restriction upon the motion picture.

Carry the fight to the people. Let the majority of the public speak out.

Petitions are the things. They carry the names; and the names count. And petitions can be had by picture theatres, provided only an active state organization demands them.

* * * * *

Watch Out For This

THE latest reformer trick to beat bills allowing motion picture theaters to open on Sunday is the introduction of bills allowing municipalities to give motion picture shows on Sundays with admission free.

Thus, figure the reformers, they answer the arguments in favor of Sunday shows on the ground that the people need and demand the recreation. At the same time they prevent the bloated motion picture millionaires from making any money.

Dealing in Personalities

"Aims to Buy the Waterbury"

SOMEONE tried to get Lewis J. Selznick mad last week.

A story was published to the general effect that Lewis was giving too much advice to son Myron and too little attention to the time-clock at the Select offices.

Trust Lewis to counter in surprising fashion.

On Wednesday we hear that he is about to buy out the Select distributing organization, time-clock and all.

As we write this it is in the rumor stage. By the time you read this it will be probably a fact.

Or else someone else will have thrown a monkey-wrench into the time-clock.

You never can tell in this fillum game.

Should this deal go through the matter of distribution for Selznick Pictures—Myron—will naturally be settled. And the Bolshevik picture now being marketed by Select gives a hint of the course that Lewis J. will follow. Specials—the bigger the better—will be the rule. And we might hazard a guess that the million dollar electric sign campaign on Selznick pictures will find its place in the exploitation of these Specials.

Speaking of that Bolshevik picture, film men with one accord are predicting a clean-up for Select. To such effect that anyone else who suggests a Bolshevik subject is told, "No use. Selznick beat 'em all to that."

What a wonderful year it should be for the independent producer with real big stuff! Never were there so many distributors ready to welcome him with open arms and the key to the safe.

But, at that, the man who gambles $60,000 to $75,000 on eight or nine reels of fillum deserves all he gets if the gamble goes over. For many pictures are made but few are knockouts.

Our staff is looking for the jinx, the little man from Egypt, or the typesetter who made Pete Milne say in a review of "The Cambric Mask" that "the drawing powers of this picture cannot be underestimated." Pete went on in the review to praise the Vitagraph-Alice Joyce picture to the sky—as it deserved—but the slip of the typewriter that made him say "underestimated" for "overestimated" gave us all a wrench.

George Kleine was met on Broadway during the week. Spoke of the unequalled era of theatre prosperity that he had noted on the trip East.

Every traveler who comes into town tells the same story—the theatres were never so prosperous.

Incidentally Mr. Kleine dropped a hint that George Spoor would soon startle the film world with the real thing in stereoscopic pictures.

Martin Quigley, of the Exhibitors Herald, is another Chicago visitor in town for a week.

Robertson-Cole surely put over a big deal in the affiliation with Jury's Imperial Pictures, Great Britain. Read the story about it on page 2295. "Jury" means considerable over there, and the combination was no mean stunt to pull. It warns us all to keep a close eye on Robertson-Cole and its progress.

Pete Schaefer arrived in town Monday leading the advance guard of members of the Exhibitors' League executive committee.

By Thursday our sleuths had spotted around town such exhibitors as Frank Rembusch, Alfred H. Black, E. H. Horstman, I. M. Mosher, W. H. Linton, H. M. Brown and Sam Bullock.

With everything all set, the committee then met and laid out plans for the new exhibitor organization. The name chosen is "National Exhibitors' Association."

There comes to us rumors of a new shuffle of the cards in the industrial picture field. Names of men in various organizations are linked together. The news ought to break before another week is over. Incidentally, aside from this deal which concerns pioneers in the industrial field, every other man you meet nowadays is talking industrials. We hear more "sure-fire" solutions each week than there are reissues. One thing is sure—the industrial field is ripe, rich and ready.

P. A. Powers arrived back on the Rialto Monday and is picking up the threads of information regarding events that happened during his absence.

R. Ward is also back from the coast. [Adv.]

Ray Owens, recently with Frank Keeney's picture activities, has our old friend King Baggot out on the road in a show. The press notices have been great. King surprised a lot of them who thought that a screen star didn't have a voice—and incidentally his screen following is helping the box-office.

Jack Cohn has left Universal. Like the departure of Benny Schulberg from Paramount—we never thought it could happen. Good luck to you, Jack.

Bert Adler journeyed to Washington on Thursday to handle the opening of "The Better 'Ole" in the Capital City.

It seems that we have more rumors on this page this week than there are good intentions in a certain unpopular but warm region. Our sleuths reported a number of prominent Cleveland exhibitors in town on Wednesday and a series of conferences following at the Marcus Loew offices. The story should break Friday or Saturday. It seems that everything that is going to happen this week is scheduled for a day or two after this issue is out. And we're too good a fellow to throw a monkey-wrench into big deals by talking too soon. Shades of our daily newspaper days!

Bill Parsons came to town, renewed his contract with Goldwyn for Capitol Comedies, talked with Hodkinson on National "specials," and greeted everybody with a broad smile and jovial words.

The Billy Rhodes company is coming East next week to make two pictures. Dorothy Dalton leaves Los Angeles on Sunday, to make Ince subjects in the East. And a month ago all production was flitting gaily westward.

Carl Laemmle leaves Los Angeles next Monday for the East.

From the Federal Trades Commission comes news that The Lasso Films Company has "agreed to an order to desist from changing the titles and names of old films already displayed to the public and substituting new names and titles unless it is clearly, definitely, distinctly and unmistakably shown to exhibitors and the public that the films so renamed and retitled are old films being reissued."

A. L. Berman comes to bat with the Camo Corporation, which will put something new in home cameras and projectors on the market soon. Here's a field that is going to have its share of surprising news in the coming six months.

David Loew, son of Marcus Loew, was married Monday afternoon to Miss Meta Edman.

Charles Pathe is expected to arrive here about April 15th, for an indefinite stay. A residence at Forest Hills, L. I., has been leased for him.

Censorship Brightens for Exhibitor

Beat the Censor Bill in Nebraska

Thomas and Akers Lead Film Forces in Stiff Battle to Glorious Victory Over Reformers

OMAHA, NEBRASKA (Special to Motion Picture News).—It was the end of a good fight when the result of the vote on the bill to have a board of seven appointees censor all moving pictures in this state was announced as 62 against and 20 for. The death of the measure came upon a motion to advance the bill which was defeated.

Headed by H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto, and representative of the national board in Nebraska, and by G. M. Akers, head of the Omaha Association of Film Exchange men, a vigorous battle was fought from the start to the finish. The fight was not so much to change the opinions of Nebraskans as to whether or not they wished censorship as to arouse them to the need of expressing themselves and letting the legislators understand their feelings of the people on the subject.

The first step was to get out a great number of blank petitions, distributed at every picture house and wherever an exhibitor was not doing his part in getting the petition before his patrons the matter was brought to his attention and some life put behind the movement in his territory. Thousands of signatures were obtained. The campaign was kept alive by slides and by posters, mostly home made.

Cooperation of the newspapers was easily obtained. The Omaha Bee took the lead in the metropolis and started the ball rolling by a number of news articles and feature stories, a great many of them on the front page,—some of them ridiculing the idea of censorship and a great many of them getting the opinions of prominent people on the subject and taking up the cudgels against the bill. One of the best articles was written by Mrs. McKelvie, wife of the governor of the state, who is a movie fan and has contributed many articles on motion pictures to the trade magazines.

The Omaha World-Herald came to bat with a stirring editorial. The film exchange men of Omaha and the film exhibitors came out with a full page ad with the editorial included in the World-Herald and followed it with another editorial ad in the Bee—later finding money enough in the fund to run another ad in all three Omaha papers, including the Omaha Daily News. In each of the ads was included a little coupon to be filled out and mailed either to the committee or to the legislator of the one sending it. The results proved the value of advertising for the answers came in by thousands.

Newspapers all through the state took the matter up and when the bill came up for vote the sentiment was strongly against it. The film men in addition to all these matters of course all did a lot of personal work through the territory and at Lincoln.

Exhibitors of Northern California Organize

What is announced as an organization for the mutual protection and benefit of those engaged in the motion picture business in the northern part of California, was formed in San Francisco and will be known as The United Theatres Association, Inc.

Headquarters have been secured in the American Photo Player building on Golden Gate avenue, and the following officers selected: Charles Goddard, president; Louis R. Greenfield, vice president; James Beatty, treasurer; C. W. Midgeley, secretary; P. J. Hanlon and A. W. Moore, directors, and G. C. Ringolsky, attorney.

It is expected that practically all the reliable theatre managers in the northern part of the state will eventually join the organization, and it is reported that new names are being added to the list every day.

Judges Jump on Censors with Both Feet

PHILADELPHIA (Special).—Judges Rogers and Wessel of the Common Pleas Court last week took turns in jumping on the Pennsylvania censors in the course of a hearing on the appeal against the ban on "The Brand."

Both judges had viewed the picture and their ire was aroused by the comments of the censors and the latter's witnesses. Judge Rogers declared the board was exceeding its authority.

"Do you know the law under which you view and pass upon these pictures?" he asked. "The trouble seems to be more in your condition of mind than in the picture itself. The Legislature distinctly stated in the act creating the Board of the Censors what its duties and its authority were to be. It didn't give the board any authority to pass upon or even assume what construction some persons might put upon something imagined, but not shown upon the screen at all."

Both sides have filed briefs on which a decision will be rendered later.

Albert E. Smith Arrives in Los Angeles

Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, arrived in Los Angeles March 22nd for a stay of several weeks at the Hollywood studios. While in the west he will be the guest of his brothers, W. S. and David Smith, studio manager and director respectively, as well as spend considerable time with his father, who resides at Santa Barbara.

Still a Chance Perhaps in Colorado Fight

DENVER, COL. (Special.)—Local exhibitors are of the belief that notwithstanding the death of the Sunday motion picture bill there may later be a chance for a new bill.

This is due to the fact that the opposition to the bill stated that their principal fear was that the present bill would let down the bars to many other forms of amusement. Those leading the fight against Sunday shows were Senators David Elliott, of Colorado Springs; W. O. Peterson, of Pueblo; James C. Starkweather, W. W. Booth and John D. Stephen, of Denver, all Republicans, and Senator Henry C. Andrew, of Boulder, Democrat.

Defending the proposed repeal were Senators W. F. O'Brien of Leadville; Siewers Fincher, of Breckenridge, and O. E. Bannister, of Grand Junction, all Democrats.

May Create New Censor Job in Keystone State

HARRISBURG, Pa. (Special).—The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate of Pennsylvania now has in its possession for consideration a measure introduced by Senator Mearkle, of Pittsburgh, which would amend the present law under which the motion picture censors operate so as to provide for a deputy censor, at a salary of $2,000, who shall maintain an office in Pittsburgh.

The bill provides also for the appointment of two inspectors, at salaries of $1,400 each, and one stenographer at $1,200.

The object of the bill is to facilitate the censorship of pictures in the western part of the state, where delays often are caused in the distribution of films because the greater part of the censorship work, under the present arrangement, is done in the Philadelphia headquarters of the board of censors.

Thanks for McAleer from Pennsylvania Exhibitors

At a meeting of the campaign committee which has been working for Sunday opening in Pennsylvania held on March 29th at Pittsburgh, the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, That in view of the excellent co-operation given this committee by the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc., in the assignment of John McAleer, who acted as executive secretary during the campaign for Sunday opening in Pennsylvania, and furthermore in consideration of his diligent and untiring efforts to make the movement a success, the committee wishes to herewith incorporate in this resolution its appreciation to the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc."

A copy of the resolution was forwarded to Mr. Laemmle by James B. Clark, chairman of the campaign committee.

N. A. M. P. I. Reports Progress of Sunday Bills

An interesting summary of the status of the different State bills permitting Sunday motion picture shows has been issued by the committee of the National Association in charge of the campaign, consisting of Arthur Friend, Lewis Innerarity, and R. H. Cochrane. The committee has the voluntary cooperation of the American Recreation League and is cooperating with exhibitors in various states, aiding greatly through slides and trailers.

The report follows:

NEW YORK

The Thompson-Donohue bill, providing for Sunday motion pictures under local option, was advanced to the order of final passage in the Assembly Tuesday.

The Assembly Codes Commitee, which had had under consideration the bill introduced by Assemblyman Donohue, reported it out on March 26th, but later decided to amend the bill so as to make it conform with Senator George F. Thompson's bill, which was reported out of the Senate Codes Committee the same day by a vote of 6 to 4.

NEW JERSEY

The Hyland bill, No. 291, has been reported favorably out of the committee in the Assembly and was expected to be passed by the Assembly Monday night. Instead, however, the bill was then re-committed and was passed on Wednesday, April 2. This bill, which permits motion pictures, recreations and concerts on Sunday, has been amended to meet the objections against the original measure in the Senate.

This bill should not be confused with the bill of Assemblyman Siegler, which has already passed the House. The Siegler bill has to do only with the permission of motion pictures, games, recreations, concerts, etc., on Sunday in the public parks regulated by the State.

CONNECTICUT

The State Senate has passed, by a vote of 26 to 3, a home rule Sunday motion picture bill similar to the one pending in the New York State legislature. Favorable action in the Lower House is expected at an early date. Connecticut presented a peculiar situation. Sunday pictures, of course, have always fallen under the jurisdiction of the old Blue Laws. But the Bolsheviki have been gaining a foothold in the State, and the Sunday motion picture bill was widely advocated as a check to the rising tide of Bolshevism.

COLORADO

The Kelly bill, repealing the Sunday closing law, passed the Lower House by a vote of 49 to 14, but met defeat in the Senate, 18 to 11. H. T. Nolan, President of the Rocky Mountain Screen Club, and State Chairman of the National Association of Colorado, sends words that many opposing Senators stated that if the motion picture people had confined their measure strictly to a repeal of the prohibition of Sunday pictures, instead of trying to open all amusements on Sunday, they would have voted for it. The campaign managers have accordingly decided to renew the battle in the manner suggested.

MICHIGAN

The last report from State Chairman John H. Kunsky, of Detroit, was most optimistic. The bill legalizes Sunday amusements and was reported out of the Senate committee five days after it was introduced, and although it has been before the body awaiting action for some time, it is expected that it will pass the Senate without much trouble when it comes to a vote. Prospects are similarly favorable in the House.

SOUTH DAKOTA

The Sunday closing bill was introduced in both branches of the legislature, but was promptly killed . The South Dakota exhibitors had the active co-operation of the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, through the chairman of its legislative committee, F. S. Meyer.

IOWA

The Sunday opening bill has passed the Upper House of the legislature by a large majority, but is facing a hard fight in the Lower House. State Chairman A. H. Blank, however, is hopeful of the ultimate success of the measure.

OHIO

The Ohio bill, which is fostered by the Ohio State Screen League, takes the form of an amendment to one of the sections of the General Code now in effect. This section is a general prohibitory Sunday law. The amendment provides that "municipalities shall have the power to regulate or forbid the exhibition of the projection of motion pictures on Sunday subject to the sections of the statutes provided for the initiative and referendum." In other words, while it is still in the power of any community, acting through its counsel or other governing body, to prohibit motion pictures on Sunday, the amendment permits absolute local option in the matter.

This amendment has been favorably reported in the Lower House, and final favorable action in both Houses is hoped for in the near future.

Toledo Managers' Association Has Hands Full

Toledo, Ohio (Special).—The local Theatrical Men's Association organized less than a year ago has found plenty of work.

The fight for Sunday motion pictures in Ohio has kept the organization on its toes carrying out the local share of the battle. Right on the heels of that fight has come a Toledo ordinance proposed by Judge O'Donnell to prohibit all children under the ages of seventeen from attending theatres, arcades, skating rinks, etc., without an escort.

The ordinance would be fatal to the residence theatres. As a result of hearings held by the City Council there is the possibility of new legislation being proposed to handle the children's problem, without arbitrarily closing up the picture theatres.

Charles C. Friedman is attorney for the picture men, who are working in an organized body.

Local 306 Elects Delegates to Convention

Local 306 of New York City held its election April 2nd for representatives to the International Alliance Convention which will be called at the Chateau Laurier, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada, during the week of May 26.

The successful delegates as officially reported by Mr. Morris Rotker, recording-secretary, were: Messrs. Sam Kaplan, Sam Goldfarb and Alex Polin.

Edward J. Wilson was elected member of the Executive Board. More than 500 members showed their interest by attending the election.

Who's Who in the Keystone State

Here Are the Men Who Defeated Sunday Bill and Those Who Sought to Help

Harrisburg, Pa., (Special to Motion Picture News).—As an aftermath to the defeat of the Rorke Sunday motion picture bill in the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives Tuesday, March 25, it might be well to give the details of the committee meeting.

For the sake especially of those thousands of Pennsylvania exhibitors who favored the adoption of the Rorke Bill, it is only fair that the names of those members of the Judiciary General Committee who voted against the bill and those who voted in favor of its being affirmatively reported, should be published. They are as follows:

The Representatives voting to report the bill out with a negative recommendation were: Brooks, York County; Bolard, Crawford; Campbell, Philadelphia; Goehring, Allegheny; Snowden, Philadelphia; Catlin, McKean; Scott, Philadelphia; Norton, Berks; Patterson, Philadelphia; Todd, Allegheny; Krause, Philadelphia; Sweitzer, Clarion; Gans, Philadelphia; Wallace, Lawrence; Sarig, Berks; North, Chester; Beidlespacher, Lycoming; and Evans, Lancaster.

Those who voted in favor of an affirmative recommendation were: Heyburn, Delaware county; Aaron, Baldi and Rorke, Philadelphia; Fowler, Lackawanna, and Marcus, Allegheny. Representatives Flynn, Elk county, and Zimmerman, Lebanon, were the only members of the committee absent.

Representative Rorke, sponsor of the measure and chairman of the sub-committee which conducted the hearings in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and Harrisburg, at which the famous Philadelphia Orchestra gave concerts in an effort to convince the legislators that the kind of music played could not be offensive on the Sabbath, made a valiant fight to prevent the general committee applying the chloroform to the bill. He pleaded for one more week in which to obtain more information as to public sentiment regarding the measure, it having been pointed out, most significantly, by Representative Fowler, of Lackawanna county, that it was uncertain how labor viewed the bill.

Chairman John R. K. Scott, though he opposed the measure, was in favor of extending the time, but the majority of the committee were for speedy death for the bill and insisted upon the immediate vote by the committee which resulted in the dashing of the hopes of the motion picture men.

At one stage of the committee meeting things took a sensational turn when Representative James E. Norton, of Berks county, made a charge, which he did not substantiate, that there were rumors that "the picture interests had a fund of $40,000 to $50,000 to corrupt legislators."

Rorke, in his efforts to save the bill, as a last resort promised the committee that if it permitted his bill to be reported favorably, he would offer an amendment on the floor of the House to provide for a special censorship of all films offered for Sunday exhibitions; but even that concession was ignored by the majority of the committee which, from its attitude, appeared to have made up its mind unalterably to quash the measure.

Strong Anti-Censorship Facts

William A. Brady and Walter W. Irwin Delivered Telling Blows Before Chicago Board of Censors

THE arguments used by William A. Brady and Walter W. Irwin, who appeared some time ago before the Motion Picture Censorship Commission of the City Council in Chicago, are considered by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to be very valuable material for use in other sections where film censorship threatens.

"Abolish all censorship of motion pictures; take all restrictions off the producers. If they cause to be exhibited anything which is immoral or obscene, punish them severely," said Mr. Brady.

Mr. Brady contends that the remarks of ministers were not censored before they were made, nor are the contents of newspapers before they are published; so why everlastingly pick out the Motion Picture industry for censoring prior to its having been guilty of objectionable doings.

To quote Mr. Brady exactly: "Censorship before publication is what we object to. The Motion Picture men are responsible for their acts. If they produce unclean and immoral pictures they violate the law and should be punished."

Walter W. Irwin, Paul Cromelin, Gabriel Hess and other officials of the organization of which Mr. Brady is president all declared against censorship in any form.

"As long as pictures are shown which deprave and debauch children, we need censorship," declared the Rev. W. S. Fleming.

Mr. Brady's quick retort was: "We are gentlemen and protest against any assertion to the contrary."

Chairman T. D. Hurley announced that Mr. Brady and his followers were before the commission to give them information and not to criticise, to which Mr. Brady took exception, not wanting advice, but information, telling the city authorities that they would be doing more good for the community if they cleaned up South State street than in bothering the Motion Picture business.

The gentleman wanted to know why the Pickford picture, "The Little American," had been barred in Chicago. M. J. Quigley, secretary of the commission, replied: "Because the authorities said it was too strong against the German people."

"But, we were at war with Germany at the time," continued Mr. Brady. "The only outcome of censorship is graft, political intrigue and religious and social dissension. I think the Motion Picture Industry will have to get into politics to protect itself," was one of Mr. Brady's parting shots.

All the "movie men" agreed that they would abide by a vote of the people on the censorship question. They said if the censorship question was put to a referendum the people would reject it.

Walter W. Irwin of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, hurled a hand grenade into the commission when he said: "Censorship is fundamentally based on intolerance; those who urge it are of the temperament of those who burned the witches at the stake. They are leaders of the bolsheviki, who are the worst advocates of intolerance." What is the meaning of these small movements today of men who want to become their brother's keepers? If it is a people's question why not submit it to the people?"

Rourke Gets Park Theatre at Bridgeport

The Park Theatre at Bridgeport, Connecticut, has been leased by James T. Rourke, owner of the Empire theatre there.

David J. Lustig (LaVellma), manager of the Empire theatre, will manage both houses.

A straight feature picture policy is planned and a number of the larger cinematographic productions are scheduled for an early showing. The season commences May 25th.

F. I. L. M. Club Will Co-operate on Loan

The F. I. L. M. Club of New York City announces that its members are arranging plans for the distribution of films for the Victory Loan.

It is proposed that each exchange will handle a certain territory for distribution and booking and certain stars will be allotted to the various exchanges, so that each territory will have a full quota of all stars participating in the Victory Loan campaign.

As soon as the Treasury Department advises when the release dates will be, notice will be sent to all exhibitors.

Governor and Legislators Honor Exhibitor

What is described as one of the most remarkable honors ever conferred or received by an exhibitor has just been bestowed upon Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company, operating theatres showing First National Exhibitors' Circuit attractions in Nashville, Tenn., by the Legislature and governor of the state.

The sixty-first general assembly of Tennessee adopted, in both houses of the Legislature, a set of resolutions in formal acknowledgment and appreciation of Mr. Sudekum's contributions, during the last five years, of free moving picture entertainment to the prisoners in the state penitentiary and to the inmates of Central Hospital, a state institution for mental defectives.

Ben Grimm on West Coast

Ben Grimm, formerly publicity writer for film companies, and later a member of the Moving Picture World staff, arrived in Los Angeles April 24th from Honolulu, where he received his discharge from the Sixth Aero Squadron of the American army.

Grimm has been located at Honolulu, where he served in the coast defense.

West Virginia Exhibitors Organize Booking Club

Reports come from Winding Gulf, West Virginia, that a meeting of the theatre managers and exhibitors of that section was called and held in the Beckley Hotel, Beckley, West Virginia, on Thursday, March 27th, 1919.

The following theatres were represented: Affinity Amusement Co., with theatres at Affinity and Hotcoal, W. Va.; Winding Gulf Theatre, Winding Gulf, W. Va.; Stotesbury Amusement Co., Stotesbury, W. Va.; Wyco Theatre, Wyco, W. Va.; Besoco Theatre, Besoco, W. Va.; Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va.; and the Glen White Amusement Co., Glen White, W. Va.

It is stated that the object of this meeting was the organization of an association which would link all of the theatres in that section together and put them all under the same booking management. The Association was organized and the following officers unanimously elected:

C. R. Stahl, Manager, E. E. White Coal Co., Stotesbury, W. Va., President.

Hirum Sizemore, Pres. & Mgr., Wyoming Theatre, Mullens, W. Va., 1st Vice President.

J. T. Morris, Manager, Pemberton Fuel Co., Pemberton, W. Va., 2nd Vice President.

J. H. Spencer, Amusement Manager, Winding Gulf Colliery Co., Winding Gulf, W. Va., Secretary & Booking Manager.

J. B. Clifton, Sec. & Treas., Beckley Smokeless Coal Co., Besoco, W. Va., Treasurer.

The privilege of becoming affiliated with this association will be extended to exhibitors in the following towns who were unable to attend the first meeting: Fireco, Sullivan, Raleigh, McAlpin, Tams, Vanwood, Itman, and Eccles, West Virginia.

A meeting of the Winding Gulf Exhibitors Association has been called to meet in the Wyoming Hotel, Mullens, W. Va., on Friday, April 18th, 1919. A full representation of the fourteen theatres is expected at this meeting and details as to management, etc., will be definitely discussed and adopted.

English Film Man to State Right Here

It became known on Thursday that at least one English film producer had decided on his own method of handling the problem of presenting British productions in this country.

Harry Maze Jenks, who has been here for a couple of weeks, showing a number of his productions to competent American critics, has decided to embark on the State Rights field. The step will be taken as soon as arrangements are completed. Involved in the plans are a number of Harma Productions, including "Romany Lass," "A Master of Men," "The Great Imposter," "The Happy Warrior," "Nature's Gentleman," "The Splendid Coward," "The Power of Rights," "A Run for His Money," "The Warrior Strain" and "White Star."

Finkel Visits New York from Pittsburgh

William Finkel, of the recently organized Globe Film Attractions of Pittsburgh, was a New York visitor this week looking over the film offerings.

W. C. Pierce, formerly of the World Film, is associated with Mr. Finkel in the Globe Film exchange, and it is said that the new concern has already acquired an excellent growing business in the state rights field.

The territory covered by the new concern is Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia principally. The Victor Kremer five reel features starring Shorty Hamilton, are controlled in that territory by the Globe exchange in Pittsburgh, at 414 Ferry street.

Mr. Finkel has been a successful exhibitor for nearly four years and believes that there is a bright future for aggressive concerns in the independent field.

The Allens Will Build in Western Canada

The largest moving picture theatre in Western Canada will be built this summer at Calgary, Alberta, for the Allen Theatrican Enterprises, according to an announcement by Jule and J. J. Allen.

There is already an Allen Theatre in Calgary but this has been found to be too small. It was built five years ago and has been doing capacity business for many months.

The site for the new theatre will be in the heart of the downtown section and the building alone will cost $200,000. The new house will have a seating capacity of 2,000, according to the plans which have already been drawn.

Personal attention is being given to the matter by H. J. Allen of Calgary, Western manager of the Allen interests. Declaration is made that local citizens will be the principal stockholders.

Cincinnati Exhibitors Rally to Aid Loan

Cincinnati motion picture managers will take a big part in molding public sentiment for the Fifth Liberty Victory Loan, and all theatres of that city and Southwestern Ohio have joined in a concerted move to put it over on their screens.

Isaac Libson, manager of the Walnut, Strand, and Family theatres, has been named chairman of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' Liberty Loan Committee.

Heenan's Was a Boy

Dan Heenan, salesman for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit Exchange in Philadelphia, is receiving congratulations from all quarters.

The occasion for all this goodwill from his friends lies in the fact that Dan is now the proud father of a bouncing baby boy. His brother William is the "big man behind the gun" for the First National in the Quaker City.

Schulberg Resigns from "Big 4"

Moves from Long Acre to Fitzgerald Building, But Hiram Abrams' Best Wishes Go with Him in International Plans

B. P. SCHULBERG, who was recently appointed Assistant General Manager of the United Artists Distributing Corporation in conjunction with Hiram Abrams' appointment as General Manager of that stellar organization, has resigned from that office in order to devote all his time and attention to a new international film organization, as yet unnamed, which will operate distributing centres throughout the entire world, outside of the United States and Canada.

The announcement would be a greater surprise to the trade than it is were it not accompanied by a statement from Hiram Abrams, which indicates that he has released Mr. Schulberg from the obligation of remaining with the United Artists, and that there is as cordial and friendly a relationship between these two old-time business associates as ever existed. Both emphasize that the change in Mr. Schulberg's plans is actuated only by his securing "a greater personal opportunity" through the new international association.

Mr. Abrams in commenting upon the severance of official relations with Mr. Schulberg, said:

"In the years that Mr. Schulberg's and my business life has been so closely allied I have always found him intensely devoted to the interests he was serving, always faithful to the task in hand and always eagerly seeking to find or create the next step by which he might legitimately advance himself or the organization with which he was identified. I am gratified that such an opportunity has again come to him, and in regretting his departure I also rejoice with him in the chance he now has for greater personal service to the industry and the particular interests with which he has become associated."

Mr. Schulberg made the following statement:

"It would take much, as the entire trade well knows to cause me to sever my relations with the United Artists, and Mr. Abrams in particular, after the long, pleasant and harmonious relationship we have enjoyed for so many years, but the opportunity which has come to me to become identified with the largest European financial interests which have ever been invested in the motion picture industry, and its correlated privilege of being of service to the entire motion picture industry both here and abroad, are so attractive as to command my interest and dictate the course I am now pursuing.

"These interests are reinforced by a strong organization composing the most expert film men in Europe, and their financial strength and long experience in the industry cannot but accomplish tremendous results and create a potent factor for good to film interests on both sides of the Atlantic.

"I would appreciate it if it were understood that the primary motive for my action at this time is the larger personal scope the new enterprise can afford my efforts."

Mr. Schulberg is making his temporory office at the Fitzgerald Building.

Jack Cohn to Produce

It is reported that Jack Cohn, well-known editor of the Universal Weeklies and Screen Magazine and a member of the Universal Film Company since its conception, has resigned to produce on his own account.

Mr. Cohn has opened offices in the Strand Theatre Building and has already begun working on a picture, details of which will be announced later.

Gerard Engages Regina Quinn for Film

Regina Quinn, the former Fox star, has been engaged to appear in James W. Gerard's next contribution following "My Four Years in Germany." The theme of the newest work of the former ambassador involves the confession of a German army officer. William Nigh will be seen in the leading male character and after searching the field for a beautiful and accomplished artist to play opposite him, the choice was awarded to Miss Quinn.

Kills "Happiness" Title

Upon application of J. Huntley Manners, author of "Happiness," the stage play, Judge Mayer of the United States Court issued an injunction restraining the use of the title "Happiness" as the name of any photoplay.

Mr. Manners started the action to protect this title when he learned that Triangle had made a photoplay under the title of "Happiness," telling a story entirely unlike that of the stage play.

Film "Hunter" Visits New York

"Square Deal" Miller, the well known jeweler of Detroit, visited the offices of Motion Picture News last week while on his way from Florida to his home in Michigan. Mr. Miller spends much of his time in winter in the everglades, hunting both with gun and motion picture camera. On this trip he is taking back with him about 3,000 feet of interesting film taken during the winter hunting season.

Passed by Board

William H. Leahy, connected with the Anitia Stewart Productions, made a flying visit to Philadelphia last week, where the awaited the decision of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors, who were passing on the merits of the latest Anitia Stewart feature, "A Midight Romance."

With the elimination of two or three sub-titles the picture was passed.

Industry Again Aids Government

Twenty-five District Managers Appointed to Circulate Thirty-seven Victory Liberty Loan Subjects

UPON call of the Treasury Department of the United States Government, arrangements for a hugh motion picture drive have been completed by the Committee appointed by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and were announced by Adolph Zukor, Chairman.

"The motion picture campaign on behalf of the Victory Liberty Loan will afford every exhibitor the opportunity of doing his bit," said Mr. Zukor. "Our new drive has been carefully planned and will undoubtedly prove the most powerful campaign yet prepared by our industry for the Government. Some thirty-seven subjects are now being finished and there will be a total of three thousand five hundred and four prints available to theatres, gratis."

The Committee, of which Mr. Zukor is Chairman, consists of Walter W. Irwin, George K. Spoor, J. Brulatour with Al Lichtman, Manager of Distribution, and John J. Flinn, Director of Publicity.

Ontario Exhibitors Meet in Toronto

The regular April meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario was held at the association headquarters, 143 Yonge street, on April 1st.

Announcement was made that the association now boasts a membership of 211 exhibitors, about 94 of whom are located in Toronto.

A last call was issued for members to take stock in the association's co-operative exchange which has been incorporated with a Canadian federal charter at a capitalization of $100,000. Announcement is made that this capital may have to be increased.

Arizona Photoplays Will Produce at Phoenix

When house bill No. 166 titled "An Act to regulate the production and distribution of motion pictures within the state of Arizona" was before Governor Thos. E. Campbell for his signature or veto, the officers and stockholders of Arizona Photoplays, which is shortly to begin production at Phoenix, adopted a resolution prepared by the company's attorney, and copies of this were immediately dispatched to Governor Campbell.

The resolution pointed out the absurdity of the measure and the numerous injustices it would work upon the film industry.

Ray Meyers, formerly identified with Los Angeles producing companies as actor and director, is vice-president, and will be the director of productions of Arizona Photoplays, Inc.

Crabb Succeeds O'Grady

The report comes from Buffalo that Earl L. Crabb, manager of the Strand Theatre there, has been elected secretary of the Buffalo Theatrical Managers' Association, succeeding Valentine E. O'Grady, resigned.

Florida Exhibitors Meet and Elect Officers

At Tampa, Florida, the Exhibitors' League of Florida held the annual convention on March 26.

C. D. Cooley, manager of the Strand and Grand, in Tampa, was re-elected president. This will be Mr. Cooley's third term as president of the league.

F. M. Catron, manager of the Bonita theatre here, was elected secretary and treasurer.

There was a very good attendance from all over the state, and all enjoyed a real Spanish dinner, which was served with the compliments of the Tampa exhibitors. The next convention will be held in Miami, Fla.

Arrow Does Not Move Until May 1

Although the Arrow Film Corporation will remove its offices from the Times building to the Candler building, the new quarters will not be occupied until May 1.

W. E. Shallenberger, president of Arrow Films, states that in the meantime business is going on as usual at the present offices in the Times building.

Commodore Ball Looming Up in Good Shape

The first annual ball of the "Motion Picture Club of America" at the Hotel Commodore next week is taking shape rapidly and the prospects now are bright for a gala evening. Such veterans as Bill Hart and Sam Trigger are speeding the plans up to good effect.

Peter Schaefer and a number of Chicago exhibitors are expected to be in attendance at the affair, while two State Governors have signified their intention of being present. Governor Goodrich, of Indiana, who will be in New York to meet Indiana boys returning from France, and Governor Edge, of New Jersey, have accepted invitations. Herman Jans will pilot the last mentioned statesman.

Application has already been made by the club for the old N. V. A. clubrooms on Broadway.

Friday, April 11, is the date of the promenade, concert and dance.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Putting the Best Foot Forward

ONE of the most frequent callers on the Exhibitors Service Bureau for aid and suggestions is an exhibitor in a small town. He has no competition and the business, he believed a short time ago, was sufficient to operate only one day a week. Then he started to try the two day plan and he has gradually enlarged it until his theatre is open on every day on which he is permitted to operate. He has built up this business literally from nothing because he has given attention to his business.

We are not attempting to take any credit for the success of this man, because if he had not had the desire to succeed, had not shown the yearning for information and had not been moved by the wish to do things BETTER he would never have called on us. Since he has done so we have been able to give him advice and assistance on many points. He is needing them less and less now, and from one of the exchanges in the territory recently came a report of the wonderful success that this man had made by using a certain brand of pictures.

But this was not the reason—the reason was that this man put the best foot forward and saw that it kept going forward. Under such a policy the road to success is sure.

THAT is one side of the case. The other is the facilities that are accorded this department to gather matter at the fountain head. The opportunity to " get behind the scenes with the presentations each week at the Rialto, Rivoli, Strand and Broadway theatres allows us to present to you an analysis of these shows that is obtainable nowhere else. It puts before every exhibitor in the country the methods that are used by these successful managers week after week.

Recently a man who is not connected with exhibiting asked us whether he thought this matter was of aid to the smaller exhibitors. " They haven't the facilities to do any of these things," he said. " It seems to me that it simply makes them envy the larger and finer houses."

In the first place there is not an exhibitor in the world who cannot get aid from the careful study of these accounts. Of course, he hasn't any big symphony orchestra. His music may be limited to a piano. But he can even get inspiration from the music that is told of there.

But the chief reason that this matter should be of value to the smaller exhibitor is the INSPIRATION that it gives him. We believe that it makes them THINK about what they can do in their houses, and once the exhibitor has begun to really study his possibilities he is off to a good start.

WE have refrained from printing accounts of presentations at theatres outside of New York—not because they are not just as good, but for the very reason that these accounts cannot be written under the immediate supervision of the Exhibitors Service Bureau. We are trying to see to it that the accounts that are printed here are of the most genuine sort.

But you have but to turn to the other pages and you will find here week after week accounts of things that showmen from the biggest to the smallest are doing. If you have followed this department from the start you have seen it grow from a few short items to pages and pages of real idea stuff. The reason it has done so is that the INSPIRATION has spread and that every day more and more showmen are putting their best feet forward.

You have here accounts of the work of men who are not only doing things, but who have enough interest in the rest of the industry to let the world know what they are doing. It is from no sense of the desire for publicity that this matter comes to them, but because they are business men enough to know that every time they help to build up the industry they help their own business.

BETTER presentation of pictures means better pictures themselves. It means more cooperation in all sections of the industry. It means the gradual spreading of the appeal of the photoplay until the exhibitor will be able to get hundred per cent patronage.

There is no dream about this. Two years ago there were not a half dozen exhibitors in the smaller communities that were making any real effort to get the people from the surrounding territory into their theatre. Of course conditions have changed. That is one of the important things about the motion picture business—conditions are always changing. That is the reason why we have said to you that no text book of this industry can be your guide. The only guide should be the current experiences of exhibitors meeting today's conditions and today's problems.

Today there are hundreds of exhibitors who are getting business from the territory around them. There are many of them who are drawing business from other towns where there are theatres.

But these exhibitors have put their best foot forward—THEY ARE DOING THINGS.

WE would like to hear in the next thirty days from a thousand exhibitors who have started out to do things.

We would like to print these accounts for the INSPIRATION that it would give others.

Let's see if the whole exhibiting world cannot start off the spring march WITH EVERY BEST FOOT FORWARD.

FOR QUICK ACTION THE U.S. MARINES & "MICKEY"

Marines, Stores, Recitals, Cafes, Papers Cooperate in Advertising "Mickey" for Roth

EUGENE H. ROTH has just shown an example of a hundred per cent exploitation of a picture which not only resulted in "Mickey" running for a week at the California theatre, the finest and newest house in the coast city, but in it being transferred to the Portola, which is also under the management of Mr. Roth and running at that house for a week.

The plans were all carefully laid out far in advance of the showing and the actual exploitation started five weeks before the picture was to be shown for the first time. The first was screen propaganda and film titles were used bearing such sentences as "Mickey is Coming," "Have You Seen Mickey?" "Have You Heard Mickey?" "Mickey's a Wonderful Girl," "She'll Be Here on the Sixteenth," and "For Quick Action—Mickey."

For two weeks before the opening of the engagement the lounge on the mezzanine floor of the California was given over to musical recitals at which talking machine records of "Mickey," the song, were intermingled with classical and other popular selections. Then the week previous to the opening of the picture the big orchestra, under the direction of Herman Heller, played the music as one of its regular numbers at every performance.

Many of the cafes and cabarets took advantage of the advertising to introduce a "Mickey" number, using girl singers and sometimes choruses garbed in overalls and straw hats.

Cooperation was obtained from the Woolworth stores and many of those selling Victrola and Columbia records, as has been done in other cities. All of these displays bore cards referring to the fact that the picture was to be shown at the California. Many milliners were induced to make special displays and these included cloth caps which bore the name "Mickey Caps." In addition Hass Brothers, who own a number of candy stores advertised a "Mickey Special" in their windows.

Out-door advertising was carried out on a lavish scale. There were 150 24-sheet stands, just double the number ever used by the California, employed, but the very best of the exploitation was obtained as the result of the cooperation of the U. S. Marine Corps. One sheets were used on either side of these double poster stands and these were sniped with the sentence "For Quick Action: The U. S. Marines and 'Mickey.'."

Further in the cooperation with the marines there was a picture used in all the newspapers showing "Mickey" at the telephone and painted in was a figure of a Marine at the other end of the phone saying: "Hello, Mickey, I've just arrived from Chateau Thierry where we saw quick action, too."

Still another stunt was the exhibition of the picture at the Children's Hospital. This showing was under the auspices of the San Francisco Chronicle, the theatre standing the slight expense, and it resulted in considerable free newspaper publicity.

Still another stunt employed was through cloth sheets that were attached to delivery automobiles of a number of firms.

Our correspondent writes: "All San Francisco was talking 'Mickey' before the feature had opened at the California." We believe it.

DAYLIGHT SAVING

Mere Hours Do Not Count If Your Show Is There

SEVERAL exhibitors have asked what remedy they should adopt to meet the daylight saving. Some of these say that they felt a falling-off of their business last summer because the people did not want to come during the daylight hours and that after darkness had come there was really time for but one show.

There is but one answer to this: You have to make your show so good that the people will come. It hasn't affected New York attractions. Sunday we go to a certain theatre at 7:30 P. M. Last Sunday it was so light that we figured that there would be lots and lots of seats, but when we visited the house we found the longest line we had ever seen there—at that clock time. The answer was the bill that was being shown.

Too many exhibitors figure too much on changes of time and season, on rain and sunshine. Of course, these things are bound to have some effect, but when you have created the desire to see your presentations they count for mighty little.

Loew Uses Unique Trailer for Norma Talmadge Film

Marcus Loew has just used a novel plan in his New York theatres in advertising the appearance of Norma Talmadge in "The Probation Wife." This shows the head of the big syndicate at his desk writing a note to Miss Talmadge telling her that he "had never seen her look lovelier or do better work than in 'The Probation Wife.'" Then followed some fifty feet of scenes from the picture itself.

For the showing of Alice Brady in "The World to Live In," he adopted the curiosity arousing plan. He had printed a large number of special 24-sheet stands bearing in huge type the questions: "Could you love a girl with a tin heart?" and "Do you know what a tinpanner is?" Then the reader was referred to the feature at his theatre.

For lobby purpose there was a clever idea used in connection with four of the scene pictures. First, there was a scene showing her in an office sitting at a typewriter, and this bore the caption, "She was a stenographer by day," and then came a scene showing a luxurious restaurant with the caption, "And a Broadway rounder by night." A third one bore the caption, "A supper party with another woman's husband ended in a raid," and the fourth, "Awakened to her follies after many adventures." This showed the star seated in an arm chair with her sweetheart by her side.

Shamrock and Irish Music Mark St. Patrick's Day

Milwaukee papers received here comment on the fact that Leo A. Landau, manager of the Butterfly theatre, did not let St. Patrick's Day get by unnoticed. "A Heart in Pawn" was the feature being shown at that time and at the end of the picture the light was thrown on the orchestra and the strains of "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms" were heard just as the stage curtains parted revealing a huge shamrock.

The Small City Man Demands Good Film

By G. K. Hanks

Manager Select Theatre,
Andrews, S. C.

I HAVE noted with interest your several comments, criticisms and recommendations, on Motion Picture Advertising, both in cities and smaller towns, and most especially the latter. The writer is a big believer in advertising, but there are conditions that exist, which until remedied, makes all the advertising a small town exhibitor can afford, useless. Here are a few:

Physical Condition of Reels: No matter what might be the name of a book, the name of the author or the date it was written, who would enjoy reading it with a lot of pages torn out and maybe several pages torn in half. No one will contradict the fact that the screening is the life of the Photo-play, therefore, a picture shot to pieces will make a poor showing and will ruin the reputation of any theatre. What will exhaust the patience of anyone quicker than having a film break several times, especially at the most vital part. What is more discouraging than for an exhibitor to advertise a Special Production, of so many reels, put on a benefit performance, sell tickets in advance and at advanced prices, and when the production arrives, find it two or three and some cases as many as four reels short. No doubt there are some who would consider this paragraph exaggerated, but such are the conditions of the reels, which the majority of the producers book the small town exhibitor, thinking they can get by with it, and they will be successful in continuing this class service so long as the exhibitor makes no complaint and continues booking productions from such companies.

It is true that we have to pay the minimum in most instances, but at the same time that does not warrant an exchange in shipping out shot up stuff. It is certainly poor advertisement for them, and it is to their advantage to keep their property in better shape. Here is an instance that confronted me shortly, and I have made a complaint, which I feel will prevent a repetition.

I, in looking through the NEWS' Advance Information on All Film Releases, noted a certain special production listed at ten reels. I had an open date and wired the exchange distributing this feature, and made them an offer. They immediately answered accepting my offer and mailed me certain posters covering the subject, which also advertised the subject as being ten reels.

I advertised the subject very extensively, made it a benefit performance, had tickets on sale in advance at advanced prices, and when the picture arrived, just about two hours previous to exhibiting, we discovered it was only six reels. Now it is needless to go on with this story, but you can readily realize the position it placed me in. On several occasions a picture would turn up one reel shorter than advertised.

Another bad feature we have to contend with is: Misouts, which is, I'll admit, sometimes due to exhibitors holding over longer than necessary; but in the majority of the cases it is where producers try to crowd in too many bookings in too short a time, not allowing time enough in transit.

The time is now at hand, when an exhibitor has got to deliver the goods, that is back up his advertisements, and to do this, he must have the co-operation of the producers. No matter how extensively one might advertise a picture, unless he fulfills every promise, he is going to fall hard.

Unless the producers see that the small town exhibitors get productions in good physical condition and are protected against misouts, why all the advertising efforts they may put forth, will be in vain. Now some producers will claim, that in consideration of the nominal rental collected from the smaller towns, they do not feel justified in furnishing better class stuff. The very fact that there are producers booking us first class stuff for the minimum price just knocks this argument to pieces.

As stated already, the present day exhibitor realizes that he must come across and produce what he advertises, and until these conditions are remedied, I am satisfied the smaller towns will be a long time coming across with more publicity in this field. And, too, if the small town exhibitors will pass up the producers putting this class stuff on the market, you will soon see a great change in their advertising and they will realize it from a box office standpoint.

In the past two years five picture theatre companies here have failed simply

THEY'RE ESSENTIAL

Motion Pictures Cannot Do Without the Small Town Theatre

IT is such an apparent truism that it seems almost foolish to make the statement that the motion picture industry cannot get along without the smaller exhibitors in the smaller communities. It is not alone the money that they contribute in film rentals that count, but the eventual profit that comes to the larger houses from people of those towns who go to the cities as permanent residents or as visitors.

We believed that the spirit that anything is good enough for the small town had about disappeared. But it is a fact that in the case of some of the exchanges it has not. During the past summer the director of this department visited a small city where the manager of the theatre had been advertising a certain unusual feature for two weeks in advance. He had made it an event in his community and he—got the crowds—but we attended astounded to see that the print the exhibition ourselves and were was so worn that many of the scenes could not be distinguished and so cut to pieces that all continuity is lost. That one showing made a lot of enemies where it should have made motion picture patrons.

The small city theatre is important. There should be every care that the exhibitor in these towns is not tricked into fooling his patrons.

Your Idea and Ours

WHEN Manager Horwitz of the Colonial theatre, Columbus, O., found that he didn't have available the sort of a picture of Theda Bara that he wanted to use in the advertisement of "When Men Desire," he reached up on the shelf and got down his copies of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. A few turns through the advertising sections and he found just the one he wanted with the effect that is shown in this five column, ten inch display. The picture is an appealing one and gets immediate attention to the display.

On the top of this the selling work has been particularly well done. There is a particularly good use made of the shorter lines in the upper left hand corner: "They coaxed her. They tainted her. They tortured her. They threatened her. They kissed her." There is another good line with "Could you love her?" And then if there is anything needed to persuade the people who like this type of picture to come to the theatre there is a final appeal with "Rich men and poor men of noble birth fight like tigers to win one kiss from her lips."

Honesty is the best policy—but have a policy.

THE several circus pictures that have made their appearance lately have been giving exhibitors a chance to work in the ten idea, and we have seen none better than this six inch, three column display of the Strand, Pittsfield, Mass. More ink on the paper would have improved this one.

While we are strong against the adjective stuff as a general rule we would have omitted here "All the pomp of" and have simply carried the line "The greatest show on earth." The public would have taken this in the kidding spirit with which it receives the regular circus advertising and it would have been more in keeping with the general effect.

But this display stands out against all the others appearing on the same page and this is one of the main things that you want to achieve. H. C. Young, manager of the Strand, is giving the sort of attention to his advertising that makes for good business.

Let them laugh WITH your show and not AT it.

THERE certainly is a good sign when there comes to be general improvement in newspaper displays in Jacksonville, Fla., where the general plan has been merely to list the productions for the week. We believe that this is one of the reasons why the Florida city has been kept down to a one and two day run basis.

Policy of Casino theatre in the past has been to use the outside full column of the paper and to make its announcements for the week there, without cuts. In the issue of the Times-Union before us it still does that, but it has devoted eleven inches across four columns to display the first attraction of the week, Alice Joyce in "The Lion and the Mouse."

PLAZA

20c and 30c
Come Early!

IF you have been following this department closely you will have noticed one striking thing—and that is that the reproduction of good advertising on one picture or one star's product has had the effect of resulting in better advertising generally on those pictures. And we have noted this even more than you because we see so many displays that we are unable to find the space to reproduce.

Here the Plaza theatre, San Diego, Cal., has occupied four full columns in its main announcement on "Out of the Fog." It has played down the screen title and the stage name above it for a purpose. The play "'Ception Shoals" was written by a San Diego man and the theatre did the proper thing in taking the fullest possible advantage. The way that this picture was advertised made its showing a real local EVENT.

We commend very strongly the way that the name of Nazimova is used at the top of this display as the most dominant thing about it. The name itself is a selling point, of course, and here it has been used to get the attention of the reader to the display, and as it was used at the top of the page there isn't the slightest doubt about the result. The illustration is taken from one of the stills and then the effect of the lighthouse, rocks and surf have been drawn in at the bottom to provide the atmospheric decoration. This came from the Metro advertisement in the

What Live Wires are Doing

There's Nothing Sweeter

But as much as we love babies, we must ask that you do not bring babies in arms to the Plaza Theatre this week, during the showing of the Nazimova picture, "Out of the Fog."

Performances at 11 a.m., 12:43 p.m., 2:26 p.m., 4:09 p.m., 5:52 p.m., 7:35 p.m., 9:18 p.m., the feature starting twelve minutes later.

You will enjoy it enough more to make the effort to be in your seats at the beginning of the performance worth while.

It is said that "a prophet is not without honor, save in his own country." New York has proclaimed Austin Adams—Austin Adams of San Diego—one of the foremost of playwrights. And the ablest actress in the world, "The Star of a Thousand Moods"—Nazimova—has selected his telling story as a worthy vehicle for her genius—this story from the pen of a loyal San Diegan, written right here in San Diego.

Shall one be unrecognized in San Diego, though deservedly famous in New York? Are we strangers to Genius and Art? We shall see.

We are showing "Out of the Fog" for the first time on any screen in the west. Because the story was written locally, we were able to show the play ahead of all other cities, except the Eastern metropolis. The Plaza keeps up with the procession! Come early in the week—and early in the day, too, if you can.

WE THANK YOU.

PLAZA THEATRE

March 8 issue of The News.

Most of the selling lines used here are those prepared by the producer with the local appeal added the more strongly.

The smaller display, eight inches across three columns, will appeal to exhibitors who find that their patrons are annoyed by crying babies. As the display says nothing is sweeter than a little child but a motion picture theatre during the showing of a serious production is no place for them. After a few lines about this the display goes ahead to tell you that the author of the play is a San Diegan. There is also another strong point made with the statement that the Plaza is the first theatre on the Pacific coast to show the production.

Let's use the word spring as an imperative verb.

THIS is a page advertisement—and when all is said and done that is all that it is—a page advertisement. It comes from the Majestic theatre, Boise, Idaho. In the first place the whole appearance of the display gives the impression that after the exhibitor got all of this space that he felt that he had to fill it up and then he proceeded to dump a lot of cuts into it.

Even considering that these were the only cuts that he had, this page could have been made really effective by using the oval cut of Farnum in the upper right hand corner with the name in two lines at the side and then the cut of him as he takes the gun from his pocket in the lower left hand corner. There should then have been a light triple rule border running around into the top and the right of the scene cut. At the right of the page there would have been a better effect by bringing the border in a little and letting it break at the center of the oval cut. This would be especially effective if the theatre was using a right hand page.

We commend the enterprise of the Majestic and we hope it will try harder for real results.

Many of us are like Moses when the light went out—because we won't reach for the button and turn on the electricity of advertising.

TOO much type is the failing of the Palace theatre, Danville, Ill. For one thing the Palace is to be highly commended, and that it is advertising its various attractions separately. The two displays printed here are taken from the same issue of the afternoon paper on a Wednesday, and it will be noted that the attraction for that day and the one to open the following day are quite distinct.

DON'T MISS THIS WONDERFUL PICTURE

Now one of the greatest faults about the eight inch double column on Pauline Frederick is that the cut is far too small. This is only a "thumbnail" and has no business except in the smallest possible display—only in cases where the space does not permit the use of a larger cut. Especially in the case of a beautiful woman a cut will get the attention much more quickly than anything else. Just once over with the eye for this and one gets the impression of mere type. Naturally the first thing that attracts attention is the name of the star and the title of the picture, and the mass of type preceding this is passed over. Then we go on to the Pathe News and the rest of the announcement. We are very much afraid that anyone but the most conscientious reader of motion picture advertising will then go on, having ignored the selling arguments entirely. The matter in the smaller type is good, largely taken from the press book, but it lacks the attention getter of an attractive cut and then is made preliminary to the announcement of the star and the title—which is generally bad unless the display is largely photographic.

Her name was on the index—the little brown tab that pointed to a chapter of hideous crime! She was hunted by men and haunted by women. Cold, piercing eyes trailed her every move; mocking, sneering, taunting voices leaped up like a bolt in the night and bellowed.

"THERE IS THE WOMAN—THE WOMAN ON THE INDEX—SHE IS THE GUILTY ONE!"

Cringing, crouching with the fear of it all; clinging to the straws of last hope, she kept on, DEFYING grim fate and DARING the green-eyed monster to rob her heart of all that she held dearest—the faith and devotion of the man she loved!

Then the startling climax! The stare of suspicion vanished and the merciless hearts again flowed with the red blood of human souls, for she WON the struggle for the right to love and she trapped the mongrels that would despoil the most noble cause in all the world.

NO ADVANCE IN PRICES

There is also too much type in the seven inch, four column display on "Mickey." The name of Miss Normand should have been brought down under the name of the theatre and should have been considerably larger. Alongside the name of the theatre there could have been used the wording that now occupies two lines at the very top, each word occupying a line: "Thrills, Pathos, Comedy, Adventure, Humor" (although we hardly see the necessity of both "Comedy" and "Humor"). The sentence "the picture you will never forget" should have also been stronger and then the matter that follows should have been shortened by half. It largely duplicated itself. Then there is no excuse for repeating the smaller cut of Miss Normand in the lower left hand corner with other selling arguments. There is another fault at the very bottom with the line "2 Outing Chester Travel Pictures" (and why two on the same day?), then the hours and prices and after that the line "Don't miss this wonderful picture" which is certainly too far separated from the announcement of the feature.

Although the quality of the paper is fairly good the cut printing of this paper is terrible, almost black splotches. The Palace should have the stereotypers underlay the cuts and we are sure the result will be better. If it isn't, the theatre should confine itself to line work.

How New York Stages the Show

COMEDY and action drama about break even at the four leading New York motion picture theatres this week. All of the houses show a variety in the amusement that marks the good showman.

At the Strand the feature is Billie Burke in "Good Gracious Annabelle" which is practically a farce comedy. Here the music is light and there are more laughs with a Christy comedy. It is a spring-timy sort of a bill all the way through, including an Outing-Chester scenic.

After his success with it, at the Rialto, Dr. Risenfeld is putting on an all-comedy bill at the Rivoli this week. The feature is Marguerite Clark in "Three Men and a Girl," while there is the third of the new Drew comedies, and then one of those that Chaplin made in the Keystone days.

Rialto offers a tense feature in Charles Ray in "The Sheriff Son," somewhat remindful of the coward roles that he played at the beginning of his stardom with Triangle. There is a Harold Lloyd comedy and an interesting picture "With Carranza in Mexico."

A novelty is being offered at the Broadway in "The Land of the Bolsheviki," genuine pictures taken since the revolution by the American Red Cross mission and especially arranged by Mr. Kashin. There is lots of action all the time in the feature, Priscilla Dean in "The Exquisite Thief" which is being given a prerelease showing.

Attention is called to the fact that the various news subjects are covered but once in these reviews. Where they have been treated under some other theatre heading they will only be mentioned in the following matter, so that all of this should be read to cover the field.

Rivoli Theatre

THIS week Dr. Riesenfeld has carried his all-comedy bill idea to the Rivoli and there are shown on the same bill Marguerite Clark in "Three Men and a Girl," the latest Drew comedy, one of the old Chaplin laughmakers, and some added laughs in the Animated. As a matter of fact, the whole bill, with the exception of some of the news pictures and the two vocal selections, are devoted to the fun appeal.

In connection with the Drew comedy there is the cleverest musical arrangement that we have seen in a long time. Here the whole thing is based on the newly-married Henry telling his wife the first lie and then following it up with a lot of others to square himself. There is an original theme composed here and used with each lie that he tells, and on a lone instrument—first on the cornet, then on the violin, the bassoon, horn, etc. This is described in more detail later on.

There is a combination of overture, stage setting and cartoon comedy that is mighty effective. With the lights all down to dark blue before the curtain goes up, and blue lights on the orchestra "Hawaiian Selections" are played, some of them with cornet dominant and other bars with the violin carrying the air. Toward the end the curtains part revealing a setting representing a glimpse of the Hawaiian shore, a semi-circle of water lighted with a reddish effect and palm trees along the shore. It is one of the cleverest bits of John Wenger's work. Toward the end there is a dominance of the cornet and this dies down and then with the horns muted, dying down as the curtains close.

Now the orchestra goes into a lively air, "My Hawaiian Sunshine," as there is flashed on the screen "Theatre de Hula," as the first portion of the Pictorial. This is a side-splitting cartoon released by Educational, and it was originally shown at the Rialto about a year ago as a prelude to an Hawaiian scenic, but this fact does not prevent the enjoyment at the Rivoli this week where it literally rocks the house with laughter. It represents a very fat Hawaiian girl and a slim youth doing an accentuated dance, with the figures of the orchestra in the foreground going through their grotesque movements as the Rivoli orchestra carries out the imitations. Tympany and drums are used as the lady falls into the orchestra.

Gaumont then shows pictures of the greatest warship being commissioned at Philadelphia and we have some fine shots of the ship's decks. After this Kinograms supplies pictures of the officers who are detailed by the United States to fly across the Atlantic, then we see their airship at Philadelphia and then have the trials at Rockaway Beach. "Here We Come" is the music through all of these pictures except that the orchestra dims down for the effects when the machine is in action, and here Production Manager Joseph LaRose gets in his wonderful motor imitations from behind the scenes. In fact, the effects play an important part all through this bill and are remarkably well carried out.

Auto races at Santa Monica, Cal., are shown by Gaumont to the tune of "Make Way," with the effects of the running motors again employed. From the same source come pictures of the greatest dirigible in the world being given her trial at Selby, Eng., and here we have "Violets" with the effects again as she goes up. Pathe pictures of the President in Paris for the second time arouse great enthusiasm. There is a big hand, too, for Lloyd George and an even greater one for Clemenceau. "La Pere de la Victoire" is the inspiring music.

Now watch the way that the end of the weekly is made to trail into the vocal number that follows. "In the Land of the Bedouins" is the title, and this opens with pictures along one of the rivers, with "Aida," the music played largely on harp and flute and a few other instruments, the music turning with the title, "The Barbaric Gaiety of the Nomads" to "Danse Oriental," and here we have the tom-tom sort of effects used and then straight to the end of the Pictorial.

Then after a clarinet solo, with the lights dimmed down, the curtains part revealing a row of tent such as are used by the Bedouins, with the desert stretching away in the distance, and a single star in the sky. Emanuel List then sings "Bedouin Love Song" most effectively.

"The Amateur Liar" is the title of the third of the new Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew comedies that come along now. It deals with a newly married couple and the fact that he is innocently detained by a woman that his wife doesn't like causes him to tell a white lie at the expense of a man friend. We have "Babillage" at the start, and then following through with "Summer Showers" and "Light and Love." Then as Henry confronts his wife and tells the first lie we have this specially written theme that has a most humorous turn played on the cornet alone. Then the music reverts to "Life and Love," with the same theme played on the violin as Henry sees the man he has just told his wife about in the restaurant and has to frame a second lie, once more reverting to "Life and Love," and then "I've Got the Shimmie Blues" and "Pulcinello."

But that night when he gets home the wife frames one on him with inviting the friend and his wife to the house, and when Henry hears the announcement he declares he is ill, with the theme then played on the bassoon. "Espana Waltz," with the castinet effects, is used as they hurry Henry off to bed, and then the theme is used on the trombone as he tells another story in an effort to get Jim to come up. "Espana Waltz" is then repeated, and "Pulcinello" following. Then with the next lie there is the theme on the French horn, "Sparklets" coming in and then the theme on the xylophone, followed by "Up in Mabel's Room" and "Midsummer." Finally the whole effect is put over in great style with the theme by the orchestra, with horns and xylophone predominating where Polly says, "You poor bad lying old dear." With these effects there is no wonder that the audience applauds heartily.

Miss Gladys Rice then follows singing Moya's "The Song of Songs." Now you will note that this song is brought back into the feature with splendid effect a little later on. For this number the setting shows a circular window with the curtains drawn to either side and standing lights at the sides and a hanging one in the center. As the curtains part the girl is seated and then she rises and begins to sing.

How well the writer of the Special Service Section on "Three Men and a Girl" knew how such an exhibitor as Dr. Riesenfeld would put on the picture is best shown by turning back to page 1825 of the March 22 issue.

"Chanson" is used at the start, and with the title "Here Is the Man," "Camelia," changing to "Lyric Suite" as Dr. Forsyth is introduced, then to an organ solo for Vanneman and to "Zephyr Waltz" for Kent. A character theme is used for the scene of the old man telephoning and then "Song d'Ete" as Chauncey urges an early wedding, and an organ wedding march for the first of the ceremony, the orchestra taking up a numbered selection as the girl flees. Where the auto is seen we have the organ taking the music with the theme "Humoreske Waltz," played with violin at the title "Twilight," and with the flute at the title, "Each Side Is Determined."

With the title, "Watching For Their Chance," the orchestra comes back with "Chicken Cackle," and then "Vanity," with "Limited to One Change of Clothes." Where the boy visitor is seen playing the mandolin we have "Barcarole Contes d'Hoffman" and then as he stops "Shepherds All and Maidens Fair," followed by "Sweet Little Buttercup," as Forsyth comes to the girl. Then as he explains that the deadline was no idea of his we have "Humoreske Waltz" followed by "Whispering Hearts," and then as Vanneman tells her, too, that the deadline is all foolishness the theme is repeated, followed by Leibeslied and then the organ with the chorus of "Song of Songs," introduced as a 'cello solo with the title "That Seems to Be," and then the theme coming back as Kent speaks of the deadline. With the title "Why Then You Are Free" we have "Song of Songs" again as a 'cello solo played once through, followed by "A Curious Story," with the title "You Two Woman Haters," and then the theme at the title showing the girl is to flee. "Song of Songs" is brought in when Kent catches up with her. Then with the title "Three Men and a Girl" we have one chorus of "Love's Old Sweet Song."

At the very end there is a scene of the girl and boy in a canoe on the lake and Vanneman on shore playing a violin. The girl asks what tune that is and one chorus of "Love's Old Sweet Song" is played from back of stage. There is a change of the tune and the girl again asks what it is and is told that it is "Kiss Me Again" and this selection is played by the full orchestra to the end.

There is another one of the Chaplin revivals this week. This is a Keystone product, "His Prehistoric Past," and shows Charlie going to sleep in the park and dreaming of life on an island among beautiful scantily clad girls and cave men. The musical effects are carried through this, the selections being, in the order they are played: "That Creepy, Weepy Feeling," "On the Beach at Wakeekee," "Hawaiian Dreams," "Mele Hula," "Myona," "In the Deep Cellar," "Admiration," an agitato, and then an allegora viace, "Sunset Land," "American Fantasy," without the strings, "Chocolate Soldier," "Jealous Moon" as Charlie gets walloped with the stone, and "Dreaming" as the cop wakes him up.

Note that the presentation started out with the Hawaiian effects, and that it predominates in the comedy at the end. No, of course it wasn't any accident.

SERVICE SECTIONS

Some Postponed Until the Next Issue

In this issue there appears a Special Service Section on John Barrymore in "The Test of Honor."

A special section on Mae Murray in "What Am I Bid?" will appear in the next issue, and one of these Universal Special Attractions weekly thereafter.

Exhibitors should watch for the Special Service Sections that will be printed here in the next few weeks, because these afford a chance to study the pictures in advance. They are written on behalf of the exhibitors who have contracted for them, and they undertake to show how he can get the most out of each production without passing on the merits of the picture itself.

Let us know any of the ideas of ours that you follow and the original ideas of your own that you use.

Strand Theatre

Comedy runs strong through the bill at the Strand this week, for Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett has been able to get laughs in the scenic as well as in the educational feature, while the feature picture, Billie Burke in "Good Gracious Annabelle," is filled with them.

And this bill suggests that the spring is a good time to get good scenics and especially those with the suggestion of adventure into your bills. The season should to an extent affect theatre programs and we believe that the Strand has just about an ideal one for this time of the year, interesting, yet light—a breath of the outdoors and a ripple of laughter all the way through it.

Lizst's "Second Rhapsody" is the brilliant overture this week. It is played with the lights all in gold and the stage curtains drawn. It is carried to a considerable extent on the violins and the reeds. There is an original cadenza introduced by Max Herberg, the pianist of the Strand orchestra, that adds greatly to the enjoyment of the number.

"Guided and Miss-guided" is the Outing-Chester scenic for this week. There is a title at the start that says "After a season of dictation or listening to women's suffrage it is necessary for a man to climb a mountain." Mt. Assihiboine and Mt. Lafroy, together with Lake Louise, are shown in this one. There are some wonderful shots of mountain climbing and a pretty girl attractively clad in knickers adds much to the enjoyment. There are a lot of laughs with her, especially one with the title "When trouble overtook her she never argued. She simply sat on it," and then we have one of her falls. "Jewels of the Madonna" is the musical selection.

Strand Topical opens with Pathe pictures of seeing the parade of the Twenty-seventh division from an airship. These are mighty interesting in themselves and they give a new twist to the program for the benefit of those who did not see the original ground pictures last week. Naturally they could not be shown at the Strand before the parade, but they went on immediately after. So these airship pictures give the thrill to those who did not see the others, and at the same time are still of great interest to those that did. Here we have the airship going up Fifth avenue with the marching men under them, swooping low for the Victory Arch, then giving us a close view of the Arch of Jewels and of the crowds along the housetops. "Tenth Regiment March" is the music.

There's a real touch of Spring with Universal Events pictures of McGraw and his Giants at Gainesville, Fla. Here we have views of the noted players and see them go through batting practise and various stunts. Mathewson gets a big hand. "I'll Say She Does" is the catchy music for this one with effects reproduced as the bats hit the ball. Then Pathe shows pictures of the inspection of the new submarine base at Los Angeles, with some fine close up shots as the tiny fleet passes in review and then of one of the boats submerging. "Commander-in-Chief" is played here.

There is more of humor and of Spring in the Paramount-Bray, "Salting a Bird's Tail." There are some splendid views of song birds here and of kiddies, with the birds as house hunters and the kids building residences for them and the irrepressible English sparrow forcing his way into one of them. "Arabesque" accompanies.

"Topics of the Day" gets a lot of laughs, among them being: "If Hawaii is to come into the sisterhood of states we insist that she wear something more than a grass skirt and a ukelele," and "President Wilson became a grandfather for the fourth time as his ship was nearing Boston. It is wonderful what foreign travel will do for some men." "Till We Meet Again" is played once through and then there follows "I'll Say She Does."

Now we get Pathe pictures of "American tourists invade Nice, France, once more," but these are American doughboys on a rest trip and they see the sights of the city. Here the music is "If He Can Fight Like He Can Love," with jazz effects as the soldiers are seen dancing with the French girls. Pathe supplies some more of the Lowell Thomas pictures of Germany after the armistice. We are shown pictures of the bedraggled Germans in retreat and then Hun troops crossing the Rhine—but on their way back to Berlin. There is a big hand with the title "They forgot to buy return trip tickets, but they got them all the same—from the Allies." But at the end of the picture there is a shot of German cadets in spick uniforms and duck trousers goosestepping through their drill, and there is a torrent of hisses, which die down with the contrast of the German soldiers today. The music for this is carried on the organ and drums with all the effects reproduced, as indicated in the action.

And to emphasize the situation now there are introduced Current Events pictures of the American watch on the Rhine and we see American soldiers going on an excursion boat, and get some fine views of the country and the old castles. "Bing Bang 'Em on the Rhine" is the mighty appropriate music here. The grand finale comes with the Pathe pictures of President Wilson on his second trip to Paris. Here we have trumpet effects and "Hail America" to great applause.

Before a setting which represents a parlor with an open window in the center and draped at the sides the Strand Ladies Quartet, wearing the gowns and white wigs of Colonial days, render a double selection, "Les Belles Manieres," and "Le Berger Discreet."

Love stuff and the extremely tuneful airs prevail in the musical score for the feature, a considerable portion of which is carried on the organ because of the demand on the orchestra for the remainder of the program. "Gloriana" is played at the screening and then "Serenade" is followed through until Gloriana tells about her marriage and here we have "Elevation" with "Mountain Song" following through to the title: "Wasn't it wonderful that I could cry," and then we get "Punchinello" once until Murchison is told the stock was sold and here "Nocturne" is played and continued until Annabelle meets her friends in the hotel lobby. There the organ takes up the music.

It comes back with the scene of Wimbledon stopping at the roadhouse for another drink, with "Noveletten" played and then changing to "Romance" with Annabelle and Rawson together and the title "I think you ought to know." "Noveletten" is again used to the scene where the lawyer is locked in the chicken coop and here comes "Love in April" until Wimbledon orders out the supposed skipper. "Bowl of Pansies" follows with the drunken broker scene with the girl.

There is a clever effect when Annabelle is seen at the piano, and we have "Then You'll Remember Me" with the piano effect, changing to "In the Garden" with the orchestra as she stops playing. With the title "I'm going away now" we have a dramatic tension and with the title, "No, he's shaved" and the final love scene come in it is "Romance."

After Redferne Hollinshead sings "Ye Banks and Braes" and "Little Mother of Mine" delightfully we have Dirmar's pictures of polar bears, and then one of the Pathe analyses of motion, "Turns and Twists." The organ carries the music.

"Hard Luck," the latest Christy comedy, puts the laughs back in the system with a will, and here the music is mighty catchy, the tunes being a selection from "Going Up," until the restaurant scene and then "Maybelle" following through with "Old Fashioned Way" until the youth robs the blind man, and then we get "On a Little Farm" to the end.

Martin's "Melody of Peace" is the organ solo.

Rialto Theatre

THERE is "some" Animated magazine at the Rialto this week. There is something doing in every minute and there is a variety of topics and a mingling of the laughs and the thrills. And the whole bill is one of the sort that runs the full play of the emotions without presenting any problem for you to worry over. For though the feature is without the laughs it's full of action and there is plenty of comedy to balance the bill.

Selections from "Madame Butterfly" form the overture which is played with the lights all in gold. This is carried to a considerable extent on the strings with the organ coming in on the minors and the brasses at the end to a brilliant finale.

George Wright has departed somewhat from merely seeing Mexico in his latest picture released by Educational, "With Carranza in Mexico" for he has been able to introduce the president of the southern republic in an interesting manner. We are first shown the palace at Chapultepec and then we have views of the gardens and finally we have a fine shot of Carranza. "La Feria" suite is played up to the time that the president reviews some of his troops and here it changes to "Sorella." Then we have him in his garden and "Goyesca" is played with the organ and the chimes coming in for the church scenes.

We get a beautiful setting for the first vocal number. With the lights all in red the side curtains blue we have the effect of the long window and a Madonna medallion effect at either side with the background in purple. Miss Annie Rosner, dressed in white, then sings "It est Doux" from "Herodiade."

Rialto magazine opens with Universal Current Events pictures of Secretary Baker inspecting the American troops along the Mexican border we have "New York Hippodrome" march played until the firing where we have the effects of the cannon and then the drums with the splendid shots of the Seventh cavalrymen charging at full speed right in front of the camera. From Gaumont we have pictures of the inspection of the Los Angeles submarine base and some views of our biggest undersea craft. From the same source come pictures of specialists saving 50,000 babies a year at San Francisco and we have glimpses of all nationalities while "Jack and Jill" is played.

Then come the Pathe aeroplane pictures of the parade with the introduction of "Trombone Man" played and then the effects. Universal Current Events shows pictures of the boys of the Twenty-seventh division presenting their musical comedy "Let's Beat It" and here the music is "Hop Along," without intro.

Now here comes a clever and highly humorous piece of film which is introduced for the first time. "Toplitzky Says" is the title and it repeats the saying of an aged Yiddisher talking to his grandson. There is a Jewish title for this and the orchestra plays "Jewish Melody" and becomes tacit as the old man is shown speaking. There are any number of the funny sayings, including such as: "Any yokel knows what 2 and 2 makes, but when it makes 5 that's business"; "If you want to get ahead, don't let it swell"; "A man shouldn't get married until he's old enough and ven he's old enough he'll know better," and "Peace is a great blessing. It will end the watch on the Rhine and the watch on the wrist." There is an added laugh at the very end when the kid asks the old man, "Vot you got 'ginst the barbers."

Then come Current Events pictures of baseball back again to "Step Lively," then Pathe pictures of a new watch on the Rhine with "Over There" played twice through and then "Lorelei," then pictures of the New York hospital train off for the coast with "When You Come Back" played and then the pictures of Germany after the armistice with selections from "Pomp and Circumstance" used. For the final punch there are pictures of President Wilson opening the League of Nations discussion and "March Lorraine" is played to the finish.

Martin Brefel and Edouardo Albanao then sing effectively the duet from "La Forza del Destino" and then we have the feature, Charles Ray in "The Sheriff's Son." Music for this consists largely of the numbered selections Karganoff's "Serenade" is introduced with Ray, then is followed by "Stampede" and "Serenade" used again with a change to "Lovelight" as Ray asks "Are you a client." With the title "The Rutherfords" we have "May Dreams" and then at the title "I saw the men of this country" "Celamtis" is played.

At the scene where the girl is caught in the trap, Rachmaninoff's "Melody" is played and then "Constance," the theme is introduced as Ray helps her up. Then follow numbered selection. There follows a series of numbered and organ selections and then with the title "Please let me in" the theme is introduced as a cello solo up to "You lying spy" and then with the title "As the Rutherford clans" we get "Canterbury Bells," played to action then some more action music and the last eight bars of "Constance" at the end as Ray takes the girl in his arms.

With the lights all red, the side curtains of the stage part, showing a mountain in a red glare, the foreground in blue, at the left and at the right a mountain and lake. On the right hand steps of the stage there are two marimbaphones and these accompany Joseph Lubalin in "La Paloma," as a trumpet solo.

The Broadway

AT the Broadway theatre this week Maurice A. Kashin, the managing director, is presenting a film that is so far all of his own. He has arranged it especially because of the great interest in the Russian situation just now and under the title "The Land of the Bolsheviki" it is attracting unusual attention. It is made from pictures taken by the American Red Cross mission and will be a little later issued for general release through the country.

Music for these pictures makes them all the more interesting. There has been a wide variety of the best Russian selections included and the airs are always in keeping with the scenes shown. They will be worth remembering by other exhibitors who will have this picture to play later. And as a matter of fact the pictures that are being shown at the Broadway are being so well played that a study of them is profitable. This is especially true because the orchestra is eighteen pieces which is within the possibilities of far more exhibitors than the larger ones at the three other New York houses reviewed here.

Keler-Bela's "Hungarian Fantasy" is the overture and Director James C. Bradford gets the fullest effects out of this. It is played with a red light on the musicians, the panorama curtains slightly parted showing the city at night with some of the buildings at night. After the trumpets come in the setting slowly lights up.

"Go Get 'em" is used for the opening and then with the Universal Current

New York's Way

Events pictures of President Wilson opening the League of Nations talk we have Borch's "Festival March." International shows Ottawa welcoming the Princess Pat regiment and there are some fine shots of the marching men and a pleasing one with a lot of small boys running along by their side. "Laurentian March" is used here. Then come Current Events pictures of the "Let's Beat It" show with "Jazz Baby" played. Current Events pictures of the Giants follow to "Hang Your Hat in a Dixie Town" and then we have Baker inspecting the troops on the Mexican border to "Don Presto Gallop." The final punch comes with some unusually good pictures of the parade from an airship, the machine barely missing some of the spires and tops of skyscrapers. "Gaily Through the World" is the music.

After "Topics of the Day" we have Lyons and Moran in their latest comedy, "The Wife Breakers," which tell the troubles of a pair of divorce lawyers in a cafe with the wife who wants a divorce, their own wives and the woman's husband appearing on the scene. There is lively action all through it and music with "pep" has been selected. The numbers in order: "My Barney Lies Over the Ocean," "Texas Fox Trot," "Walking the Dog," "Come On Papa," "Do Re Mi," "I'll Say She Does," "A Wee Bit of Lace," "High Yaller," "Pahjamah," "Mama's Blues," and "Tackin' 'Em Down."

With a blue flood on the pit and an amber light on the singer Miss Mabel Day then renders "Villennelle."

Then comes "The Land of the Bolsheviki." It opens with the statement that these pictures were taken by the American Red Cross mission that visited Russia after the country fell into the hands of the present government and we are first shown views at Vladivostok, where the members of the mission were compelled to load their own baggage because of the lack of workers. Then we have views along the Siberian railroad and of Lake Baikal where the Czecho-Slovaks are in power and then a typical Siberian village and finally members of the mission addressing Russian soldiers. Tschaikowsky's "March Slav" is used up to the point where the members of the mission sit down to dine in the car where the czar signed his abdication. Here the music changes to Gretchaninoff's "Hymn of Free Russia." We are shown the grain stacked and rotting in the fields and then the natives eating the sunflower seed which they regard as a great confection.

Next come some views of the Manchurian brigands with Hosmer's "Chinese Wedding Procession" used. Next come scenes along the Volga to Cady's "Song of the Boatmen of the Volga' and with the title that Nigny-Novgorod is the site of the great fair in peace time the music changes to Tschaikowsky's "Danse Russe Trepak." We are shown the once busy markets now almost deserted and the wealth of German toys that are on sale all over Russia. There are specimens of the thousands of Russian beggars and the wagons with their small wheels.

PAULINE FREDERICK
PAULINE FREDERICK
THE WOMAN ON THE INDEX
To-Day

George Worth, house manager of the Iris theatre, Denver, was able to get an attractive display on the newest Pauline Frederick picture by using a shadow box in the window. Pictures of the star and scenes from the production were used liberally. It will be noted that even the door to the right was employed, and here one of the striking posters was used

With the arrival of the mission in Petrograd we have "Moussorgshyana" and then we are transferred to Moscow with "Procession of Sadar." There we are shown one of the summer parks that looks like one of New York with the restaurant crowded with diners and gay parties on the lake. With the change to the cathedral of Basile the music becomes "Maneoi," and then as the scene shifts to Archangel and the Yankee doughboys are first seen we have "Yankiana." With the first views of the city the accompaniment is Granier "Valse Ballet" and then with the view of the American embassy "The New Colonial March." With the title "Amidst the winter scenes" Williams' "Romance" is played. Views of the American blockhouses carry Godard's "Canzonetta" and then we have Ohlsen's "Russian March," with the city of Archangel celebrating the armistice.

There is a close touch at the end when we see French soldiers bringing in the body of the first American soldier killed in Russia. Chopin's "Nocturne" is used and then we have "Taps" sounded and a roll of drums and the organ reverberating at the end, the final showing civilization's outposts on duty.

In "The Exquisite Thief" starring Priscilla Dean there is more action stuff and more quick changes than is seen in three or four of the average pictures and here there has to be a great deal of descriptive selections used in the score. "Petite Bijourie" is played at the screening and then with the title "In a private office" we have "Serenata," and then "Coquetterie" for the first sight of Miss Dean. "Woodland Dreams" is used when she steals into the mansion and then we have a number of dramatic selections with the theme, "If You Look in Her Eyes" introduced while she sits at the table with the Englishman. This is repeated when she enters the cabin and again when good conduct earns a parole. Once more it comes back with the title "Are You Sorry?" and finally at the end when the Englishman locks the detective and the thief in the room.

Under a blue spotlight "Midsummer Caprice" is played as the organ solo.

Exhibitor Has Scores Hunting Hidden Red Gloves

Many red gloves representing the one "red glove" in the new Universal serial by that name, were found in the vicinity of 4618 Third avenue, Brooklyn, last week as a result of an advertising scheme carried out by William Gilmore, manager of the Grand Theatre in Brooklyn.

Two weeks prior to the showing of "The Red Glove" Mr. Gilmore flashed on the screen a statement saying that each night a red glove would be lost by a mysterious person and a clue to the hiding place was given. The finder of the red glove was given a season pass to the serial. On March 15, according to a previous announcement, five red gloves were lost between 12 and 1 o'clock noon in a vacant lot near the theatre.

According to Mr. Gilmore, the crowd of boys and girls and even grown-ups numbered more than a hundred at ten o'clock that morning and at one o'clock had increased. All five of the red gloves were found and ten of the red gloves lost during the previous two weeks were presented at the theatre box-office and passes claimed.

Style Show Packs 75,000 into Milwaukee Theatre Where Elaborate Setting Is Given

MR. EXHIBITOR, if you would pack approximately 75,000 people into your theatre in a week, then follow the leadership of Tom Saxe and George Fischer and have a "Style Show."

It's a lot of work, but the box-office returns say that "every day was Sunday." Here's how it's done.

Tom Saxe is the Belasco showman of Milwaukee—the Alhambra Theatre is his to make flourish or die, and he doesn't know that last word. George Fischer is the manager of the house, and to him falls the task of plotting and planning to get the theatre-going crowd into house in the face of three other theatres, also centrally located.

The week of April 23 was universal "Style Week" in Milwaukee. So, plots the wily George, I'll burn the candle three ways—'tis possible to do. Putting on a Style Show I can co-operate with the c back of this civic advancement idea, with the merchants, give the public something "different," and do a nice fat business.

The Style Show was an unqualified success from the opening fashion number on Monday afternoon. Four times daily a dozen professional models imported from Chicago, and several local models promenaded a runway in the latest concoctions of Dame Fashion. It was put on with the aid of local merchants. The Gerretson Company, an exclusive department, was the firm most concerned. It furnished the suits, dresses, wraps, furs and hats. The Brouwer Shoe Company supplied the footwear, and the Phoenix Hose factory the stockings. Furniture necessary to the sets was supplied by the Fischer Furniture Company.

Manager Fischer and the heads of the firms pooled together a common fund necessary to the defraying of the expense for securing high-priced models for the show. The models were obtained from Chicago studios, and included those well known for various commercial poses—namely, Josephine Lehrn, Mae Lanelle, Ethel Burt, Dorothy Sinclair, Verna Mitchell, Catherine Bonner, Lenore Anderson, Virginia Dale, Kate Barnard, Nina Bartlett and little Geneva Mitchell. These were supplemented by three local models—Louise Johnson, Milynda Zankel and Rosella Czapanskiy.

The value of the garments displayed was conservatively estimated at $30,000, and before the last day of the show over one-half of the garments had been disposed of, proving that the merchants had not lost out through co-operating with staging a Style Show at a motion picture theatre.

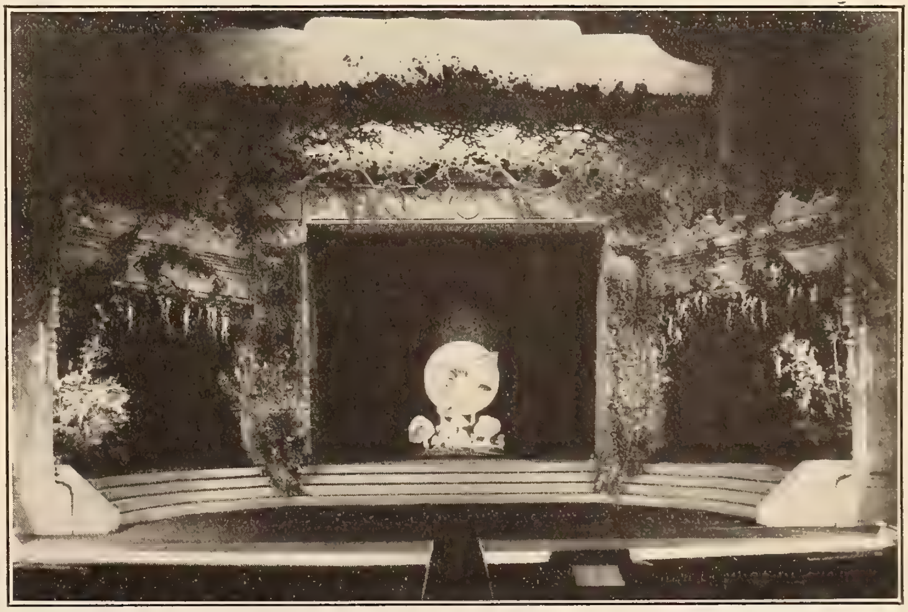
The method of presentation was perfect. The stage and theatre were entirely dark and then lighted up gradually to soft music. The first garments shown were street dresses, furs, suits and wraps. Then followed the sport garments and light summer frocks.

To the rear of the stage an exact back set had been built, and here amid a dainty boudoir setting were displayed negligee robes.

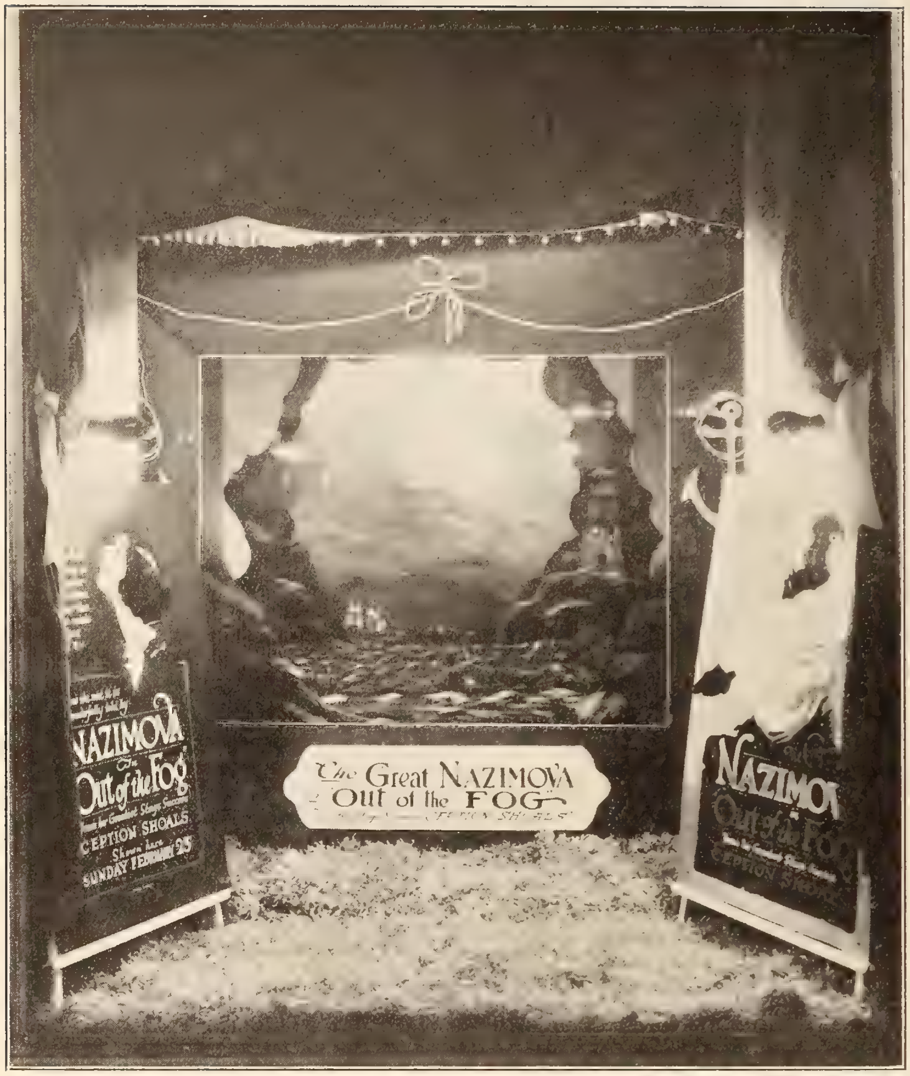
The evening gowns were the last features, and in order to do things up right at each performance Manager Fischer provided the models with several American beauty roses, which they threw into the audience as they reached the end of the runway.

Sunday Paper Gives Double Page to Motion Picture Beauties

In its March 9 issue the Baltimore Sunday Sun carries one of the most interesting photoplay features that has yet appeared in any newspaper. This consists of a double page display in the Photogravure section under the heading "An Acre or So of Beauty," and then there are included pictures of fifteen women stars: Gladys Brockwell, Shirley Mason, Mae Marsh, Edith Johnson, Marguerite Clark, Evelyn Greeley, Peggy Hyland, Carol Holloway, Beebe Daniels, Viola Dana, Ethel Clayton, Vivian Martin, Lila Lee, Elsie Ferguson and Billie Burke.



Scene during the lighting up process of the Alhambra stage with the fairy effect in the center. These lights came up very slowly



A striking lobby display was offered by the Woodlawn theatre, Chicago, during its run of "Out of the Fog." With the assistance of H. E. Crawford, special display creator, Andrew Karzas, manager of the Woodlawn theatre, surpassed all of previous efforts in this line with some startingly realistic mechanical and lighting effects. The tossing ship on the rolling waves was worked out with such realism that crowds of Woodlawn patrons banked the display window. A true fog was obtained with a stereopticon and several clouded slides, which were automatically moved by special mechanism. A special lighthouse flash penetrated the fog at regular intervals and drove home the thought of the production in a striking manner. The Woodlawn theatre held the Nazimova feature for five days to capacity business as a result.

because they took what was shipped them, stuck out the posters furnished by the producers and charged their patrons the price of a good show. I now have a program as good as you can get in any city, but of course my subjects are not quite as new, but my argument is: That any picture in good physical condition and not having been shown here before, is new. Advertise freely and show what you advertise and the game will be interesting. In this case the old saying holds true: "You can Fool Some of the People all of the time; All the People some of the time, but you can't Fool All the People All the time."

If there are any small town exhibitors having any experience in the lines above mentioned, and would like some information on how to better their box office receipts and build up a good clientele, have them write me.

I simply recite these facts, hoping that some steps will be taken to remedy the conditions that confront the small town exhibitor.

"Sis Hopkins" Model Idea Proves Popular in Many Cities

How a good idea will be adopted by exhibitors is being shown by the demand that is coming in for the "Sis Hopkins" model, who was first used with the showing of the picture of that name at the Strand theatre, New York. Immediately after the engagement here the young woman went to Toledo, O., where H. C. Horater put on the same stunt slightly differently. Since then Charles Branham used her services at the Majestic, Detroit and C. W. Diebel at the Liberty, Youngstown, Ohio. Other cities are planning to use the same stunt.

Diebel Films Landing of Ohio Troops in New York for Youngstown People

C. W. DIEBEL knew that everybody in Youngstown, Ohio, wanted to welcome home the boys of the Thirty-seventh division which is made up of Ohio boys, but he knew that mighty few of the people could go to New York merely to greet them as they came in on one of the big transports. He knew also that the war department would send them home in bunches and that there would be no general parade.

But it was the enterprise of Mr. Diebel that is responsible for the splendid Liberty theatre which has just celebrated its anniversary. He knew that the motion picture could bring the boys right on to his screen and that thousands would pack his house to see them coming down the gangplanks from the vessels that brought them from "Over there." So he determined that Youngstown people should have the opportunity.

In conjunction with William Rock, city editor of the Youngstown Vindicator, and accompanied by Mrs. Harold Taylor, representing the Youngstown Red Cross, and Mrs. Julia Bonnell, representing the Youngstown War Camp Community Service, Mr. Diebel came to New York and arranged to film the landing of the division. Many difficulties were experienced in getting the necessary passes and permits, but these difficulties were eventually overcome. When the Thirty-seventh landed the boys were filmed as they marched down the gangplank.

Arrangements were made with the commanding officers, and the Youngstown boys were segregated from the others on the wharf, and were filmed while the women of the party served lunch and cigarettes to each man.

Governor Cox was also a member of the welcoming party, and he was shown shaking hands with the Youngstown boys.

The Thirty-seventh arrived on the transports Huntington, George Washington and von Steuben. A little more than 1,000 feet of film was taken.

Horse Race Aids Exhibitor in Boosting Serial

They are using horse races to boost motion pictures these days. This one comes from A. J. Laurie, manager of the Strand theatre, Ottowa. Mr. Laurie had just finished running a teaser campaign on the Houdini serial when he dropped into the office of the Ottawa paper and happened to see that a horse named Houdini was running in a race at New Orleans. Mr. Laurie got a chance to connect this up with his serial in the sporting columns.

But the peculiar thing about it is that the sporting editor took the "hunch" and made a bet on the horse, which won at 12 to 1. Laurie immediately posted the whole newspaper page on heavy cardboard, indicated the items with a heavy black mark, and soon had crowds in front of the theatre reading how Houdini proved a winner.

Live News from the Producers

Kenneth Macgowan Rejoins Goldwyn

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation announces the engagement of Kenneth MacGowan as advertising director, and Ralph Block as publicity director of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Both of these two departmental heads are already engrossed in their new duties with Goldwyn.

For Mr. Macgowan this means a return to Goldwyn after several months with The New York Tribune. A year ago he was director of publicity for Goldwyn, returning to the newspaper field as a special writer attached to The Tribune. Prior to his first alliance with Goldwyn, now resumed, he had been motion picture editor of The Philadelphia Evening Ledger, and a contributor to a number of the better monthly magazines.

Mr. Block was formerly dramatic critic of The New York Tribune and has been a writer in other fields for The Tribune for several years, as well as a contributor to the magazines. This is his first entry into motion pictures.

Parsons Renews Contract with Goldwyn

"Smiling Bill" Parsons, whose Capitol Comedies are being released by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation, has renewed his Goldwyn contract, it has been announced.

The work of the screen humorist has excited so much accumulating interest that Oswald Stoll, film distributor in England and the Goldwyn representative there, has contracted for the entire first year output of his work in the United Kingdom.

April and May will bring four new Parson releases through Goldwyn, "The Midnight Alarm," which will be released April 6, will be followed by "Wanted A Baby," "The Sea Woof" and "Circumstantial Evidence." The last of these is described by those who have seen it in production as the best thing "Smiling Bill" has yet done for the screen.

Horace Davies Is Back

The first former member of the west coast film colony to return to Los Angeles after active service in the war was Horace Davies, former director of comedies for Universal and Christie, who arrived in Los Angeles March 22nd, after being discharged following several months in hospitals in France and America.

Davies was a member of the 91st Division, and was one of the first eighteen to be wounded by shrapnel in the battle of Argonne on October 4. At the same time three men were killed.

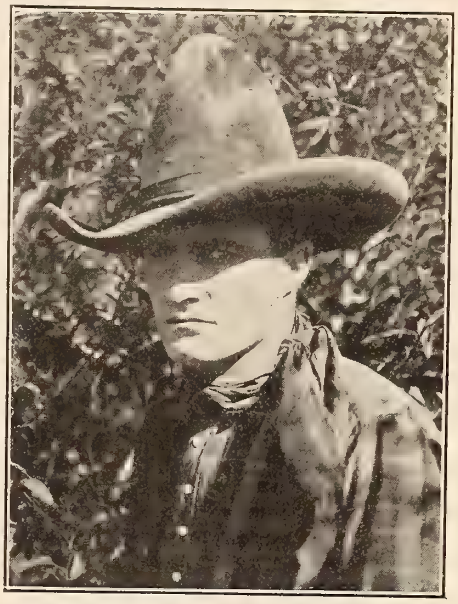
Fox Film Corporation Declares That Tom Mix's Development is Sensation of Season with Exhibitors



Tom Mix, presented by William Fox in "Fighting for Gold"

WHEN the fifth Victory picture, "Fighting for Gold," starring Tom Mix, was released, Fox officials say that it centered attention on the tremendous strides which this whirlwind Western star has made in public esteem this season.

Mix today is said to rank as one of the most popular stars making his type of pictures, and the high standard of each of his successive productions has brought him a peculiar position in the eyes of exhibitors.

Tom Mix's first Victory Picture was "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," which was released in September. This proved a tremendous success throughout the country; it is said by the Fox Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation, and gave such promise for Mix's future that hundreds of exhibitors signed contracts immediately.

The next Tom Mix picture was "Treat 'Em Rough," which is declared to have proved even more popular than "Mr. Logan, U. S. A." It was in "Treat 'Em Rough," which was filmed on a ranch at Prescott, Ariz., that Mix performed his stunt of bulldogging a steer. This picture is cited as having made a great sensation and further strengthened Mix's hold on exhibitors and public.

Right on the heels of "Treat 'Em Rough" came "Fame and Fortune," which is described as containing even more pep and stunts and thrilling situation than the previous Mix pictures. A reviewer is quoted as having recently stated that Mix had the happy faculty of never duplicating his stunts and of doing them without deliberately attracting attention to the fact that he was going to do something unusual.

The picture was followed by "Hell Roarin' Reform," considered by Fox officials as the best Western picture ever made. This picture, it is pointed out by officials of the Fox organization, had thrills, humor, clean, interesting story and a rapidly-moving plot.

Already, it is said, reports are coming in that "Fighting for Gold" will prove an even bigger success than "Hell Roarin' Reform." It is declared to have more thrills and the stunts that Mix performs never have been done by anybody.

"One of the remarkable things about Mix," said a Fox official this week "is that each of his pictures seems better than the one that preceded it. It is rare that a film star can ring the bell on every picture, and the better the stars and the bigger their reputation, the more noticeable is any falling off in merit. Mix has been uniformly excellent from his first picture, and his reputation is based on good solid achievement."

Hodkinson Promotes Crane as Salesman

E. A. Crane, formerly a Hodkinson representative in Washington, D. C., has been promoted by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation to the New York office, where he will be in charge of Hodkinson sales throughout the Greater New York territory. He will be located at the New York exchange of Pathe Exchange, Inc., through which channels Hodkinson service is distributed.

Mr. Crane joined the Hodkinson organization last September, and during his seven months in the capitol city accomplished some splendid results, in recognition of which came his promotion. It was Mr. Crane who arranged for and put over with great success the official presentation to the War Department of Ashley Miller's patriotic series, "Made in America," at Crandall's Knickerbocker Theatre, as well as the private showing to the National Press Club.

Empey Is Star In Select Picture

"Hell on Earth" to Be Directed by Wilfred North, and to Be Modern Story—Big Exploitation Plan Considered

LEWIS J. SELZNICK, president of Select Pictures Corporation, announces that contracts have been signed between that company and Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, author and star of "Over the Top," for the production of a new and especially timely big special feature photoplay which will bear the title, "Hell on Earth."

Production work will start in the very near future under the direction of Wilfred North, who also directed Sergeant Empey in his picture, "Over the Top," produced from his book of the same name.

"Hell on Earth," however, unlike "Over the Top," will not be a war story, but a story laid in America and dealing with the most modern conditions and the timeliest of subjects.

"Hell on Earth" will be exploited by a costly campaign of advertising and publicity, which will begin immediately and be kept up continuously until after the picture is released. A contract has already been given for an electric sign which before the week is out will call attention to all Broadway that "Select Pictures announces Arthur Guy Empey in 'Hell on Earth' a forthcoming production."

Immediately after the Lusitania disaster, Arthur Guy Empey, who had previously served six years in the United States Cavalry and seven years in the National Guard, sailed to England and enlisted at once as a private in the First London Royal Fusiliers. After a short period of training he was sent to France, where he served as a machine gunner and bomber, and later in the Intelligence Departmnt. He was severely wounded in the Battle of the Somme and honorably dischargd.

Returning to the United States, Guy Empey bent all his energies to expedite the entry of the United States into the war. He wrote the famous war book, "Over the Top," which was later picturized, and also spent many months lecturing throughout the country to stimulate recruiting. He also played an important part in the various Liberty Loan drives, and the campaigns for the organizations which served the men in uniform. His writings also include "First Call" and "Tales from a Dug-Out."

Empey is now the managing publisher of "Treat 'Em Rough," the Tank Corps magazine, which is battling against Bolshevistic propaganda.

World Pictures Begins "Relations" Film

WORLD PICTURES makes the announcement that work has started at their studio at Fort Lee on a feature picture which bears the working title of "Relations." In this announcement is included the statement that the star selected for "Relations" is Evelyn Greeley. With this picture Miss Greeley makes her debut as a star player standing alone, without being coupled or co-starred with any other actress or actor.

Miss Greeley has attained the position desired by every young actress, through sheer hard work, close application to her task, the employment of good common sense in working with directors instead of fighting them and the absolute absence of "pose" and willfulness oftimes termed "temperament."

Her connection with World Pictures began with "The Price of Pride" under the direction of William A. Brady, when she was merely one of the ensemble. For quite some time she appeared in one feature after another still maintaining her inconspicousity but making good. Her work, meeting with an appreciation, she was then given a line in the billing and meanwhile the directors who worked with her said: "Watch that girl."

She then became a regular featured player with Carlyle Blackwell and in course of time became his co-star and as such won favor from exhibitors and reviewers in "By Hook or Crook," "The Golden Wall," "The Beloved Blackmailer," "Courage for Two," "Hitting The Trail," and numerous others.

Her first starring vehicle, "Relations," was written by Joseph F. Poland. It was put in scenario form and continuity was written by Clara S. Beranger. Oscar Apfel has been brought back from California to supervise the picturization of the story and direction of Miss Greeley and her supporting company.

Lesser Makes Deal for Sennett Bathing Girls

IT was announced this week that Sol Lesser, president of the State Right Distributing Company and the All Star Features Distributors, has reached the concluding stages of a deal with Mack Sennett whereby Lesser will secure the services of several of the Sennett bathing girls as a "bally" for the production, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," the Sennett production which he recently secured.

It is planned to send the girls on tour with prints of the pictures, with at least six companies out.

The idea was first tried out in San Francisco when "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" was presented there. Reports have it that the patrons of the Tivoli liked the arrangement very much, and that the presence of the bathing girls did much to make the picture more welcome and contributed materially in thronging the theatre.

An announcement from the mimeograph, and which was sent to all the trade papers this week, said: "This is positively the first time in the history of motion picture enterprises that a pretentious company of living players has accompanied a picture. It remained for Sol L. Lesser and Mack Sennett to conceive the idea and bring it to a successful realization."

Parks Wins Distinction as Musician

Henry Francis Parks, musician of the American Theatre in Butte, Mont., according to reports from that city, has won distinction throughout the west as an unusually capable musician—rather organist.

His breaking into the game was accomplished by a window demonstration and general playing for the Rudolph Wurlitzer Company at their Louisville, Ky., store. Excellent taste in apropriate music selection, while at the Alamo, together with a natural love for the instrument and a thorough musical education won him such a following that the attention of the bigger men of the town was directed to his efforts. A special concert given by him a little less than a year after he had taken up the earnest study of the instrument so pleased Dr. Moser, the foremost critic of Louisville, and a thorough musician, that he made the remarks in a local paper that "Mr. Parks has all the classifications which make real artists and no doubt will yet be heard from in the artistic world, for he has excellent technique, temperament, artistic taste and conscientiousness."

Despite the fact that his war duties kept him from more serious study he has achieved success in Butte, in fact so much so that Frank T. Bailey, one of the most noted executives of the film exhibitors' world, and a keen critic of good music, has contracted for his services.

Vera Steadman Returns

Vera Steadman, formerly one of the leading comediennes of the Keystone comedies, has joined the Universal forces and will be seen shortly in a one-reeler entitled "Happ Returns," being directed by Jack Dillon. She is also seen in the two-reel special animal comedy directed by William S. Campbell and entitled "And the Elephant Still Pursued Her."

Robertson-Cole Join Hands With Jury

Important Deal Closed with Organization Headed by Sir William Jury Involves Distribution of American Product in Great Britain and Big European Specials Here

CABLE announcements received this week told of the closing of an important international deal by which Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., will distribute in the United Kingdom all the films controlled by the Robertson-Cole Company, with the exception of pictures starring Sessue Hayakawa, J. Warren Kerrigan, Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," and other individual pictures which had been previously disposed of.

The cabled news further emphasizes Robertson-Cole's importance as a factor in motion picture affairs by stating that a number of pretentious specials produced in this country are to be purchased by Robertson-Cole for distribution through Jury's in the British Isles, while Jury's will secure European attractions for release in the United States by Robertson-Cole.

Hands Across the Sea

By the arrangements Robertson-Cole becomes the accredited American representative of Jury's, while the value of the Robertson-Cole stars was rated so strongly by Jury's that they have undertaken the exploitation of these pictures to the exclusion of all other American-made features.

The affiliation of the two substantial film organizations carries interest to exhibitors in the United States through the pretentious European productions it will bring to the screens here.

In this list are included three super-features to be produced each year by Louis Mercanton, the noted French director. During the next twelve months, Mercanton will stage an elaborate picture in Egypt, a second in France and the third in Italy. The plans are for the stories of these specials to have universal appeal that will find favor in New York as well as in London or Paris. Several of Mercanton's features have been shown in this country with marked success.

Sir William Jury, managing director of Jury's, Ltd., is recognized as the Dean of the film industry in Europe and popular with exhibitors in the United Kingdom. For the past four years, however, he has devoted but little of his personal time to his cinema business, subordinating all his interests to his desire to bring victory to Britain in the war against the Hun. Because of his untiring efforts in the management of the Ministry of Information, Sir William was knighted by King George.

Alma Rubens, in "Diane of the Green Van," through Exhibitors Mutual

Recently Sir William was retired from the Ministry Board but returned to civil affairs only after assurance that the armistice had brought his work to a successful conclusion. Now the British peer intends to return all energies to motion pictures.

Laboratory Deal Also

It is one of Sir William's earnest desires to improve the quality of the positive prints used in the theatres, which, because of their uncertainty have always been one of the greatest handicaps to English motion picture in the past. With this end in view, he is now having constructed in London the largest film laboratory in the United Kingdom with a capacity of two million feet per week. In addition to furnishing Jury's photoplays for distribution, Robertson-Cole will also supply the entire equipment for this tremendous plant, providing exclusively the Bell & Howell cinema-machinery, to which they control all export rights. Reports state that the laboratory will not only surpass in quantity of production any now existing in England, but will also be one of the biggest in the world.

The distributing organization of Jury's Ltd. covers the United Kingdom thoroughly. With headquarters in all the important centres of the British Isles, Jury's has unlimited exploitation possibilities.

The stars whom Jury's obtain under the arrangements with Robertson-Cole have all established their popularity with British fans. H. B. Warner, whose father was one of the foremost actors on the English stage some years ago, will undoubtedly prove a real favorite of the British screen. Others on the list are Billie Rhodes, Alma Rubens, William Desmond, Bessie Barriscale, and Henry B. Walthall, and productions already successfully launched in this country, such as "What Every Woman Wants" and "The Turn in the Road."

Metro Buys Comedy for Hale Hamilton

Maxwell Karger, Metro director general, has selected as Hale Hamilton's next starring subject, to follow "After His Own Heart," "That's Good" and "Johnny on the Spot," an original comedy from the pen of Robert F. Hill. "Full of Pep" is the working title of the new Hamilton picture, which will be produced at the new Metro studios in Hollywood under Mr. Karger's personal supervision.

According to present plans "Full of Pep" will go into production next week. Harry L. Franklin, Hamilton's director, has about completed "After His Own Heart," the Ben Ames Williams story scenarioized by A. S. Le Vino. Franklin will again direct.

Frank Lanagan In It

One of the important players in "The Prodigal Liar," the new William O. Desmond production made by Jesse D. Hampton and distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual, is Frank Lanagan. In "The Prodigal Liar" Lanagan has the role of "Steve Logan," a b-a-d man.

Star or Story—Which?

By Harry Raver

APROPOS the ever-widening discussion of production policies, of star value as opposed to story value, of the rapidly increasing tendency to build on the story rather than the star, it seems to me that only a few recent instances of high prices paid for stories are sufficient to indicate the trend of production today in the motion picture industry.

For instance, I understand that Louis Mayer paid $50,000 for the rights of "In Old Kentucky" for Anita Stewart. An offer of $60,000 has been made and refused for "The Rise and Fall of Susan Lenox," by David Graham Philips, and it was quite recently that $40,000 was paid for "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm." Whether consciously or not, the producer puts the value of the story above that of the star and it is necessary to have a story before there is any use for a star. In my own case the story will always be adapted to the star, but not with any effort or intent to glorify the latter at the expense of other elements essential to success.

Analysis of the last few "star mad" years in the picture industry reveals that the "star theory" was built on a false premise. Perhaps it is true that for a limited period this star-gazing has stimulated the industry, but the star's rule is nearly ended. The effect of this craze has been to weaken the industry and it is not surprising that thoughtful men began to view the situation with alarm.

The public actually goes to the motion picture theatre to see the picture. The story is the basis of the entertainment the theatre offers. The public has been tempted to the theatre by the name of a popular star. Star exploitation has been solely for advertising purposes.

Much of the popularity of the big stars in motion pictures has resulted from the fact that the producer, to popularize his stars, gave them the best stories the market afforded. The public gradually came to realize that when it saw So-and-So in a picture that it saw, not so much the star as a splendid entertainment. Star names became trademarks. The public judged the picture as the product of the star instead of the actual producer.

But in recent months the name of a widely known author, the name of a popular playwright, the name of a well-known novel or the title of a popular play have become as valuable in "selling" the motion picture to the public as the name of a screen idol.

The best proof of the fact that a picture need not have a big star to be a successful box office attraction is the fact that big successes of the last few months have been made successful by sensational titles. Some of the big money-making pictures have had neither star actor, author or director to commend them. They have gone over big on their title alone. Others of the big productions of the last year which have been successful have merely been commended on their merit as productions.

Big stage successes have come into their own. The keen exhibitor has been quick to capitalize on the successful adaptations for the screen of a stage success.

The name of a famous author or the title of a popular story brings, the exhibitor has found, a new clientele to his theatre. The so-called "fan" is responsible for the stars' success. The name of a brilliant writer will attract to the theatre not only the picture fan but the reading public, and as producers get farther away from exploiting star alone and direct their efforts to meritorious productions written by noted and skilled writers, the motion picture will attain a new dignity and a larger following.

The exhibitor's personal guarantee is becoming, day by day, a more important factor in selling the picture to the public. The keen exhibitor is building his own trade mark. He is educating his patrons to know that they always find good entertainment in his house. He can supply them as consistently and as easily a uniformly good show as the grocer across the corner can supply them with consistently good merchandise.

The exhibitor who is building trade mark value for his own house is buying his pictures on a new basis. He is buying pictures instead of stars.

Arrow Film Corporation Rapidly Expanding

W. E. SHALLENBERGER, President of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces the policy of expansion adopted by the company in view of the unusual activity in the State Rights market.

The Company has increased the personnel of its staff by the addition of several members and will shortly remove its offices from the Times Building to the Candler Building, 220 West 42nd street.

Mr. Shallenberger has added to his staff P. B. Dana, who has for the past year or more been with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a Publicity Manager for the Middle West, and who has had considerable experience in the sales as well as the advertising and publicity departments.

Mr. Dana will have complete charge of the publicity advertising and sales promotion departments for the Arrow Film Corporation, with the title of Director of Advertising and Publicity.

Besides his experience with the Paramount forces Mr. Dana has had selling experience with the Universal Film Company in their New York office, and previous to that an experience covering some eighteen years in the advertising agency business. He has handled the national advertising for such concerns as the old Mutual Film Company some few years ago, and many other large concerns, it is said.

In addition to P. B. Dana, Prest. Shallenberger announces that he has an able and competent assistant in the person of W. Ray Johnston, Assistant Treasurer of the Arrow Film Corporation. Mr. Johnston has been associated with Shallenberger for a number of years.

Edwarde Writes Score for "Virtuous Men"

A surprise was sprung this week by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin in the announcement that Carl Edwarde, leader of the Strand Symphony orchestra, has been secured to compose the musical setting for "Virtuous Men." Edwarde is one of the best known musicians in the United States. For the past two years he has been a notable figure as conductor of the famous Symphony orchestra of the Strand Theatre. He has been specially engaged to compose an original musical setting for the presentation of "Virtuous Men," to be held at the Fulton Theatre on Sunday evening, April 6, In collaboration with Ralph Ince, who directed the picture, Edwarde will carry out many unique ideas in the music. A Symphony orchestra, composed of twenty pieces, has been engaged by Mr. Edwarde for the occasion. In addition to playing for the picture, these artists will render a specially selected overture prior to the presentation.

Macauley Picture Shown to Peace League

"Whom the Gods Would Destroy," the Macauley feature, recently secured by First National, and announced for release April 15, is to be shown privately April 10 to the executive board of the organization known as the League to Enforce Peace, of which William Howard Taft, Hamilton Holt, Dr. Van Dyke, Herbert Houston and other noted sponsors of the League of Nations are the heads.

A special print was rushed through the Rothacker laboratories and delegates of the league are coming to New York from all parts of the country.

The showing was arranged at the request of the New York manager of the organization, Dr. Short, who appreciates the formidability of the film as a support winner for Woodrow Wilson's ideal, and it is with the intention of coupling the picture and the league's work, that the manifestation is to occur.

Bach Joins Famous Players-Lasky

W. A. Bach formerly sales manager for the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, has been appointed manager of the booking department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and assumed his new duties at the home office last week.

Mr. Bach comes to his new position well equipped in experience. Previous to joining Hodkinson he was special representative for Universal, his work taking him to all the exchanges of the company in the United States and Canada. In January, 1918, he went to Hodkinson as assistant sales manager and succeeded to the position of sales manager early this year.

Monroe Salisbury

Show every Universal Special Attraction in its order of release—for this is what you'll get:

Nationally popular stars—but not all men and not all women. That's your first variation from "sameness."

Each of the men will differ in type of acting—and each of the women. This will give you a second variation from "sameness."

The third variation from "sameness" in Universal Special Attractions is the fact that the Stories, while all alike in quality, are, and will always be, widely different in type. Priscilla Dean will come to you in pictures like "The Wildcat of Paris"—"The Wicked Darling" and "A Silk-Lined Burglar"—dramas packed with quick action, intensity, vigor and thrill.

Monroe Salisbury, on the other hand, will play highly emotional conceptions, such as "The Light of Victory."

Mary MacLaren appears to best advantage in straight heart-appeal—look for her in many another splendid success like "The Amazing Wife."

And Harry Carey—jovial, whimsical, human Harry Carey—we don't have to tell you what his plays will be like—they'll be just, pure and unadulterated "Carey."

Side-step "sameness". You can do it by consistently showing.—

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTIONS

Universal Starts a Bluebird Campaign

HAVING selected a large series of Bluebird productions which have proven their merit many times, obtained new prints on many subjects that were not in good condition and new advertising accessories to aid in boosting business on the subjects, all Universal exchanges started on April 1 what is declared to be the largest and most aggressive booking campaign ever launched by a distributing organization.

Preceding the campaign exhibitors received Universal's announcement regarding a new booking campaign on Bluebird productions, and it was pointed out to exhibitors that in this campaign the number of pictures booked automatically established the average price per production. The announcement also brought out the idea that exhibitors who had not previously booked the releases comprising the series were now in a position to obtain pictures with proven quality at special prices, and that the showmen could profit greatly by the knowledge of how other exhibitors had exploited the film plays.

Merit Is What Counts

The announcement calls attention to the fact that the public cares little about the age of a film story. If it is interesting and pleasing the release date matters little or not at all. In compiling the lists of Bluebirds to comprise the special series, Universal took every Bluebird photoplay into consideration and selected a certain number of photoplays which reviews, box office statements and letters from all over the country proved to be the best of the entire Bluebird output. Sixty-seven pictures comprise the series. Monroe Salisbury in eleven, Carmel Myers in thirteen, and Franklyn Farnum in eight productions head the list. Edith Roberts in four productions, Fritzie Brunette in two, Violet Mersereau in two, Ruth Clifford in five, Priscilla Dean in three, Dorothy Phillips in two, Ella Hall in three, Herbert Rawlinson in three, Rupert Julian in two, and Mae Murray in two and Frank Keenan, Francis Ford, Lois Weber, Marie Walcamp, Juanita Hansen and Zoe Rae with one picture each comprise the series. The exhibitor can book the entire series, half, or quarter of it, or as many as he desires, the price per picture being governed entirely by the number of productions booked at one time.

Universal points out that in taking advantage of this special offer exhibitors are getting productions featuring stars whose names alone assure packed houses, in pictures that have brought them the great popularity they enjoy today. Many of the pictures comprising the special Bluebird series have been released during the past six months, and the remainder have been selected from the best of previous successes and new prints and advertising prepared for exhibitors that they might get the best of service.

Dorothy Phillips One

Dorothy Phillips, who has risen to the ranks of America's dozen favorite stars by her work in "The Heart of Humanity," "The Talk of the Town" and "A Soul for Sale" is one of the series stars. Her two productions, "The Grand Passion" and "Broadway Love," are among the very best pictures this notable star has appeared in. Rupert Julian, who won fame in "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and who is soon to be seen in "The Fire Flingers," is featured in "The Mysterious Mr. Tiller" and "Mother o' Mine," two exceptional Bluebird productions. Lois Weber, who has directed Mildred Harris in all of her Jewel productions, and who is now directing Anita Stewart, is featured in a Bluebird, "Scandal Mongers," which proved a cinema sensation.

THE RED GLOVE
DOUGLAS GRANT

"The Red Glove" was picturized by Universal, and is also popular in book form

Monroe Salisbury, who has become one of the most popular male stars of the screen in "That Devil Bateese," "The Savage" and "Hands Down," three pictures that proved of exceptional box office value during the past year, in addition to eight other of his Bluebird productions, in the series. Priscilla Dean's three Bluebird productions, "She Hired a Husband," "The Brazen Beauty" and "Which Woman?" and which have done much to bring the star her present great popularity, are included in the special series offer. Herbert Rawlinson's three Bluebirds show him at his best. Carmel Myers' attractions from "The Lash of Power" to "The Little White Savage" are included in the offer, and two of Violet Mersereau's best screen offerings, "Together" and "Morgan's Raiders," are part of the series. Louise Lovely's best screen vehicle, "A Rich Man's Darling," and Frank Keenan's great Western drama, "The Long Chance," are also included in the special series offer.

Universal publicity and service men, in every exchange, have been supplied with special material to help exhibitors booking the Bluebird series boost business on the productions.

Exhibitors Mutual Signs State Lake Theatre

The Chicago exchange of Exhibitors' Mutual has just closed the biggest deal of the year by signing up the new State-Lake theatre, controlled by the Orpheum Circuit, for the remainder of 1919. The State-Lake, which seats nearly 3,000 persons, opened two weeks ago, and as its motion picture feature staged "What Every Woman Wants," the Jesse D. Hampton five-reel sensation featuring Grace Darmond. The following week, "The Turn in the Road," produced by the Brentwood Film Corporation and purchased by Robertson Cole for release through Exhibitors' Mutual, was the leading photoplay attraction at the State-Lake. Among the other Exhibitors' Mutual stars who will find their way into this new amusement palace by way of the screen are Billie Rhodes, Bessie Barriscale, Sessue Hayakawa, Henry B. Walthall, H. B. Warner, William Desmond and Alma Rubens.

Apache Den in Goldwyn Picture

An Apache den is the scene of many thrilling incidents in Geraldine Farrar's newest Goldwyn picture, "The Stronger Vow," set for release April 27. Once again Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn's art director, won the commendation of the diva for the realistic setting, the duplication of the Parisian outlaws' meeting place equalling his splendid achievement in the erection of a counterfeit Monte Carlo for Miss Farrar's first Goldwyn production, "The Turn of the Wheel."

Louise Glaum Feature to Inter-Ocean Company

Inter-Ocean Film Company has just bought the foreign rights of "The Goddess of Lost Lake," a Brunton-made production in which Louise Glaum is starred.

The transaction was handled through Federal Photoplays, Inc., which is supervising the marketing of the picture.

"The Goddess of Lost Lake" is being released in the United States through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Saenger Books Rolfe Film

Criterion Film Service, of Atlanta and New Orleans, distributors of the Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery," produced by B. A. Rolfe for Octagon Films, Inc., announces that contracts have been closed for the showing of the serial in the houses of the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans. In all likelihood the Saenger Company will play "The Master Mystery" in twenty to twenty-five of their theatres.

Hodkinson Makes a Statement

Declares That His Concern is Now Ready to Take Leadership in the Motion Picture Industry

RECENT announcements that the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has been able to put into operation its long prepared-for policy of handling above-average-pictures only, to the exclusion of all else, and that the Hodkinson organization has inaugurated this policy with the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., and the Augustus Thomas—Harry Raver "Four Star" Productions, as two of the four big new lines to be handled from now on, brought forth a more comprehensive statement from Mr. Hodkinson this week.

"For some months now," said Mr. Hodkinson, "we have been laying the foundation for something big, and laying that foundation slowly and soundly. During the past fifteen months we have been forced upon occasion to take on product with which we were not entirely satisfied, but we have done it in the knowledge that it was but a stop-gap and that the product we were going to be able to offer the exhibitor would make up a hundredfold for any indifferent product that we might have been forced to carry.

"Little by little during these months we have been laying our courses, taking the best there was in the open market, watching it, weighing it, and eliminating every line of product that could not measure up to the standards we set.

"Today we are ready to take the leadership of the motion picture industry. We have four lines of product which will run second to none in the United States. Two of these lines will, in my opinion, establish themselves as the best, the biggest the most worth while pictures of the year 1919.

"What we have done is just this: By developing a selective machinery, very much like the exhibitor's own but upon a far larger scale, we have been able to select and eliminate. That we have really eliminated is shown by the fact that out of all our past year's product we have kept but one line—the one line that has distinctly measured up to the better-picture standard. This line is J. Warren Kerrigan, under the presentation of Jesse D. Hampton. Kerrigan has really measured up in a big way as a drawing star and a money maker for the exhibitor.

"Of our brand new product the Augustus Thomas—Harry Raver Four Star pictures, directed by George Irving and Featuring Leah Baird, are decidedly of the above-average class. The first of these pictures, a splendid screen presentation of Augustus Thomas' famous play, "As a Man Thinks," is a strong production.

"Then we have Zane Grey—the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., which is the author's own company. I can't say too much for this series and what it promises. The first picture, a remarkable production of Zane Grey's nationally popular novel, "Desert Gold," is being produced on a scale which has been equalled in cost and care not more than half a dozen times in the history of motion pictures."

"Bolshevism On Trial" In Poster Campaign

THOMAS CUSACK COMPANY is plastering twenty-four sheets over New York City and Brooklyn in a bill posting campaign inaugurated by Select Pictures to exploit "Bolshevism On Trial."

For the stand advertising this subject Select has chosen to depict one of the most dramatic moments in the entire six reels of "Bolshevism on Trial." It is the scene where Wolff, the Bolshevistic leader, inflamed by long suppressed desires has seized upon Barbara, whose youthful beauty and idealistic enthusiasm he has used as a bait to lure capital into his scheme.

The sketch on the poster shows the scene in Wolff's bed-room, with Wolff struggling with Barbara in his arms, at the moment when young Norman succeeds in breaking through barred doors in order to effect a rescue.

Another poster from which Select expects to get excellent results is a one-sheet which has employed the head and grasping clawed hand which have been used in Select's red and black trade paper insert advertising.

There is a six-sheet which shows the Bolshevistic leader plotting with a number of women who are dressed mostly in full tights, and the paper bears the descriptive caption, "The women readily consent to become a lure for Bolshevism."

A three-sheet contains a very thrilling fight scene, and the other three-sheet makes use of an Anti-Bolshevism cartoon recently published in the New York Herald, through courtesy of which daily the design is employed.

Fielder Moves Up

E. C. Fielder, Hodkinson representative, has again taken on more territory. Originally in charge of the Cleveland territory, he was recently transferred to the Chicago office to handle both districts. Now he will cover Indianapolis as well. D. W. Phillips, formerly general film branch manager, will assist Mr. Fielder in Cleveland, and E. S. Rowley, a Chicago film man of long experience, will assist in Chicago. An assistant for Indianapolis will be appointed soon. Hodkinson service is distributed through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Rialto Books It!

Vitagraph's first Larry Semon Comedy, "Well I'll Be ———!" gets its initial Broadway showing at the Rialto Theatre in New York during the week of April 6th.

"Well I'll Be ———!" is a burlesque western thriller and Larry Semon plays the part of the timid sheriff of Beer Bottle Bend. Beer Bottle Bend is one of those places in which nobody is afraid of a sheriff and Larry's escapades in trying to assert his authority furnish two reels of uproarious comedy.

Sells New Series for Great Britain

It was announced this week that the new series of 52 Outing-Chester pictures, produced by C. L. Chester in co-operation with Outing Magazine, have been sold to the M. P. Sales Agency, Ltd., of London, for Great Britain through the agency of Mr. B. Nichols. Mr. Nichols, who controls the Sales Agency and is one of the best known film men in London, arrived in New York a short time ago and gives an interesting account of the demand of English film audiences as compared with our own.

"The English people go to the moving pictures to be entertained," said Mr. Nichols, "and they fight shy of anything which sounds ponderous and instructive—"High-brow" you call it in this country. For the reason, the heavy educational film is not popular among our film exhibitors.

"But the sort of thing that Mr. Chester has been producing in the last Outing-Chester series and in this new one of 52 pictures is a very different matter."

Peggy Shanor Featured in "Links of Destiny"

After seeing her work in half a dozen recent film attractions it is said that Director Sydney Golden of the Gold Coin Film Company selected Peggy Shanor to be featured in "Links of Destiny," a six-reel Gold Coin picture now being produced.

It is stated that Miss Shanor has been making rapid strides during the past year and possesses the greatest of gifts, a screen personality.

"Reclaimed" Has "Aids"

What is announced as a very attractive press book has just been issued on "Reclaimed."

It is said to be brim full of advertising suggestions, phrases, catch lines and promotion ideas. This is expected to be of great help to the exhibitor in putting the big production over.

Phillips Contract Again Renewed

Dorothy Phillips, Universal star

Carl Laemmle Announces That Dorothy Phillips Will Continue as Universal Star for Two More Years

DOROTHY PHILLIPS signed a contract with Universal that will terminate in February, 1921, and in announcing the signing of the contract by the star Mr. Laemmle has stated that no effort or expense is to be spared in giving Miss Phillips the very best stories and productions possible to obtain, for her attractions.

Miss Phillips is now at work on a new production written and directed by her husband, Allen Holubar, and although no announcement to the effect has been made, it is believed a majority of Miss Phillips' future vehicles will be produced by the creator of "The Heart of Humanity."

She first took up motion picture work with Essanay several years ago. After a few months at the Chicago studios and on the coast Miss Phillips joined the Universal ranks. "If My Country Should Call," "The Vengeance of the West," "The Clock," "Triumph," "Bondage," "Fires of Rebellion," and other Bluebird pictures, starred Miss Phillips.

When Jewel productions were originated Miss Phillips was featured in "Pay Me," one of the very first releases. "The Grand Passion" and "Broadway Love," two exceptional Bluebird attractions, followed, and then Miss Phillips became a Special Attractions star.

"The Mortgaged Wife," and "The Talk of the Town" proved exceptional Phillips pictures and "A Soul For Sale," a Jewel production, also added greatly to Miss Phillips' laurels.

In December last when "The Heart of Humanity" was given its premier, many New York critics are said to have acclaimed Miss Phillips as one of the greatest stars of the film world. Later when the big Holubar super-drama was shown in other large cities of the country, numerous other critics are declared to have repeated the statements of the New York reviewers and lavished praise upon Miss Phillips' great work in the production.

As a result of the great success of "The Heart of Humanity" and the popularity attained by its star, future Phillips productions are said to be eagerly awaited by theatremen and public. Miss Phillips recently completed "Destiny" under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon, but no definite release date has been set for the production.

United Shows Middle West Growth

United Pictures Theatres, Inc., this week called attention in an announcement to its steady growth in the Middle West territory, and cites a published statement in a Minneapolis paper as part of the proof. The announcement said: "Practically every day in the week Manager O'Toole of the Minneapolis United office, adds several new franchise holders to the United and interest in the project has exceeded even the fondest hopes of officials of that company.

"The new activities can be ascribed in a large measure to the quality of productions which the United has so far delivered to its franchise holders and to the prospects which that company has for the future.

"For the first four days of the past week, Mr. O'Toole added the names of several prominent exhibitors to the United roster. Among them are: Mr. Wingreene, Bismarck theatre, Bismarck, N. D.; Fred Boll, Majestic theatre, Stillwater; C. E. Waughop, Scenic theatre, Detroit, Mich.; New Arion theatre, Minneapolis; Frank Nemic, Lyric theatre, Staples, Minn.; C. E. Hansing, Nokomis theatre, Minneapolis."

"Your Wife and Mine" Has Trade Showing

At Wurlitzer Hall, New York City, it is reported that several hundred representative film people, including producers, state rights buyers, exchangemen and exhibitors, witnessed the trade showing of "Your Wife and Mine," by Tyrad Pictures, Inc.

It is described as one of the best of the European-made photoplays.

"It was highly gratifying to me to see that the picture had made a hit," said Jacques Tyrol, secretary-treasurer and director-general of Tyrad Pictures, Inc. "While my partner, Mr. Mathias Radin, and I were very enthusiastic about it we wanted to get the unbiased, frank opinion of time-tried film men. And now we feel more confident than ever that in 'Your Wife and Mine' we have a veritable gold mine."

Sawyer and Lubin Cite Dramatic Moments

IN proof of their assertion that "Virtuous Men" is one of the biggest melodramas of the screen, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin this week pointed out one or two of the many exceedingly dramatic moments which abound throughout the play. Particular stress is laid on the melodramatic situations in which E. K. Lincoln, Clara Joel and Robert W. Cummings figure.

Arthur H. Sawyer, speaking of the picture said: "In one of these scenes Lincoln, in the role of Bob Stokes, is lured on a pretext to the apartment of Marcia Fontaine, interpreted by Clara Joel. Here he finds himself trapped through the cunning of Brummon, acted by Cummings. Facing death, with his back against the wall, Lincoln is presented with the alternative of fighting his way through against odds. This situation is tense in its melodramatic qualities, finishing with a dramatic climax entirely unlooked for. In another scene of high tension, Lincoln holds at bay an enraged mob of several thousand workers. Forceful in action, and charged with dramatic possibilities, these are but two of the melodramatic situations whch occur in "Virtuous Men."

Director Ralph Ince succeeded in having E. K. Lincoln and his supporting cast enact these scenes as to make them entirely natural and realistic, avoiding at all times the staginess which generally is found in melodramas of the screen. Ince has kept all of these situations logical in their enactment, infusing that peculiar something which differentiates the real from the make believe.

Barriscale Believes in Productions from Books

BESSIE BARRISCALE, starring in B. B. Features, released through Exhibitors Mutual, is rated as a firm believer that the best motion pictures are made from book stories. As an example of her faith in this theory, Miss Barriscale has announced the purchase of the screen rights to Jean Judson's novel, "Beckoning Roads."

Miss Barriscale is now completing work on "Josselyn's Wife," another novel written by Kathleen Norris, and in which the Exhibitors Mutual favorite will be seen to splendid advantage.

"Josselyn's Wife" is to be released following "Hearts Asleep," Miss Barriscale's present starring vehicle.

In "Hearts Asleep," the popular actress is seen first as a bit of the world's driftwood, a little scrub lady, who although brought up in a den of thieves has ever resisted the temptation to stray from the path of righteousness. She is befriended by a wealthy man, who adopts her in order to prove his contention that character is made, not born in humans.

After enduring many hardships and passing through the most pleasant years of her young life, the girl finally awakes to the fact that she loves the man, and that he loves her, an incident from which the production obtains its title.

From a popular viewpoint, "Hearts Asleep" is one of Miss Barriscale's best offerings. Her's is a sympathetic part throughout, full of emotion and allowing of numerous opportunities for real acting all through the production.

Prepares for Big Spring Drive

Famous Players-Lasky Gets Universal Plant at Fort Lee—Miss Calvert to Make Picture There

ARRANGEMENTS for a Spring drive on the part of the producing forces of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are now well under way, it was announced last week by Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President in charge of Production. To accommodate the increased activities of the Famous Players-Lasky organization, this company has taken over the Universal studio at Fort Lee, New Jersey, where the productio nof Paramount and Artcraft pictures will be commenced in April.

Catherine Calvert, whose work in "Fires of Faith," the Salvation Army Special produced by Famous Players-Lasky has created enthusiasm among those who have alrady viewed the film, has been engaged to star in a production which will be the first to be screened at the Fort Lee studio. This photoplay will be an adaptation of Elinor Glyn's novel, "The Career of Katherine Bush," which incidentally is the first subject acquired from the Hearst organization since its recent affiliation with Famous Players-Lasky.

Particular care will be given to the selection of the cast for "The Career of Katherine Bush," and inasmuch as the production of the film will not be started before the middle of April, more than sufficient time is allowed for this and other preliminary details in connection with the staging of the picture.

R. William Neill, director of many Paramount-Ince successes, has been engaged to produce "The Career of Katherine Bush." Mr. Neill's work is well known not only in the trade, but among the motion picture public as well. Some of the Ince films he directed for Paramount release are the Dorothy Dalton pictures, "Viva La France!" "Greene Eyes," "The Triple Cross," "The Mating of Marcella," "Tyrant Fear," and "Love Me."

In California all the Famous Players-Lasky studios are now working to capacity and within the next month, this organization will witness its greatest producing activities since its inception. Iu the East, aside from the Fort Lee and Fifty-sixth Street, New York, Studios, work on the plans for the Long Island plant is now being rushed so that this studio will be completed at the earliest possible date.

Hodes Succeeds Cohn on Screen Magazine

THE Universal New Screen Magazine has a new editor. Following the announcement that Jack Cohn, editor of the Magazine since its creation, had resigned, Universal announced the appointment of Hal Hodes to the position. Mr. Hodes has been assistant general manager of Universal exchanges for the past four months and in taking over the editing of the Screen Magazine he will also add to his duties the work of planning the exploitation of the regular weekly release of this single reeler.

Mr. Hodes assumes his new duties at once. Mr. Cohn has not announced his future plans.

The new editor of the Screen Magazine first entered the film field in 1904 with Vitagraph. After two years with this firm he resigned to join the navy, cruising around the world with the fleet under command of Admiral Robley D. Evans. Returning from four years in the navy, Mr. Hodes joined the reportorial staff of the Newark Evening News and continued as a writer on this daily for two years. Three years, as publicity and advertising man with the Kalem Co., followed and then Mr. Hodes became a sales promotional man with Universal. In this position Mr. Hodes so clearly demonstrated the efficiency of seeking business through the mail that he won promotion to the sales department of Jewel Productions, Inc., when these super-films were first released by Universal. During the first year Jewel Productions were offered, Mr. Hodes originated so many sales and exploitation ideas for the productions that when H. B. Berman was appointed general manager of Universal exchanges he chose Mr. Hodes as his lieutenant.

New Ideas Claimed In Titles of Melodrama

IN keeping with the importance of "Virtuous Men" as a production of big calibre, special care has been taken to embellish the story with sub-titles of an unusual nature. Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin responsible for the picture have endeavored to replace the usual methods of titling, both as regards illustrations and wording, with original ideas of their own. An unusual main title, introducing Ralph Ince, director of the production, E. K. Lincoln, the star, and certain members of the supporting cast, has been worked out by a staff of artists under the supervision of Ernest Stern. These illustrations have been reproduced from original crayon drawings. Throughout the picture, the matter of illustrative titles has received careful consideration, and only introduced where they interpret a thought or to serve the purposes of decoration. They have all been executed by poster and magazine artists. All of the pictorial back grounds have been skillfully merged with the continuity of the story, so as to fit smoothly throughout in their relation to the various scenes.

The matter of wording the sub titles was one of the most important considerations in connection with the production. They are the work of Bert Ennis and Arthur H. Sawyer, and have been written in a style calculated to arouse and hold the interest of the spectator. The various elements of drama which compose the story of "Virtuous Men" have been lightened by the use of cleverly written comedy titles written in colloquial style. A style of hand-lettering, heretofore unused in screen productions, will be introduced in screen productions, will be introduced in the titling of "Virtuous Men." It is said the lettering is artistic in the extreme and also legible to spectators, irrespective of distance from the screen.

John Tyrone Kelly Leaves Bureau of Pictures

After being in personal charge of the production of twenty-eight propaganda reels of the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures, John Tyrone Kelly announces that he has resigned and that on April 15 he will announce the opening of the Propaganda Film Company at 1476 Broadway.

Mr. Kelly is credited with organizing the Bureau of Pictures for the Red Cross in August, 1918, and he worked with the Director of the Bureau, W. E. Wadell, ever since that time.

Sixteen of these pictures were sent over the entire U. B. O. circuit of theatres and the last one, "Homeward Bound," was released two weeks ago. J. T. Kelly is said to have produced the industrial propaganda pictures for the Panama-Pacific Exposition also, and his past experience is expected to be of considerable aid to him in his new venture.

Gets Space on Atlanta Front Page

"For the first time in the history of Atlanta," writes Independent Sales Corporations Southern sales manager, "motion pictures occupied space on the front pages of the Atlanta dailies when Lieut. Bert Hall, American Ace and star of Independent Sales Corporation's special release, 'A Romance of the Air,' made personal appearances at the Auditorium, Atlanta, in connection with the run of the picture. A two-column cut of Lieut. Hall with a two-column 'write-up' appeared on the front page of the Atlanta Georgian, announcing Lieut. Hall's coming."

Cupid Disregards Flood

A sudden rain portrayed during one scene of the Goldwyn picture, "A Man and His Money," is said to provide one of the most amusing incidents in the production.

Tom Moore and Seena Owen, in their respective lover and sweetheart roles, are shown in each other's arms when the flood of rain comes.

It is stated that heedless of Noah's well known warning to come in out of the rain, they continue the embrace during the downpour, undisturbed. This scene is calculated to furnish amusing entertainment to the most blase audiences.

Booked at Academy

It has been announced that Emmett Dalton's "Beyond the Law" was scheduled last week to begin a run of one week on April 6 at the Academy of Music in New York.

Kentucky and Tennessee, it is announced, have been sold to First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Shows How to Use Press Material

A striking illustration of how press book material issued by film producers can be used to good advantage was given recently in "The Saengerette," the twenty-page program issued by the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans for its Strand, Liberty and Globe theatres.

The Saengerette of March 12 featured "Why I Would Not Marry," the sensational morality play produced by Fox Film Corporation. A picture of a young man and girl embracing within a huge interrogation point constituted the cover design, the question mark being made significant by the billing, "Why I Would Not Marry," printed directly beneath it in red ink.

"Why I Would Not Marry" was booked for the Liberty theatre for four days beginning March 22, and interesting data regarding the play and the problems propounded in its story was given in a four-page insert printed on pink paper.

Three States Get Rights on "Scarlet Trail"

G. and L. features of New York City, producers of "The Scarlet Trail," which just finished a lengthy run at Shubert's Thirty-ninth Street theatre, announces that Standard Film Service has secured the distributing rights of the feature for the states of Ohio, Michigan and Kentucky.

"The Scarlet Trail" is described as a propaganda picture depicting the evil of sexual indiscretions. The screen version is said to have been inspired by Charles Larned Robinson's document, "Don't Take a Chance," which had been distributed to the army and navy boys as a morality document by the Y. M. C. A. and other welfare organizations.

Washington Likes "Made in America" Film

Great interest is being shown by patrons of Loew's Palace Theatre in Washington, D. C., in "Made in America," the Ashley Miller patriotic series distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through the Pathe exchanges. Many people who missed the opening episodes have been so interested in the making of the American soldier, as depicted in the series, that they have inquired where they could see the first reels. Exhibitors through the country booking the film, which was produced with the cooperation of the Government, have expressed similar satisfaction.

Lillian Hall with Johnny Dooley

Lillian Hall, who recently completed an engagement opposite Taylor Holmes in a screen version of "Taxi," started work this week at the Biograph studio as leading woman for Johnnie Dooley, of "Listen Lester," who has formed his own producing company and will make a series of twelve comedies in two reels each. Bide Dudley is writing the scenario, Jack Schultz is directing.

Selznick Will Produce In the East

Olive Thomas and Entire Producing Staff Leave West Coast to Make Two Productions Around New York

THE next two Olive Thomas pictures will be made in the East, according to Myron Selznick, president and general manager of Selznick Pictures Corporation, who left Los Angeles with the entire producing staff and star.

It is hinted that this new move has to do with important developments in the company, of which no announcement is made. Two Olive Thomas pictures have been completed by Director Charles Giblyn, in Los Angeles.

The first of these is "Upstairs and Down," made from the play by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. The name of the second has not been stated. An extensive system of exploitation has been worked out for these and the succeeding productions starring Miss Thomas, of which there will be eight yearly.

It is understoood that the move to New York has nothing to do with producing facilities, but is in connection with new developments in the company's affairs. There are no officers of the company now in the east, and the following statement was the only information issued by the New York office:

"Myron Selznick is not merely president of the Selznick Pictures Corporation, but also, having had valuable experience in studio management, keeps his eye on all details of production as well. Certain important future developments are coming up for consideration, demanding his personal attention, and he is coming east for this reason.

"Believing it to be for the best interests of the company to keep the administration concentrated, he is bringing his entire staff with him, and has informed us that the next two Olive Thomas pictures will be made here."

Not long ago Myron Selznick was joined in Los Angeles by his brothers, David and Howard, and Mrs. Selznick also went to the coast for a visit. They will all return together, arriving in New York, Sunday, April 13, accompanied by Miss Thomas and Director Giblyn. Production work will begin shortly thereafter, it is said.

Hammons Ships Prints to Various Exchanges

VICE-PRESIDENT E. W. HAMMONS, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, makes the announcement that new prints of the current releases are now being shipped regularly to the various educational exchanges from the laboratory, and that exhibitors will find the newest subjects ready for immediate bookings. Pressure of work at the laboratory has delayed shipments to a certain extent in the past few weeks, but with this week finally caught up, prints are going forward in good time.

Following the usual plan, shipments to exchanges are made approximately four weeks following the original showing on Broadway, this interval of time being necessary in which to complete the laboratory processes, the only exception to this rule being the International cartoons, which are made up in advance, and which are shipped immediately following the New York showing. "Educational" releases, including the Robert C. Bruce Scenics, the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement, the "International" cartoons, the George D. Wright Mexican series, and the Ditmars' "Living Book of Nature" have a regular first-run showing on Broadway, and all current releases are in use in the Rialto and Rivoli theatres.

Prints of the newest Robert C. Bruce scenic, "The Little High Horse," have been shipped to Educational exchanges in Cleveland ,Indianapolis, Boston, Baltimore, St. Louis Minneapolis, Detroit and San Francisco, and together with "The Restless Three" and "The River Grey and the River Green" are now booking. The offices at Indianapolis and Boston have also received in the past week ,their first copies of "The Quest of the Big 'Un," which is the original film fish story, and the St. Louis and Indianapolis branches have available new prints of "Glacier National Park" for first-run in their respective territories. All of these subjects are of the quality that dominate the program, and the latter two are special single-reel attractions that have been particularly successful in the territory in which they have been released according to exhibitor reports.

Kennedy Personified in Herbert Rawlinson

THE success with which the early bookings of "The Carter Case," is being met is said to be an indication of the popularity of Herbert Rawlinson who is creating America's screen detective characterization of the role of Craig Kennedy in that production which was written by Arthur B. Reeve and John Grey, and which is being produced by the Oliver Films, Inc. His complete mastery of the difficult role has advanced him highly in the profession and is increasing his great following among picture fans. He is an actor who through steady application of his remarkable talents has legitimately earned the right to stardom.

Just as his rise previously on the speaking stage was steady and pronounced, so has he risen in his career in motion pictures, until each successive appearance on the screen has enlarged his opportunities and his results have been better and more widely recognized. In itself it is no small honor to be cast to create and live on the screen a character that has become as widely known as Craig Kennedy—a character that has gone into possibly every American home in magazine form, and hundreds of thousands of them in book form, that has received more incidental advertising than perhaps any other American character of fiction.

"The Red Lantern" Wins Rowland

President of Metro Makes Special Trip to West Coast and Views Next Nazimova Super-feature

IMMEDIATELY after his arrival in Hollywood, Cal., whither he had made a special trip from New York, Richard A. Rowland, who, together with Maxwell Karger, presents the Nazimova de luxe screen dramas, viewed a studio showing of the distinguished star's newest super-feature, "The Red Lantern."

The completed print, as cut and assembled under the personal supervision of Mr. Karger, is in seven parts, exactly as it will be released this month.

W. E. Atkinson, Metro business manager, making his swing around the circuit of Metro exchanges, arrived in Los Angeles one day in the wake of Mr. Rowland. The two Metro executives got in touch, and as a result the special showing of "The Red Lantern," for which Mr. Rowland had traveled 3,000 miles across the continent, was arranged for.

Present besides Messrs. Rowland and Atkinson at the projection of "The Red Lantern" were Maxwell Karger, director general at the new Metro studios in Hollywood; Joseph W. Engel, treasurer of Metro Pictures Corporation; Nazimova herself, who is now making all her pictures on the west coast; Herbert Blache, at present directing the Russian artiste in "The Brat"; Charles Bryant, Nazimova's leading man and collaborator with her in the adaptation of "The Brat," and several Metro directors, among them Edith Carewe, George D. Baker, Charles Swickard and Henry Otto.

Alla Nazimova, talented star of "The Red Lantern"

After viewing the special showing, however, Mr. Rowland declared that Mr. his praise of Nazimova's latest screen Karger had been, if anything, too faint in production.

"Nazimova has fairly surpassed herself in 'The Red Lantern,'" said Mr. Rowland after having seen the super feature. "That great and constantly growing army of motion picture goers which already has acclaimed Nazimova as the reigning queen of the silent drama because of her work in 'Revelation,' in 'Eye for Eye' and 'Out of the Fog,' will find to their delight that she has attained new histrionic heights in her impersonation of Mahlee, the Eurasian girl in 'The Red Lantern.'

Easter Sunday Dates for "Unpardonable Sin"

BOTH Chicago and Los Angeles will usher in Easter Sunday by premieres in their respective cities of "The Unpardonable Sin."

This is the Harry Garson feature directed in person by Marshall Neilan and starring Blanche Sweet, which is said to have made film history by holding its national premiere in Detroit instead of New York City.

Practically all of the territory is sold now for the entire world. It is announced that the few remaining territories available in the United States will be disposed of to the applicants selected from the many offers said to have been received.

Jones, Linick and Shaefer bought the franchise for Illinois and immediately announced that "The Unpardonable Sin" would open in Chicago Easter Sunday, at their Randolph theatre for a long run at advanced prices.

The Kinema theatre at Los Angeles will get the first run in Los Angeles by starting the Garson feature Easter Sunday for an unlimited engagement at a dollar-and-a-half top.

Lawrence Weber and Bobby North, who not only secured the entire world's rights but also the New York state rights will open in Buffalo with "The Unpardonable Sin" on Easter Sunday. This will be a road show to tour all the up-state cities pending the securing of an available theatre in the metropolis.

The show will carry a twenty-piece symphony orchestra with special operators, and be advertised and exploited in a big way. The California theatre in San Francisco opened with the production April 6 at increased admission prices.

Jensen and Von Heiberg have purchased the Northwest rights for "The Unpardonable Sin."

Pittsburgh, Washington, Indianapolis, and a score of the principal cities throughout the country will open runs on the production within the next thirty days, it is said. According to all reports the feature is creating a furore wherever presented.

Cairo in Film Feature

Scenes in Cairo, the famous Egyptian city, said to be most striking, are to be shown in "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," which Hugh Ford is producing at the Lasky studios at Hollywood as a Famous Players-Lasky big special production.

Thompson Expert Engineer and Chemist

"Fred B. Thompson," said an announcement from Chicago this week, "who perfected the new Spoor-Thompson automatic processing machine for the development and printing of films, at the instigation of George K. Spoor, president of Essanay, is not only an inventor, but an expert engineer and chemist. Knowledge of both were necessary in working out this process, as the work involved not only the construction of the machines, which are forty feet in length and weigh fifteen tons each, but a thorough knowledge of the action of chemicals on films.

"Mr. Thompson is well known as an expert in the technical end of the film industry, having spent some years with the Edison and Pathe companies, before going to Essanay four years ago.

"With the Edison Company he was in charge of the Little Home pictures and later western manager for the talking pictures. He went to Europe with Pathe to develop the technical end of the film work."

Bull's Eye Claims Dazzling Array

In its forthcoming Billy West Comedy, "Flirts," Bulls Eye Film Corporation, of 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, lays claim to having the most dazzling galaxy of stage beauties ever seen in one picture. While the claim may sound extravagant, Bulls Eye explains it this way in an announcement:

"We base our claim on cold, hard, unprejudiced facts. When we began to cast for 'Flirts' we decided to get the most beautiful girls available regardless of what it might cost. Los Angeles and all the rest of southern California are noted for their beautiful women and we sent out a clarion call for the most beautiful. The result was that fully two thousand women and girls showed up at our Hollywood studio one morning. And out of these two thousand we had to choose the prettiest thirty girls. Maybe you think it was a snap job."

Goes to Real Place for Atmosphere

The Alma Rubens company, in producing "Diane of the Green Van," which will be her initial release through Exhibitors Mutual, travelled largely through the country which the author, Leona Dalrymple, wrote about in her story. From Los Angeles the Rubens company journeyed all the way to the Everglades of Florida, and then into the country of the Seminole Indians, who have a small part in the forthcoming feature.

Robertson-Cole announces that many striking scenes have been secured.

The same sense of romance which induced Diane of the story to give up all the comforts of home to journey into the bewitching land of palms and alligators in a green van, literally gripped Miss Rubens and made her live the life of the Sylph-like Diane.

Says Baby Vampire Is Menace

The baby vampire, according to Olive Thomas, the Selznick Pictures star, is a greater menace to the world just now than the Bolsheviki. Many a man who would think nothing of throwing a Bolshevik out of his office, even if it were twenty stories up, would hesitate before he was even impolite to an apparently sweet young thing. And everybody knows what happens to the man who hesitates, says Olive.

"In the late war," Miss Thomas continues, "most of the women spies captured were of the ingenue type with the baby stare and not of the tall tiger skin variety. When a man reaches the age of sixty, as most of the men who were big factors in the war have, he is very susceptible to youth, particularly feminine youth. Many a statesman on both sides undertook to offer protection to some sweet young thing only to find a little later she had the papers, the plans, and everything. Several of the baby vampires during the war actually vamped their jailors into letting them escape."

Aleichem Showing Advanced

Coincident with the announcement last week that a private showing of the first Sholom Aleichem picture, Khavah, direction of Charles E. Davenport, would be given about April 15, big exhibitors and state right buyers interested in the production have prevailed upon the officials of the Zion Films, Inc., for an earlier showing. They declare that the booking possibilities of the picture would be greatly enhanced if it were possible to release the film in time for the Jewish Easter holidays.

In accordance with this suggestion, Director Davenport is rushing work on the assembling and cutting of the picture. Nat Dorfman, a local newspaperman, will edit the film and write the titles.

Shows Burning Legation

The burning of the legations in Pekin during the Boxer uprising of 1900 is reproduced on the screen in the forthcoming Nazimova production, "The Red Lantern," which will be released in April. The Russian star plays a dual role in this adaptation by June Mathis and Albert Capellani of Edith Wherry's novel, "The Red Lantern," in which Nazimova is presented by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger.

Brimmer in Cleveland

W. C. Brimmer, formerly of the sales forces of Independent Sales Corporation, at its Chicago office, has been appointed branch manager of Independent's Cleveland office. Mr. Brimmer is one of the trade's best known salesmen and is especially well known in the Middle West territory through which he has operated for a number of years in a capacity of salesman and exploitation man.

United Engages Heffron to Direct Farnum

WITH the news that J. A. Berst has arranged to gratify the desire expressed by Dustin Farnum to make a new departure in characterization and forsake for the moment the purely Western roles which have been intimately associated with the United star's screen work, comes the announcement that United's president has engaged Thomas Heffron to direct Mr. Farnum's forthcoming screen feature which is named "The Harvest of Shame."

When this changed type of role for Mr. Farnum was agreed upon Mr. Berst immediately set about the task of finding a director whose special qualifications should ensure the high standard of cast, artistry and production determined upon by United for the picturization of the Tom J. Geraghty story, which is described as not exclusively Western but as having much of its locale in the East and which will reveal Dustin Farnum in evening dress, replacing for the nonce his accustomed cowboy accoutrement. Mr. Berst's efforts resulted in the engagement of Mr. Heffron, a choice which is said also to have met with Mr. Farnum's enthusiastic approval.

Mr. Heffron brings to his directorial duties the practical experience of many years of artistic work as an actor and stage director for A. H. Woods, Chas. Frohman, Augustus Thomas, Mrs. Fiske and John Mason, in a lengthy list of Broadway successes on the speaking stage.

Mr. Heffron's screen career has been notably associated with Thanhouser, Selig and Famous Players.

"Checkers" Director Was Formerly in Play

RICHARD STANTON, by directing "Checkers," the racing play which he is making into a special feature film for William Fox, has completed a curious cycle of circumstances which had its beginning eighteen years ago, when he first saw a stage performance of the late Henry Blossom's success.

At that time Stanton was an actor playing small parts in Western stock companies. As soon as he saw "Checkers" he, like other actors of that time, had a strong desire to play the title role. One day his chance came when he was playing with a stock company in Des Moines. The piece was put on for a week's run, and it proved such a success that it was held over for three weeks. Stanton established himself then as an actor, and he played the role in a number of stock companies then touring the Middle West.

One of the ambitions of Mr. Blossom, the play's author, was to see it used as a motion picture; and before his death he spent a large part of his time at the Fox studios watching Mr. Stanton direct the picture. Up to the day he took to his bed with his last illness he displayed a keen interest in the work.

Stanton and Blossom often conferred at the Lambs Club while Stanton was adapting the play for the screen, and in this work the author was able to give the director many valuable suggestions When Mr. Blossom died Stanton was in Lakewood, N. J., with his company, making scenes on a racing estate. He suspended work on the day of the funeral—at which he was a pallbearer.

When William Fox bought the screen rights of "Checkers," Mr. Blossom expressed the wish that his friend Stanton direct the picture. This suggestion was followed, but fate decreed that Blossom was not to see his favorite play on the screen.

Exhibitors Praise "A Gentleman of Quality"

VITAGRAPH has been keeping a very close check on exhibitors' reports both as published in the various trade papers and as the reports are transmitted through its branch offices to the home office. Outstanding in recent weeks has been the practically unanimous comment of exhibitors as to Earle Williams' box-office drawing power and almost in every case has this comment about the star been tied up with an exhibitor's report of his success with "A Gentleman of Quality."

Analyzing these reports, Vitagraph points out that not only is "A Gentleman of Quality" itself proving a mighty fine attraction, but the business that it is playing to has resulted, to a large extent, from the building up that has been done by the preceding Williams releases. In other words, with "A Gentleman of Quality," exhibitors are getting the benefit of the good will that has been built up by the recent quality of the Earle Williams pictures.

It is noteworthy, indeed, that after Mr. Williams has held undisputed front rank among screen stars for a number of years, he is today maintaining the same high box-office value that has been his for so extended a period.

"A Gentleman of Quality" was directed by James Young and was adapted from Frederic Van Rensselaer Day's sensational novel of the same title.

Fox Increases Output of Mutt and Jeff

The increasing demand throughout the country for short subjects is reflected in the growth in popularity of the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, according to the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation. Most of the leading theatres of the country, including the Rialto theatre, New York, are using Bud Fisher's famous comedy characters, it is said, and find them becoming more and more popular every week.

Some of the theatres, trade reports show, are featuring the Mutt and Jeff subjects in their electric lights and in their advertising because of the great popularity they have attained. Others are rearranging their musical programs so that more attention is devoted to the musical settings for the cartoons.

Picture Adds Dramatic Incident

"The Spirit of Lafayette" Secures Final Timely Touch by Portraying Tremendous Parade of New York's Own

INSPIRED by the stupendous ovation and military pageant planned for the New York soldiers returning victorious from France, the producers of "The Spirit of Lafayette" seized the opportunity of picturing the final timely scenes for the production by portraying the 27,000 soldiers on their line of march through the Victory Arch.

The production has been carefully edited, cut and assembled by experts, it is stated, and is now ready for the market. Whether it will be sold on the state rights basis or sold outright to some national film distributing system has not been announced. One of the officials interested was decidedly in favor of playing all the principal cities direct as a big special.

He declared that the big calibre of the production would warrant the exhibition of "The Spirit of Lafayette" on a high-class scale and that it would bring in a clientele from the higher plane in life as well as the regular movie fans.

It was pointed out that many exhibitors might believe that "The Spirit of Lafayette" was a war title. But the real action of the production is said to take place from the signing of the armistice and the picture was made SINCE the war ended and is devoted to the returned soldiers.

Described as swiftly but entertainingly carrying the audience from the fall of 1776 to the spring of 1919, it briefly but convincingly touches on the inspirations of George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson. The spirit of Lafayette is shown and the various contrasts in the different generations.

A romantic story is said to preserve an intensely interesting continuity and the elaborate settings are described as simply the last word in consistency and splendor.

James Vincent directed "The Spirit of Lafayette." As the criterion of the superb directing abilities ascribed it is merely announced that he was the producer of such pictures as "The Land of the Lost," "The Wolf," Walker Whiteside in "The Melting Pot," Theda Bara in "Gold and the Woman," Bertha Kalish in "Ambition," and a score of others equally successful.

The endorsement of the United States Government Committee on Public Information through the Division of Films has been awarded to "The Spirit of Lafayette" and it is heralded as the great official International film. The story is from the book of James Mott Hallowell and it was adapted for the screen by J. Searle Dawley.

Earl Schenck portrays Lafayette and his wife Adrienne is portrayed in youth by Violet de Biccary and in later life by Marion Barney. Robert Elliott has the role of Lieut. John Stanton and his wife, Mrs. Stanton, is played by Paula Shay. There are thirty-seven other quite important roles in "The Spirit of Lafayette," and every member of the immense cast is described as an experienced capable film artist.

James R. Sheehan is associated with Mr. Vincent in the production and is general manager. As a successful exhibitor and showman in the New England states for a score of years he was quick to see the tremendous exploitation possibilities of such a film production if properly produced. And after seeing the finished product he immediately became one of the most enthusiastic men along Broadway, according to all reports.

Mr. Sheehan took a print of the picture to St. Louis late in February and gave it the first official premiere at the Pershing theatre there. This was in connection with the great Mid-Continent Congress of the League of Nations. The newspapers eulogized it highly and Louis K. Sidney, manager of the theatre, declared that he had crowded houses at every performance and that it had the strong appeal that held interest throughout.

Ex-President William Howard Taft witnessed it in St. Louis and pronounced it in admirable harmony, expressing the hope that all the American people could see it.

Buys Big Territory for "The Prodigal Wife"

THE Territorial Sales Corporation has purchased from Screencraft Pictures the masterful production, "The Prodigal Wife," for the United States and Canada. This is the first feature to be bought by Territorial Sales. At present Territorial Sales is preparing to place on the state rights mart the first three of the new series of Jester comedies.

"The Prodigal Wife" was produced from "Flaming Ramparts," a story by Edith Barnard Delano. Mary Boland and Lucy Cotton are the featured players. The plot deals with the rebirth of a woman's soul through love.

Some territory on "The Prodigal Wife" has already been sold, but the following choice districts are still open: Ohio, Kentucky, Michigan, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa, Oklahoma, Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Idaho, Alaska, Washington, Oregon, Montana, Virginia and North Carolina.

The entire Canadian territory is still open.

In the cast of "The Prodigal Wife," in addition to Lucy Cotton and Mary Boland, are the following capable screen performers: Raymond Bloomer, Alfred Keppler. Harris Gordon, Vincent Coleman and Mrs. Stuart Robson.

Frank Reicher, who directed "The Prodigal Wife," is one of the really talented directors of motion pictures.

Arbuckle Washes Windows

The earlier part of "Fatty" Arbuckle's forthcoming Paramount comedy requires that he starts washing windows in a banking institution before climbing to the top.

Fox Releases First Ray-Fair Picture

Speculation in the trade over the work of Albert Ray and Elinor Fair for William Fox was quickened this week by the announcement that "Married in Haste," the first picture which these two young players have made, is the current release in the Excel Pictures series.

Announcement by Mr. Fox, when these two players signed contracts with him, that they would appear in "a series of the sweetest stories ever told," was hailed with enthusiasm by exhibitors, who have since certified their interest by heavily booking the Ray-Fair pictures.

"Married in Haste," it is declared in a statement by the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation, sets an unusually high standard.

Report More Success for Rolfe Film

From A. Dresner, manager of Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Washington, D. C., comes another report to Octagon Films, Inc., of the success of B. A. Rolfe's super serial, "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini.

"I have just been told by Fred Habel," reports Mr. Dresner, "that the Houdini serial, 'The Master Mystery,' is positively the first and only serial that he has ever used that did not have to be braced up with something to carry it through. Mr. Habel operates the Gem theatre, one of the larger houses in Washington, and has positively used every serial produced."

Big Press Book for Brockwell Picture

One of the most comprehensive press books ever issued by the Exhibitors Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation has been published for the exploitation of "Pitfalls of a Big City," which is declared to be the greatest play in which Gladys Brockwell has starred.

Because of the theme of the picture—it is a story of the underworld and a girl's ambition to go straight—unusual advertising and publicity opportunities are aforded, it is stated, and the press book contains an exceptionally large amount of material designed to aid exhibitors.

Pathe Exploits Cassinelli Picture

"The Unknown Love," Leonce Perrot's romantic production starring Dolores Cassinelli with E. K. Lincoln, which will be released as a Pathe Special April 27th, is being put forward with numerous exploitation and advertising aids.

The posters, which have been designed by Frederick Brown MaDan and Emmet Owen Smith, are artistic in both the handling and general beauty of design. Both artists were strongly inspired by the head of the "Italian Cameo Girl," and they have most effectively used it in the posters. Mr. Smith's contribution is the 24 sheet.

Special Service Section on

John Barrymore in "Test of Honor"

EXHIBITORS who are going to show this picture and especially those who have shown previous film offerings in which John Barrymore was the star have a chance to place emphasis on the versatility of the star. It is a specially good opportunity to appeal to the followers of the legitimate, for in his previous motion pictures Mr. Barrymore has had roles that are more or less farcical while here he has a chance to show a finished piece of serious interpretation.

Here is a story where there is no killing, although the star is sent to prison for the death of a man. It is a case where the woman element enters very strongly into the story, but where there is no appeal based on the ordinary sex idea. It is a story where revenge is one of the chief elements, but where there is no gruesomeness. These are points that should be borne in mind, so that in putting out your selling angles you will appeal to those who want straight, clean, holding interesting in a picture.

Naturally you will play the name of Mr. Barrymore to the limit. It would be well to call attention to the fact that this is made from "The Malefactor," a novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim. Mr. Oppenheim has been a prolific writer and he has a great following among magazine readers.

IN the selling talks we would suggest that you stress the characters because there are some that stand out here, especially Barrymore as Martin Wingrave, a young Virginian. The clean-cut, high class Southern man of something of the old school is always popular and here you have one that will get the sympathy of the audience. You want to get this sympathy in your advance advertising. Now for the story.

We are introduced to this southern gentleman when Juliet, the little daughter of the organist of the village church comes to his house to borrow books. The chivalry he shows in the greeting of the fifteen year old girl at once wins the respect of the spectator and takes away anything of the curse of the Don Juan when we find a moment later that he is mixed up in a love affair with Ruth Curtis who has a husband that she loathes. Mrs. Curtis is one of the sort of women who make playthings of men and though she finds Wingrave attractive and desires to keep him in her train the man for whom she really cares is George Lumley, a young doctor. But she writes Wingrave letters pledging her love, one of these begging him to meet her secretly at the country club shoot the following day.

Suspicions of the husband have already been aroused and when she leaves the group and beckons to Wingrave to follow, the husband trails them to the clubhouse to find his wife in Wingrave's arms where she has thrown herself. Then the woman declares that Wingrave has forced his attentions on her and a fight follows in which Curtis is knocked unconscious. Dr. Lumley is called in and declares that Curtis is suffering from his heart and that he will soon be himself if a stimulant is given him. He leaves this with the wife, and she deliberately fails to give it to the stricken man, with death as the result.

WINGRAVE is arrested and instead of telling the truth at the hearing Mrs. Curtis declares that her husband was killed in defending her honor. Lumley corroborates Ruth. Rather than drag the name of the woman he has loved into the mire, he is silent and Wingrave is given seven years in prison. But before he goes to serve his term he has provided for little Juliet whom he admires as a pretty little girl, with no deeper feeling, with the fiction that a relative has left her the money.

Next we see Wingrave in convict garb with the symbolic figure of the crushing memory. And here we have a vision of Juliet playing her violin. So when he comes out of prison his one thought is for revenge on the woman who has been responsible for his sufferings. The one person who is waiting for him is his old negro manservant. In the meantime Ruth Curtis has married Judge Ferris, who gives her the social position in New York that she is seeking. First he goes to Juliet, who is in New York studying the violin, and then taking the name of John Martin calls on Ruth, who at first professes that she still loves him. But under the threat to give her love letters to her new husband, he forces Ruth to introduce her to her social set and to her husband. There Lumley, now a successful physician is still her intimate.

RUTH realizes that Wingrave has returned for revenge, she fears that her husband will learn the truth, she is jealous of Juliet and she wants nothing to interfere with her friendship for Lumley. So she lays her plans and decides to trap Wingrave and the husband does find her in his embrace. Then Wingrave turns to him and says: "She will tell you that I killed her first husband and that I have again

Three of the scenes with Juliet. At left as a young girl and in center the finale

At the left one of the strong scenes between Barrymore and Marcia Manon, when he confronts her once more. In the center scene after Dr. Lumley believes that the man has been poisoned and is being denounced, and at right the fight between the Virginian and the first husband, the event which caused him to go to prison forced myself on her." But the judge orders Martin to leave the house and then the woman is all the more scared and arranges with Lumley to substitute poison for the headache powders that Martin takes regular. But Juliet who has followed him, oversees the trick.

But Martin has, too, discovered the secret and he feigns death with the result that Lumley now turns on the woman. Judge Ferris then confronts the pair of them and drives them from the house with the warning to Lumley that he had better care for the woman. Then he turns to the wronged man and says: "John Martin, I beg your pardon." And then the end comes with Wingrave finding happiness with Juliet.

"I thought it was revenge I wanted," he tells her. "I was wrong. What I wanted was you."

NATURALLY the big dramatic qualities of this picture come with Wingrave accepting the prison sentence to shield the name of a woman he had loved and of the revenge that he had planned. But when you put the emphasis on this, at the same time give some relief with the happier side of the story. You can appeal to the gripping qualities of the plot without going into the revenge element too strongly. That word "Revenge" is apt to suggest to some minds gruesomeness, and there is nothing of the sort here.

In the first place we would prefer to use one of the striking action pictures for the main illustration, preferably one of those containing also a picture of Marcia Manon, who has the role of Ruth Curtis. There is one picture that shows the heads of Barrymore and Miss Manon with her head turned away while accusation is written on his face. Where a scene picture means something or where the meaning can be brought out by a caption we are strongly in favor of including the picture with a woman in the display for you are surer to appeal to all the elements of your patronage.

The picture of Juliet will also add to the striking qualities of your advertising. We have illustrated several of the scene pictures for the benefit of those who desire to make their own advertising cuts.

WE would go far enough into the story of this in the selling argument to show that it has a plot out of the ordinary. Immediately after you have used the fact that this is founded on the Oppenheim story you can use the selling matter in smaller type and it is pretty sure to be read. Here are some to select from:

"He was a Virginia gentleman of today, but with all the chivalry of the old school. A married woman who loathed her husband forced her love on him—though she really loved a third man. Then Wingrave struck her husband down when he made a scene. He would have recovered had not the wife deliberately failed to administer the stimulant. But when she did not, he died and Wingrave faced the court as his slayer. Then the woman turned on him, declared that her husband had been killed in defending her honor. . . .

"And because of the love that he once bore her Wingate remained silent. Then after seven years he came from prison. . . . He thought only of the happiness that he would find in revenge, but he found a happiness far more beautiful. But the story is amazing and you'll never move from the edge of your seat until the last scene is shown."

"Ruth Curtis had a husband whom she despised and so she turned to Martin Wingrave and madly made love to him. And when her husband found them together in the club parlor there was a scene. Wingrave struck down the husband. The doctor said that he would recover if the stimulant he left were administered. But the wife let him die.

"No, it was not because she wanted to marry Wingate. For when he faced the court she denied him. She declared that her husband had fought to protect her honor. But Wingrave kept silent—silent then and for the seven years he was in prison. And then he came forth.

"But what of this amazing woman? What could have been her motive? And what was her punishment?"

"Was it love when a married woman came to the arms of this young Virginian? Was it love when he struck down her husband? Was it love when she deliberately let her husband die? Was it love when he kept silent for her sake and served in prison for seven years?

"And what, then, when this man came back into the world again? There was the faithful black man servant waiting for him —and another. And to some one he said: 'I thought it was revenge I wanted. I was wrong, what I wanted was you.'"

THEN some shorter ones:

"Ruth Curtis swore she hated her husband and loved this man. She saw him strike Curtis down and let her husband die. Then she sent the man to prison by denying him. And yet that is only the start of this amazing story."

"A woman betrayed him, but honor forbade him to speak. Seven years in prison and he came forth to find the woman again. But honor ruled and cleverness alone sent the woman to the fate she deserved and the man to the arms of the girl who knew the real love."

"She let her husband die and the man she claimed to love go to prison for the deed. And when he came out did he seize her white throat in revenge or allow her own scheme to kill him undo her?"

"A story of splendid honor and a beautiful faith—and a most amazing siren."

THERE should be comedy to balance this feature, but while we would try to take advantage of the pulling power of the feature and get an unusually good bill to accompany it, we would not feature the shorter subjects in the advertising. Keep this picture and the star the dominant ideas and then make the setting around them so attractive that you will get the sort of word of mouth advertising that brings the people to your theatre again and again.

Good music is essential here and there are some excellent opportunities.

Any of these three scenes of Barrymore, with Marcia Manon, will make striking advertising. At left she turns against him, at right she seeks to win him back and in the center he denounces her after she tries to poison him

Appeal Should be Straight Cut and on High Plane

STRAIGHT newspaper advertising is the one best bet in advertising "The Test of Honor" and we would a good deal rather spend the money that would go into any teaser campaign or anything of the sort in the announcement of the picture. By using any of the selling talks that are given here or in the plan book you have the effect of arousing the curiosity of the people. And if you resorted to the teaser method you would use the selling power of Barrymore's name and also probably fail to reach the high class of people that you want to get to your theatre.

If there is in your section any considerable number of people who still hold to the legitimate theatre instead of the motion picture you have an opportunity to get them to your house with this one. Suppose you send out a circular letter along these lines:

"We want you to compare the motion picture and the spoken drama. We have at the Regent theatre next week, Mr. John Barrymore, one of the foremost artists of the legitimate stage in 'The Test of Honor.' It is a wonderful motion picture and though New York has hailed his triumph in 'Redemption' on the spoken stage this season, we believe that Mr. Barrymore here surpasses anything that he has ever done.

"We believe that you will agree with us that for unusual plot, for tenseness and for heart interest the photoplay has been able to go beyond the stage. Give us a chance to prove it."

A MUSIC IDEA

Old Song Will Help in Making This Attractive

THERE can be a clever effect used here by having a song precede the showing of this feature and continuing the music of it through, as we are indicating here.

Juliet, the girl whom Wingrave finally marries, is a violinist. The first time we see her on the screen playing she appears to be rendering "Then You'll Remember Me." There is another occasion when she is seen in Wingate's vision and a third time at the recital at which she appears.

With a Southern rose garden effect have a girl dressed in white sing this and let the strains be brought into the picture. Then each time that the girl is seen playing have the selection used as a violin solo from the back of the stage. At the recital scene this can be made all the more effective by rendering on a 'cello the end of the 'cello solo that is pictured there and then have the piano accompaniment for the violin. This same selection should be brought in at the end.

"Love's Old Sweet Song" or any of the old favorites may be used here. We would distinctly use one of the old songs, for it fits in so well with the character that Barrymore portrays.

YOU will, of course, bestow the greater part of your newspaper publicity on the star, but there is such a notable cast here that we would be sure to mention it down in the corner of the display advertisement and in some of the reading notices. But forget the time-worn "all star cast" stuff here.

Constance Binney is undoubtedly one of the prettiest girls on the screen, something of the Marguerite Clark type. She attracted great attention when she appeared in Maurice Tourneur's production of "Sporting Life."

Marcia Manon will be remembered as the actress who played the cruel wife with Mary Pickford in "Stella Maris." She attracted a great deal of attention in Cecil B. DeMille's "Old Wives for New."

J. W. Johnson has been a popular favorite for a long time and his name is thoroughly familiar to your audiences. Bigelow Cooper is equally well known.

And don't forget the pulling power that should be in the name of Oppenheim in your community. If the window display idea is not overworked in your section it ought to be easy to get cooperation on this. Oppenheim has been a most prolific writer and new works are constantly coming from the press and any large bookstore is likely to have quite a number of his other volumes. Suggest to your bookseller that here he has a chance to excite new interest in Oppenheim's works and get rid of the old volumes by cooperating with you.

WE believe that dignity is desirable in presenting this picture and therefore we would devote the lobby directly to exploitation of Barrymore and the title and the author. Instead of merely plastering the paper about and sticking the stills up anywhere, try to get an artistic effect here.

If you will mount the 22 by 28 picture of the star and of the leading woman on heavy cardboard and simply place on these their names and the title of the picture you can use one of them on either side of the lobby with good effect.

But if you have a theatre where you get the crowds going by and where you find that the display will appeal to the curious, you can employ the question mark idea. Display a series of huge question marks and at the bottom of each one include one of the scene pictures and then a question such as these:

"Why did she swear her love for him and then let him go to prison for a crime of which he was innocent?"

"Why did she let her husband die and abandon the man she said she loved—not to marry a man she had never seen?"

"Was it honor that kept him from speaking when he, innocent, faced a prison term and she was the one who should have had the sentence?"

"Seven years he suffered for her sin, and when he came forth from prison—what was his revenge?"

Madge Kennedy in Mojave Desert

Goldwyn Star and Associates Far from Railroads in Filming Rex Taylor Story, "Leave It To Susan"

SOMEWHERE in the Mojave Desert, it is stated, Madge Kennedy and members of her company are temporarily lost, while filming her new Goldwyn picture to follow "Daughter of Mine."

The title of the forthcoming production with the desert scenes is "Leave It to Susan," and it was written by Rex Taylor, who set about to provide Miss Kennedy with a role entirely opposed to the one she assumed in Hugo Ballin's fantastic comedy, and unlike any of her others as well.

That Miss Kennedy will be heard from in time, and will give a good account of herself, is said to go without saying because she is unusually happy over the part. Not a little of her enthusiasm comes from the fact that Clarence G. Badger again is her director.

The locale of the new Goldwyn Picture places the erstwhile heroine of a dozen frothy society plays in the midst of the desert's waste. First of all she is seen as the daughter of a capitalist who, with his family journeys West on business of a very particular nature.

An amusing accident leaves Susan behind when the train resumes its trip after an interruption. Susan is deserted with only Montmorency, her dog, clasped in her arms. The desert stretches all around her.

The people she afterwards encounters, the seemingly desperate situations in which she becomes involved, and it is declared that the big surprise which comes to the girl and, incidentally, the audience, promises to make "Leave It to Susan" a comedy-drama rich in laughter and unexpectedness.

Although Madge Kennedy in a Western environment of the roughest kind is a combination that presages much merriment, it is not only by reason of this that the play is highly original, it is said. Varied and thoroughly human types are announced as surrounding the star, including Alfred Hollingsworth, George Kunkel, Anna Hernandez, Walter Hiers and a corps of real cowboys, and a leading man new to her in the person of Wallace MacDonald.

Select Names Features for the Month of April

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces three Star Series attractions for distribution during the month of April, including Marion Davies in "Getting Mary Married," Constance Talmadge in "The Veiled Adventure," in which she will be presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and Alice Brady's "Red Head."

Marion Davies' Select Picture for April, "Getting Mary Married," is an original story written especially for the star by John Emerson and Anita Loos. It is an Allan Dwan production, having been directed and supervised especially by him.

"The Veiled Adventure" will be Constance Talmadge's Select Picture for April. Walter Edwards directed it and Harrison Ford is Miss Talmadge's leading man. The story is by Julia Crawford Ivers, who also wrote the scenario. "The Veiled Adventure" concerns the experiences of a young woman who delights in showing other people the error of their ways. She finds a grey chiffon veil in her fiance's pocket, so she proceeds to teach him a lesson. While occupied in this pleasant pursuit, she becomes acquainted with another young man, which tends to minimize the importance of the veil. Further developments show that Reggie, her fiance, has a very dangerous rival.

"Red Head," in which Alice Brady will be seen, is a story by Albert Payson Dowst, which appeared in a recent number of one of the leading magazines. It was adapted for the screen by Charles Maigne, who also directed the production, thus making the fifth picture for Alice Brady which Mr. Maigne has adapted as well as directed. Miss Brady will be supported by Conrad Nagel, who is also leading man in her stage play, "Forever After," thus forming a combination of star and leading man which it is believed will prove one of the most successful ever seen on the motion picture screen.

Obtains Popular Subjects for Production

JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced this week the acquisition for screen presentation of three subjects. They are William Gillette's "Too Much Johnson," Louis Joseph Vance's "The Black Bag" and "Hawthorne of the U. S. A.," the Cohan and Harris hit.

"Too Much Johnson" is the second piece by William Gillette purchased recently by Famous Players-Lasky, "Secret Service" having been obtained some few weeks ago as a subject for Captain Robert Warwick. Written by Mr. Gillette, "Too Much Johnson" was first produced on the stage in 1894 at the Standard theatre, New York City.

Louis Joseph Vance's novel, "The Black Bag," published by the Bobbs-Merrill Company in 1908, is also well known to the American public. This story was obtained as a vehicle for Wallace Reid and the many thousands who are acquainted with the plot and Mr. Reid's past screen accomplishments, will readily appreciate the fact that this subject will make an admirable story for the Paramount favorite. "The Black Bag" is also the second Louis Joseph Vance subject recently announced by Famous Players-Lasky.

"Hawthorne of the U. S. A." is another play of the American stage. Produced first at the Astor theatre in New York, November 4, 1912, with Douglas Fairbanks in the leading role, this piece by James B. Fagan proved one of the biggest Cohan and Harris hits and soon became popular throughout the country.

Pershing Gets Chance to See Himself

General John J. Pershing is going to have the opportunity of seeing himself as Lieutenant John J. Pershing receiving his first important commission at the hands of Colonel Theodore Roosevelt when "Our Teddy," the McClure authorized screen version of Colonel Roosevelt's life, is shown in the areas of France occupied by American troops. Before the McClure feature was produced it was not generally kown that Colonel Roosevelt, then president, "discovered" Pershing as a young West Point graduate, recognized his ability, and gave him his first big job to do in the army. In an interesting and impressive scene, "Our Teddy" shows President Roosevelt in conversation with Lieutenant Pershing and assigning him the important tasks that later resulted in him being chosen as leader of the Mexican expedition and commander-in-chief of the American Expeditionary Forces.

Dwan Directs Miss Davies at Fort Lee

Marion Davies, with a large company, is busily at work on a new production in the Paragon Studios, Fort Lee, which, it is understood C. F. Zittel has leased for a short period of time. Allan Dwan, who made "Getting Mary Married," soon to be released, is again Miss Davies' director, Norman Kerry her leading man, and Dorothy Green and Matt Moore figure prominently in the production's cast. Much secrecy is being maintained about its story. It evidently is one demanding a large number of clothes, as Marion Davies has been seen much recently stocking up in New York's most fashionable shops.

Carroll Joins Independent in Pittsburgh

Norman S. Carroll, formerly assistant to H. Robbins, assistant general manager of Fox Film Corporation and more recently general manager Fort Pitt Theatre Corporation, Pittsburgh, has been placed in charge of the Pittsburgh branch of the Independent Sales Corporation. Mr. Carroll is one of the trade's youngest branch managers and is known throughout the Eastern territory to every exhibitor. He takes charge of the Pittsburg branch for Independent, this week, and will immediately start a boosting campaign for the Rothapfel Unit Programme.

Howells Writes

Letters received from David P. Howells, who is in Europe opening offices for the distribution of United Picture Theatres, Inc.'s and other American pictures, tell of present conditions at the battle fronts which he and Mrs. Howells have visited. As the guests of an American colonel Mr. Howells made the trip by motor from Bar-le-duc through the Argonne Forest, Varennes, Clermont, Montfaucon, Mort Hommes Hill, and Verdun, returning by way of the Valley of the Marne, St. Mihiel and Commercy.

Alice Joyce, Vitagraph star in "The Cambric Mask"

First Abe Martin Sayings Scheduled

The first of Kin Hubbard's quaint Abe Martin sayings and drawings recently secured for exclusive use in the New Screen Magazine are contained in issue No. 8, released shortly by Universal exchanges. The Abe Martin feature presents the philosophy and wit of Mr. Hubbard's brain creation, a small town Hoosier, with ideas that are both unique and exceedingly humorous. To the public the Abe Martin feature needs little introduction for the sketches and sayings bearing his name have been published by over a hundred leading newspapers throughout the country for several years. As in the newspapers, the Abe Martin features of the New Screen Magazine will appear both in words and illustrations.

Pictures taken in a New York dog hospital, pictures taken at a blind hospital and showing the remarkable things done by blind men and women, new designs for spring and summer garments, and several novelty pictures complete the reel.

Executives See Leah Baird Feature

In the projection rooms of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation Wednesday the executives obtained their first full view of the pretentious Leah Baird-Augustus Thomas special, "As a Man Thinks."

After seven weeks of hard work and a lavish expenditure of real money, the screen disclosed what the executives of both the producing and distributing companies had prayed for—a master production—a "special" that will open the new era of Hodkinson's super-plans with a smashing and artistic triumph.

New One-Reelers

Exhibitors Mutual this week announced three new one-reel comedies, on release dates from March 30 to April 20.

The first, on March 30, is "Peggy's Burglar," with Elinor Field. Following is another Elinor Field one-reeler, on April 6, called "Too Many Sweethearts." On April 20 "Don't Worry" is scheduled. Miss Field is also presented in it.

Three Big Features Give Impetus

Robertson-Cole Company Cites Three Special Pictures as Outstanding on Exhibitors Mutual List

FROM reports gathered from Exhibitors Mutual Exchanges, Robertson-Cole Company states that the rapidly augmenting accounts are credited to the great pulling powers of three special features; "What Every Woman Wants," "The Turn in the Road," and Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas," which in motion picture parlance, are described as going over like a whirlwind.

"What Every Woman Wants," which Jesse E. Hampton produced from a story by William Parker, and which features Grace Darmond, because of its prior release, is setting the pace for "The Turn in the Road," the Brentwood production, and its a most unusual pace, it is stated.

During the week of its release, "What Every Woman Wants" played the full seven days in the following representative first run houses throughout the country; Majestic, Detroit; Alcazar, Chicago; State-Lake, Chicago; Lyric, Buffalo; Strand, Minneapolis; Colonial Washington, D. C.; Metropolitan, Washington, D. C.; Clinton Square, New York; Halsey, Brooklyn; Strand, Newark; Minerva, Pittsburgh.

During the week of April 7th, ten big Chicago theatres will play the Hampton production as their leading attraction. Ascher Bros. have booked the Exhibitors Mutual feature for each of their twelve theatres.

"The Turn in the Road," which has a cast, including Helen Jerome Eddy and little Ben Alexander, is meeting with widespread approval, it is said that both artistically and from the box office stand point it is living up to expectations of exhibitors.

Where the Brentwood Production has had a run, business has increased daily, it is declared, just as it did at Quinn's in Los Angeles where it held the screen for eight weeks. Among the hosts of first run houses which have booked the picture, highly favorable reports have been received from Kunsky's Majestic Theatre in Detroit; the State-Lake in Chicago, etc.

Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" is going over so big that it is almost impossible for Exhibitors Mutual to obtain a print of it, it is announced.

Extra copies of the picture have been ordered but on an emergency call the New York office was unable to supply a print.

John D. Tippett Arrives for Universal Visit

JOHN D. TIPPETT, manager of the Trans-Atlantic Film Co., Ltd., of London, has arrived in New York for a brief business visit prior to a visit to Universal City, Cal., and returning abroad. Mr. Tippett is in charge of Universal's film distribution abroad and is in America for the purpose of conferring with Carl Laemmle, president of the firm, and to arrange for great distribution of the Big U's productions in Europe and Africa during the present year.

As the head of one of the largest film distributing companies in the Eastern Hemisphere, Mr. Tippett is in a position to know what a prominent part motion pictures have played in the winning of the war and in keeping up the morale of the people who have stayed at home, in Europe. He states that though all amusements suffered considerably in Europe because of the war, that the great assistance the cinema lent to the Allied governments cannot be overestimated. With the armistice has come an era of cinema prosperity to Europe and Africa that knows no bounds, according to Mr. Tippett. With embargoes lifted and transportation conditions back to normal, the general public in better spirits and the strain of the war rapidly becoming invisible, Mr. Tippett looks forward to a record distribution of American and foreign films in Europe during 1919.

The Trans-Atlantic Co., handling Universal productions, with branch offices at Copenhagen, Stockholm, Christiania, Rotterdam, Brussels, Paris, Milan and Barcelona, has reported an unusual increase in business the first three months following the signing of the armistice, and Universal plays and players are very popular in all European countries, according to Mr. Tippett.

Distributing One Hundred Prints of Picture

THE First National Exhibitors Circuit will send through their various distributing exchanges, one hundred prints of their newest feature, "Whom the Gods Would Destroy." Efforts to effect a simultaneous showing in one hundred cities, either on April 15 or 21 are being made.

The first booking received comes from Harry Scherer of the Cambria theatre, Johnstown, Pa., who will close his film season with the Macauley feature, by playing it at seventy-five cent top prices April 21, 22 and 23.

The Macauley representative will make a tour of the First National eastern exchanges in behalf of the film and announces that concern's willingness to play the film anywhere on a percentage scale.

The League to Enforce Peace, of which Ex-President Taft and other noted men are heads and of which over four hundred thousand people are participating members, are getting behind the picture in a substantial manner, and it is expected now that an immense advertising campaign, coupled with the hundreds of discussions and conventions on the subject of a League of Nations, will be begun shortly.

Already over a million letters have been written on the subject of the film to sympathizers with the movement, suggesting to them to support the film, have been sent out with thousands of others going forward each week.

Pathe Production Pleases Wilson

President Sees "Common Clay" and Radiogram Carries Glad Tidings Ashore—Troops Also Appreciate Showing

"COMMON CLAY," with Fannie Ward, according to a radiogram received at Pathe Exchange Home Office, scored a hit on the program arranged for President Wilson on his return journey to France. The issue of the Pathe News shown during the trip composed a comprehensive record of the President's activities in England, France and Italy, the selections being made from the most important occasions.

Captain Rose, of the United States Steamship George Washington, conveyed the news in the following message:

"Pathe News and 'Common Clay' greatly appreciated by President and party, and by returning troops. Please try and include Pathe Review for the next trip."

An especially attractive program is being arranged for the next trip, which will include issues of Pathe Review embodying the most striking exhibitions of slow motion made by the Novagraph Film Corporation. Of timely interest at this time are the Pathe color scenics of various parts of Europe.

The appreciation of "Common Clay" is a big note in the warm appreciation wherever the film version of the Harvard prize play has been shown, since its presentation at the Rialto Theatre, New York. Typical of exhibitor comment is that of Andrew Karzas, owner and manager of the Woodlawn Theatre, one of the most representative houses in Chicago or the West, who writes:

"After hearing more favorable comment on your film, 'Common Clay,' than any the Woodlawn Theatre has played thus far, I feel it my duty to pass the good word on to you.

"Without an exception our patrons were surely pleased with this production and 95 per cent. of them stopped to say so as they left the theatre.

"This is, as you know, the acid test for any picture; for no matter what the film is, if the public likes it, success will come."

Leading Exhibitor Eulogizes Hampton Film

"WHAT Every Woman Wants" is enthusiastically praised by Edward J. O'Keefe, manager of the City Square Theatre at Atlantic City.

This is the Jesse D. Hampton production marketed by Robertson-Cole Company through the Exhibitors Mutual exchanges. Grace Darmond is featured.

"Congratulations on 'What Every Woman Wants,'" wires Manager Keefe. "It is one great picture. One of the best we ever played, and we play all the big ones. It has everything that goes to make a good picture—good photography, direction, settings and high class acting—not forgetting the great title.

"We had big business all day and will no doubt have bigger tomorrow. Will ask you to increase the two days I have it booked for our Cort Theatre on the boardwalk, to three days. It should go over even better there. Your company is turning out some great shows. Keep up the good work."

The Atlantic City Daily Press, in reviewing the picture said: "What Every Woman Wants," the widely discussed photo drama, the picture play with the alluring and curiosity provoking title was magnet enough to swamp the management of the City Square Theatre on Atlantic avenue, both yesterday afternoon and evening, where it was announced for its first exclusive presentation.

"That the big throng was satisfied after seeing this remarkable film goes without saying for the picture proved one of the best ever seen at this popular house. What does every woman really want? Grace Darmond, in the featured role thought she had what she wanted, and after she got it, found out it wasn't what she wanted after all. In this case it was clothes and she got clothes to her heart's content. It is a pretty safe bet that the gowns worn in this remarkable film were never excelled even at one of the big fashion shows where the best is always shown."

Magazine Screen Supplement Is Described

JAMES R. QUIRK and Julian Johnson, respectively general manager and editor of Photoplay Magazine, and Vice-President E. W. Hammons of the Educational Film Corporation of America, are the men behind the "Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement."

For the benefit of exhibitors, Mr. Hammons goes into a description of this new one-reel offering, and the possibilities of exploitation on the series.

"The 'Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement' offers real opportunities to every exhibitor," declared Mr. Hammons. "Every issue contains from five to seven of the more celebrated players, in the sort of material that the 'fans' like best. The informal photographs create a friendly interest in the players that the exhibitor cannot afford to overlook. Patrons feel that they are personally acquainted with the stars after they have seen them in regular clothes—informally, intimately, like meeting them in private life.

"For the exhibitor who buys his newspaper space by the line, every announcement must necessarily be as brief as possible. Therefore, the title line 'Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement' used by itself is best, because it has had the greatest amount of publicity, and the greatest number would understand what was meant. Enlargements on that, for larger space, could run about as follows:

"'The Stars As They Are' in the 'Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement.'

"Theatre managers, hardened to contact with plays and players, are apt to underestimate the interest in these subjects. The average theatre manager becomes overfamiliar with pictures and picture people. He forgets that his audience looks upon his programs as recreation, and not as a hobby or a business. They are thoroughly interested in little details—they ask countless questions that seem foolish to the man who is constantly in touch with the trade, but nevertheless it is this large group that carries the motion picture theatre to its greatest success."

Schnitzer Returns from Coast Trip

Joseph I. Schnitzer, Universal's general sales manager, returned to his New York office last week from a five weeks' trip which carried him to the Pacific Coast and back, convinced that Universal productions are to enjoy record distribution and success during the present year. Mr. Schnitzer visited Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, Denver, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles, acquainting exhibitors and exchangemen with Universal new star series selling policy. Upon his arrivel in each of the cities previously mentioned, Mr. Schnitzer held a conference with exchangemen of surrounding territories and later conferred with the leading exhibitors of the localities visited, outlining Universal's plans for exploiting its pictures during the spring and summer months.

Upon his return to New York, Mr. Schnitzer stated that he found conditions in exchanges and theatres greatly in excess of his fondest hopes.

Nichols Books Alice Joyce Film

Vitagraph's Alice Joyce release, "The Lion and the Mouse," the screen version of Charles Klein's famous play, has been booked by W. P. Nichols of the Canadian Film Service, Ltd., of Vancouver for all of his British Columbia houses.

In this connection, it is doubtful if any film in recent months has been so universally played by circuits as has "The Lion and the Mouse," which has been booked by theatre chains all over the country and comes pretty close to holding a record for having played to the greatest possible number of people within so short a period after its release.

Carey Returns to Hollywood

Harry Carey, Universal's Western star, has returned to Hollywood, winding up his 5,000-mile personal appearance tour of the west at San Francisco Monday, March 31, by addressing film fans at six different theatres in the Golden Gate City.

With his wife, who acts as his business manager, Mr. Carey left Universal City early in February and made his first public appearance at Portland. From Portland he journeyed to Seattle, Spokane, Cheyenne, Denver, Kansas City, Omaha, Des Moines, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Milwaukee and Chicago.

Pathe News Cameramen Win Praise

Pathe News in a comparatively short time has established a reputation for aero work which gives to the News a distinct and unique character. Some of the achievements, notably over New York, of which unusual views were taken—including a half-height shot of the Woolworth Building and the Statue of Liberty—have been highly commended by army experts and civilian professionals. They especially commended, also, the views taken of New York Harbor on the occasion of the President's first journey to France; and the scenes, shot from the clouds, of the procession of ships into Boston Harbor upon the return of the President. But the most recent achievement, and one during which the evolution of the plane held spellbound 100,000 spectators, was the automobile races at Santa Monica, Cal.

Exhibitor Praises Stewart Picture

H. C. Neale of the Dixie theatre, Mayfield, Ky., believes in the big feature pictures for getting the business. Mr. Neale expressed himself emphatically in a letter to the Big Feature Rights Corporation after he had run "Virtuous Wives." Mr. Neale wrote:

> Gentlemen:—
> We are running great big stuff now and want to continue. We did a "Sniptorious" business on "Virtuous Wives." Had to turn lots of them away on account of having no room for them. It's a fine picture and everybody went wild over it. It's the talk of the town. You need not hesitate a minute to advertise this picture with all the vim you've got because you will do it an injustice if you don't.

New Player in Aubrey Picture

Next week Vitagraph plans to announce the title of its "Big V" Special Comedy release in which James Aubrey is starred and which will follow the release of the Montgomery and Rock comedy, "Girlies and Grubbers."

In the Aubrey comedy, the Darwin theory gets another boost for one of the performers to be seen in this comedy will be "Snookums," who inherits his histrionic ability from his father, "Napoleon," performing Chimpanzee.

J. A. Howe directed the Aubrey comedy and Maude Emory and Babe Hardy support the Vitagraph comedian.

Clark Company Returns

After several weeks spent at Pass Christian, Miss., Marguerite Clark, Eugene O'Brien, her leading man, and the members of the company engaged in the filming of Miss Clark's new Paramount picture, "Come Out of the Kitchen," returned to New York.

Work on the interior scenes are reported as progressing nicely under the direction of John S. Robertson and his assistant, Frank Walton.

Kane Completes Long Trade Tour

General Manager of Select Pictures Corporation Notes Many New Developments on Six Weeks Trip

AFTER a six weeks' trade tour through the South and Middle West territory, Arthur S. Kane, general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, has returned to New York City.

Mr. Kane had many interesting things to say about his trip, and especially was impressed by the signs of prosperity to be found on every hand.

In Kansas City, for instance, Mr. Frank L. Newman is putting the finishing touches on his new two thousand seat house, the Newman, at the corner of 12th and Main Streets, and expects to open it in May. In the downtown district in Kansas City other large picture theaters are projected.

At Omaha the Goldberg Brothers, owners of the Sun theatre, are building a large new picture house alongside of the Rialto, and have projected another theatre across the street on the opposite corner. In St. Louis Mr. Marcus Loew is building on Washington Avenue a new theatre which is to be devoted to vaudeville and pictures. In Dallas Mr. E. H. Hulsey has announced a thirty-five hundred seat house to be devoted to pictures only, and another large house for Houston.

Everywhere, Mr. Kane stated, he found exhibitors basking in the sunshine of a wonderful season's prosperity. Kicks have disappeared; plans for future aggrandizement have replaced them.

After leaving Atlanta, where Mr. Kane attended a luncheon of the Film Board of Trade and addressed those present, he went to New Orleans, where he was met by Select's branch manager, H. G. Till, and entertained at luncheon in the Grunewald Hotel. In New Orleans Mr. Kane exchanged views with Mr. E. V. Richards, Jr., manager of the Saenger Amusement Company, and J. Eugene Pearce, owner of the Trianon and Tudor theatres on Canal Street. Under the guidance of Mr. Richards he visited the Strand theatre, one of the leading photoplay auditoriums of the South; Marcus Loew's Crescent theatre, and the Saenger Amusement Company's Liberty theatre. In Houston, which was Mr. Kane's next stop, he was met by Branch Manager Claude C. Ezell of Select's Dallas Exchange, and with him visited some of the more prominent exhibitors in the city, including Manager MacFarland of Hulsey's Queen theatre; Mr. William Gerringer, of the Isis, and Miss Elizabeth Johnson, of the Liberty.

In Galveston Mr. Kane and his party were entertained by Manager S. T. McDonald of the Queen theatre with an old-fashioned Texas shore dinner, which made Select's general manager vividly realize some of the delights of life in the city on the Gulf.

A night trip to San Antonio put Mr. Kane in touch with that highly successful theatre owner, Mr. William J. Lytle, owner of the Princess, Empire and other theatres, who is said to have given him not only a glowing account of business conditions from the exhibitor's viewpoint, but also a very flattering and welcome description of what he was pleased to describe as the ideal service which he was receiving from Select's Dallas exchange.

Cartoon Used as Select Poster

A New York paper has given Select Pictures Corporation permission to reproduce as a three-sheet poster for "Bolshevism on Trial," the full-page cartoon which appeared in a recent issue. This cartoon, which has since been reprinted in many newspapers throughout the country, depicts figures representing Labor and Capital united to repulse a crawling, bearded, unkempt figure representing Bolshevism and push him off the face of the globe. In the background stands the Statue of Liberty—under its beneficent and truth-revealing rays the industrial forces which have built up America have joined hands to avert the common peril and preserve our native land as the home of the free.

"Red Glove" Published

Douglas Grant's novel of Western adventure, from which "The Red Glove" serial starring Marie Walcamp, has been adapted by Universal, is soon to make its appearance on bookstands throughout the country. Grosset & Dunlap have published "The Red Glove" story in book form, illustrating the narrative with scenes from the film play.

Charles Swickard Directs May Allison

May Allison has started work at the new Metro studios in Hollywood in a new screen comedy, the working title of which is "His Father's Wife." Prior to her rest period Miss Allison completed "Castles in the Air," George D. Baker's scenarioization of Kate Jordan's magazine story, "Orchestra D-2," under Mr. Baker's direction.

Beginning her new starring subject, "His Father's Wife," Miss Allison comes under the direction of Charles Swickard, who directed Bert Lytell in "The Spender," "Faith" and "Hitting the High Spots."

Only One Woman in This Film Production

In "Square Deal Sanderson," the William S. Hart production now in the making, Famous Players-Lasky announce that there is only one woman in the cast.

The one woman is Ann Little. She has her first opportunity of playing opposite Mr. Hart, whom she has long known and admired.

Others appearing in the picture are Frank Whitson, Edwin Wallock and Lloyd Bacon.

Metro Keeps Up Pace in West

Unusually Active Force Expects to Be Kept Busy All Summer—Comedy Prevails in Productions

SIGNS that portend a summer of unexampled activity are abundant at the new Metro studios in Hollywood, where, for the first time since Metro's 'cross-continent trek from New York to California, the capacity of the great modern motion picture plant is being put to a rigorous test. With Maxwell Karger, Director General, at the helm, five Metro stars—Bert Lytell, Viola Dana, Hale Hamilton, May Allison and Emmy Wehlen—are at work simultaneously on new productions, and the studios are meeting the test admirably.

Five stars, with their directors, assistant directors, camera men and supporting companies, comprise a small army. Yet the new Metro plant, embracing about seven acres and equipped with three immense stages, affords plenty of room for their varied and multifold activities. In fact, when it was designed Metro provided room enough for twice the number of companies now engaged in the big summer drive.

Comedy is the predominant note in the new Metro productions. With one exception the forthcoming pictures are light in theme, with the purpose of quickly offsetting the gloom of more than four years of war by laugh-making entertainment. Miss Dana, the exquisite; Miss Allison, the winsome; Miss Wehlen, the petite, and the smiling Hale Hamilton are doing what are frankly wholesome comedies. Bert Lytell is completing another of his "Boston Blackie" crook stories, which is intensely dramatic in theme, although liberally lightened by comedy relief.

"Blackie's Redemption" is the title of the new Lytell subject. It is based upon two of Jack Boyle's Red Book Magazine stories, "Boston Blackie's Mary" and "Fred, the Count." Finis Fox, of the Metro scenario staff, made the screen adaptation, and Jone Ince, of the Ince family so widely known among motion picture fans, is directing the young Metro star under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger.

It will be remembered that Bert Lytell originated the character of "Boston Blackie," the gentleman burglar, on the screen, in "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," produced several months ago by Metro in the west. The production of "Boston Blackie's Little Pal" was prior to Lytell's phenomenal successes, "The Spender" and "Faith." Alice Lake, who established a reputation as a screen comedienne of rare beauty and talent prior to her engagement with Metro, is Lytell's leading woman in "Blackie's Redemption."

Emmy Wehlen, who but recently arrived on the Pacific coast, has plunged with a vim into her new picture, "The Amateur Adventuress." Miss Wehlen started work after a rest of only two days. Henry Otto is directing this "Dresden china star" in "The Amateur Adventuress," which is being made from the scenario by Luther A. Reed, of the Metro staff, based upon Thomas Bigelow's story in Young's Magazine. The story has to do with the adventures of a young girl employed as a stenographer in a Welfare Home and who seeks romance.

Kunsky Book Stewart Production

Word comes this week that Vitagraph's Anita Stewart production, "From Headquarters," has been booked by the John H. Kunsky Amusement Enterprises for first run in Detroit.

W. P. Nichols, of the Canadian Film Service, Ltd., of Vancouver has also booked the picture for all of his houses and among other bookings on "From Headquarters" recorded in the last few days are the Jefferson Theatre of Dallas, and the Regent of Battle Creek, Mich.

Ouimet Visits the Studios

Ernest Ouimet, president and general manager of Specialty Film Import, Ltd., of Montreal, and Mrs. Ouimet and two sons and Mrs. E. Thibaudeau, who are passing the winter in southern California, were recently among Frank Keenan's visitors at the Robert Brunton studios, Los Angeles.

The party spent two hours on the grounds and saw Mr. Keenan and members of his company at work on scenes for "The Tide Book," a five-part shipping drama, prepared for the screen by Jack Cunningham from a story by Mrs. Kate Corbaley, and to be distributed by Pathe.

Admirer Sends Flowers to Kenyon

The affection that admirers whom she has never seen have for Doris Kenyon, De Luxe Pictures star, is evidenced by the case of Evelyn McCormack, fifteen years old, who lives in Rome, Ga. For two years little Miss McCormack has been unfaltering in her devotion to Doris Kenyon. In addition to frequent letters, a gift holiday never passes without the young lady remembering Miss Kenyon with some loving little token of friendship. So carefully timed are these gifts that they invariably reach Miss Kenyon on the day that is being celebrated.

The first day of spring, March 21, brought Miss Kenyon a special delivery package containing a collection of flowers from sunny Georgia.

Brunet Trade-Marks Serials

Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has announced that hereafter all advertising and publicity matter on serial productions distributed by the Pathe organization will bear the words, "A Pathe Serial."

This plan has been decided upon as a means of giving the exhibitor the greatest possible advantage to be derived.

Simplex Notes

Boston Supply Company Makes Cheery Report

The Boston Motion Picture Supply Company, southern New England distributors for Simplex, report a banner week's business ending with last Saturday, according to reports received at the Simplex factory.

Cecil Wood, well known in projection circles, is now actively engaged as special representative for this progressive concern and many Simplex orders followed in his wake upon his return from a two weeks' trip around the southern part of the territory.

The current month's "Bean Pot," the snappy little house organ published by this concern, which just came off the press, is full of peppery things pertaining to that part of the motion picture industry represented by the Boston Motion Picture Supply Company.

The demand for Simplex Projectors around this section was so great during the past week that the complete stock of machines was cleaned out and negotiations were made for motor truck transportation to bring another shipment of machines over the road in order to take care of the numerous important installations which were required.

Simplex About to Offer New Device

From one of the executives of the Precision Machine Company comes the news that on top of the many additions and features which have been evolved on the Simplex Machine, is one that will make a direct appeal to the Projectionist on account of its principle.

No further information was forthcoming concerning this feature other than that photographic and art work was being prepared for use in the customary position on the inside back covers of the various trade papers where a striking advertisement of this new feature will soon appear.

Simplex Factory Working Night Shifts

The sight of blazing windows illuminating the two upper floors of the huge factory at 317 East 34th Street has its answer in the report received from Simplex officials to the effect that during the past two weeks it has been necessary to work the factory force at night in order to successfully catch up with the many orders which have recently piled up, and at the same time take care of the almost overwhelming number of regular orders that are being daily received from the various Simplex distributors.

A recent order of forty-eight machines for foreign shipment which require special packing and attention, also added to the already bustling situation. Mr. E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, reports that extensive and elaborate plans are being made at the factory for an increase of production which the present large sales made imperative.

Hollywood Studios Incorporate and Build

Fifteen acres of land in Hollywood adjoining Santa Monica Boulevard carline has been purchased by a company incorporated as the Hollywood Studios, and on this a commercial plant will be erected. John Jasper, formerly general manager of Horsley studios and eighteen months general manager of Charles Chaplin studios, will be general manager, and part owner, and his associates in the enterprise are C. E. Toberman and C. W. Bradford.

The plans provide for a mission style of architecture throughout with four stages each 70 x 120 feet, steel with glass roof and walls. The studios will be built on a unit system which provides each producing company shall have its own offices, dressing rooms, editing rooms, and concrete film vaults. The stages will introduce some new features, one being that all or any part of any stage can be darkened to meet the needs of the producing company working thereon. The electric equipment will be housed in a separate building in the center of the four stages, as will also the projecting rooms. Carpenter shop will be housed in a building 40 x 250 feet, and in addition there will be a commercial laboratory and general offices for the company. Contract for the construction has been let to the Milwaukee Building Company who erected the Goldwyn and Ince plants at Culver city. This work will be supervised by Mr. Jasper, who is the builder of the Chaplin studios. It is planned the new plant will be ready for occupancy the first of May.

Philadelphia First National Moves Exchange

The old headquarters of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in Philadelphia proved to be entirely too small to handle the increasing business of that concern, and William Heenan, the Quaker City representative with his force, are now located in more comfortable and spacious quarters at No. 1339 Vine street. The new offices are equipped in a way that insures comfort for exhibitors who have business to contract and the office of Mr. Heenan is located where they can have easy access to it. When all the alterations are completed the First National will have one of the finest exchange offices in Philadelphia.

Bolshevist Film Not Propaganda

Select's Special "Bolshevism on Trial" Is Heralded as a Timely Spectacular and Gripping drama

SELECT officials believe that three-quarters of the world is in the throes of Bolshevism, and that the other quarter of the globe, including the United States, is massing huge armies of writers and speakers to fight the rapid increase of the dreaded power. They declare that their gripping drama, "Bolshevism on Trial," gives every promise of being the most-talked-of photoplay of the age.

Public and private institutions in this country, and every agency which the government has at its control, are said to be already lending their weight against the mighty wheel of education which serves to enlighten the people against the fearful malady of Bolshevism and lust.

It is asserted that newspapers are devoting entire pages in the general attack against the ravages of this new peril to the cause of humanity. The United States Intelligence Bureau in Washington is said to be mailing millions of letters to residents of every town and city.

"Not since the night when Paul Revere galloped through the villages of New England shouting 'To arms, to arms,' has there been such a general uprising of intellect against the nation's newest foe," says Select.

There is not a person in the United States with the power of understanding who has not read or heard about Bolshevism, and on top of this tremendous wave of public knowledge comes the announcement from Select of the release of the most psychological drama ever written on the screen.

Of all the specials ever offered to the nation's exhibitors, this is the most timely, Select declares, as it reaches the theatres at a moment when the fate of the entire world seems to hang in the balance of doubt. The pendulum of party power is slowly swinging—it may point to the progress or downfall of Bolshevism.

In "Bolshevism on Trial" there is said to be portrayed in the most compelling manner a suggestion of the perils that confront America in the event that this nation should be dominated by a Bolshevistic leader. It is described as a story which enthralls from beginning to end.

Nevertheless, Select's "Bolshevism on Trial" is not propaganda, they assert. It is not a preachment. It is not "made to order." It is not inspired or projected by any person or group of persons as a moulder of public opinion.

The United States government had no hand in the production of this mighty drama. It was made by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, and is based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "Comrades."

"Bolshevism on Trial" is purely fiction, but is said to be based on realities that can and may happen in any community in this country.

Reports Demand for "Better 'Ole"

World Film announces that the engagement at the Rose theatre, Chicago, of "The Beter 'Ole" in picturized form was productive of such good business that the Chicago office of World Pictures reported a demand for this feature that indicates a high-water mark of bookings. The Riviera theatre exhibited this attraction the week of March 31, followed by numerous other bookings in the most important theatres served by the Chicago exchange.

Hall Returns to American

Sherry Hall, long a member of the "Flying A" forces, has been mustered out of the American Air Service. He returned to Santa Barbara this week to resume his duties as assistant director to Roy Neill who has just started the production of "Trixie From Broadway," a new Margarita Fisher subject by Agnes C. Johnston, and Frank Howard Clark.

Emerson-Loos Tour the Cities

Paramount Pair Investigate Conditions and Make Addresses—Plan to Stop-Over at West Coast Plant of Organization

JOHN EMERSON and Anita Loos, who have been making satirical comedies for Famous Players-Lasky, are making a transcontinental tour of the states, investigating conditions relative to their future productions, it was announced this week. During their tour they will also give a series of talks and lectures in twenty of the largest cities on the value of the future motion pictures.

Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos left New York this past week on their way to the West Coast. They will stop in Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Seattle, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Dallas, New Orleans, Atlanta, Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and Boston, together with other cities en route. Their tour will comprise about five or six weeks, with a stay at the West Coast studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of about one week, where they will make their preparations for another comedy which is to be produced in the west by this couple during the early summer months.

Analyzing conditions most minutely, and being able to tell far in advance what the people really want, is one of the real reasons for the enormous success this combination have made for themselves. It has always been Mr. Emerson's hobby to study every detail of every phase of everything he attempts, and with the signing of the peace treaty soon at hand, he has felt that there undoubtedly has come a change in the minds of the exhibitors and motion picture lovers of the country.

"It was perfectly simple to see why the country as a whole wanted nothing but light stuff, comedy and satire, during the months of the war," Mr. Emerson stated in explaining why he was taking the trip with Miss Loos, "but isn't it reasonable to believe that they may have had enough of it by now, and that they may want to turn to deeper and more serious subjects.

"I don't know, but isn't it natural that they might want to do so? That's why I'm making this tour of investigation. I want to know, so that the future productions that I will make for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be simply what the public desires.

"When everyone else stuck strictly to comedy, Miss Loos and myself believed that satire was just the thing to be injected. That is why our first three Emerson-Loos productions for Famous Players-Lasky have been satires. The first, 'Come On In,' a satire on camp life; 'Good Bye Bill,' a satire on the ex-Kaiser's mustache; and 'Oh You Women,' our best production, which will soon be released, a satire on the homecoming of the boys.

"We will not only interview exhibitors, but business men, members of womens' and other clubs, school teachers, in fact every type of people who are interested in the advancement of the pictures of the future. We have worked out a system of classifying all of our investigations, so that when we return to New York in six or eight weeks, we will have such a well rounded idea of what the public and exhibitors want that we can begin working immediately on our future products. It is my firm belief that if every writer and director connected with the industry would take this same course to find out what is wanted, there would be a minimum of dissatisfactory criticisms of productions."

Outing-Chester Gets Cameraman

Willard Vanderveer, who expects to be released shortly from the U. S. Army, has been engaged as cameraman by Outing-Chester Pictures, it was made known this week. Sergeant Vanderveer has been in the photographic division of the A. E. F. He was with Outing-Chester before joining the army, and is responsible for the photography of "Pines Up and Palms Down."

Captain Robert Warwick Starts Production

"Secret Service" is now in the making at the Lasky Studios at Hollywood, and High Ford is directing the production from the scenario by Beulah Marie Dix.

Captain Robert Warwick, who will star in this famous drama of Civil War Times, by William Gillette, will be supported by a notable cast it is announced.

Among those to appear in the screen version of "Secret Service" are Shirley Mason, Theodore Roberts, Edythe Chapman, Irving Cummings, Robert Caine, Lillian Leighton, Guy Oliver and Casson Ferguson.

The Civil War simply serves as a background for the plot which concerns comparatively very few persons. There are no battle scenes and the play is "set" by a sort of prelude establishing the atmosphere at the time of the seige of Richmond.

"Who Cares?" Gets Her in Bad

A story was told in a Los Angeles paper recently of how a patron of Tally's Broadway theatre, one of the chain of theatres of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, misunderstood the girl from whom she purchased a ticket.

After buying the ticket the woman inquired: "What picture are you showing this week?"

The cashier handed the lady her change and said: "Who Cares?"

Then the fun began. The misunderstanding was eventually adjusted to the satisfaction of all concerned.

Martin Installs Curtains

Arthur Martin, of the Flagg Studios of Los Angeles and San Francisco, is now in Boise, Idaho, installing the new drop curtains and scenery in the Pinney theatre in that city. Mr. Martin will visit all the principal cities of the northwestern territory in the interests of the Flagg Studios.

Mary Miles Minter, in "The Intrusion of Isabel," American production

Claims It Is Miss Davies' Best Picture

According to a report from Select Pictures Corporation, Marion Davies' forthcoming Select attraction, "Getting Mary Married," in which she was directed by Allan Dwan, is the genuine article. In fact, Select declares "Getting Mary Married" is the best thing Miss Davies has ever done. It so completely eclipses her previous productions that there is no comparison. Miss Davies has seized an opportunity to show her worth, and under Mr. Dwan's direction she has exceeded even the highest expectations of her most ardent admirers, Select says.

"Getting Mary Married" was written expressly for Miss Davies by John Emerson and Anita Loos. It is a high-class comedy with a strong dramatic theme, dealing with the life of a young girl who is left to the mercies of arrogant and grasping relatives.

E. K. Lincoln Likes Role in "Desert Gold"

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that E. K. Lincoln, who recently arrived in Los Angeles to star in "Desert Gold," the first of the Zane Grey stories to be produced by the author's own company, Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., is enthusiastic over his role of "Dick Gale" in that production.

Ever since he first read "Desert Gold" Mr. Lincoln has wished he could play the leading role. It not only seemed to him a very powerful characterization, but one which suited himself particularly well. Mr. Lincoln is also very satisfied at the plan of production to be carried out by the Zane Grey Company.

"It looks as though a novel is really going to be put upon the screen at last," said Mr. Lincoln, "and it does me good to feel that I am going to have a big part in it."

Rothapfel's First Unit Program

Five of the Eight Numbers Constituting First Unit Program Are Completed—Trade Showing in May

A. J. Herbert, in Samuel L. Rothapfel's comedy number on the first Unit Program

With quality of production and detailed artistry, Samuel L. Rothapfel proposes to add distinctiveness in produce and personnel of characters.

It is announced that this is the very firm foundation upon which his Unit Program rests, the idea and the realization of the idea, and that both are distinctive. But distinction in the idea alone is far from satisfying Mr. Rothapfel's aims, it is said. Distinction in every detail is his goal.

The Rothapfel idea of art in motion pictures has been impressed upon the millions, particularly in his manner of exhibiting, it is said, and standing head and shoulders above everything, the Rothapfel idea of musical accompaniment is declared to have sounded a note new to the art of giving soulful expression to the silent drama.

Mr. Rothapfel has nearly completed the first Rothapfel Unit Program. The comedy number is finished. Many of the musical numbers have been arranged, and one specialty in the musical phase of the program, a paraphrase of "The Elegie," by Massenet, accompanying a picturization of same, is said to be one of the most novel numbers ever seen in connection with a motion picture theatre's program. E. Lloyd Sheldon did the scenario. It is titled "His Final Hour."

The comedy was written by George V. Hobart, one of America's best-known playwrights. Mr. Hobart wrote the script from a suggestion offered by Mr. Rothapfel. The working title is "Wild Flowers," subject to change. In the cast are seen Helen Weir, Yvonne Shelton, Templar Saxe, Walter McEwen, A. J. Herbert and Eugene Acker—all prominent screen or stage artists.

Announcement of the feature number on the program, a screen version of a play by E. Lloyd Sheldon, has not been made. Mr. Rothapfel, who is personally supervising this production and others on the program, has completed the first two reels and the working title only is known. With no one exception, the players are said to be decidedly popular, and have, by their many appearances in the silent drama, proved that they are entitled to the name of star.

The magazine number on the first program has been assembled and contains many interesting subjects, including scenes taken by Sergt. Owens, U. S. Marine Corps, exclusively for Mr. Rothapfel.

"The Lion's Den" Bought for Bert Lytell

Frederick Orin Bartlett's story, "The Lion's Den," has been purchased by Metro and is announced by Richard A. Rowland, Metro president, as the next screen vehicle for Bert Lytell, following the completion by that young star of "Blackie's Redemption" at the Metro studios in Hollywood.

Bartlett's story appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. It was made into a scenario by George D. Baker, who is also to direct Lytell in the new production.

Metro regards as a happy augury for the success of "The Lion's Den" the fact that in star, author and director, are again brought together the trio whose combined efforts were responsible for "The Spender."

Hackathorn with Brentwood Film

Sent Parcels Post for $1.00

The burning of fragrant incense is an ancient Oriental custom which has become very popular in America.

In the home its fragrance suggests purity and luxury. In the apartment it dispels the odor of cooking. In the sick room it refreshens and soothes. People who travel find it delightful for creating a fragrant atmosphere in the strange room.

Its charm is fascinating. A stick a day keeps the blues away.

Its subtle, delicate aroma soothes and charms the senses.

Just clip out this advertisement and pin a dollar bill to it, or send only your name and address with $1.00 enclosed. We will send you by Parcel Post 3 Boxes; 3 Varieties—Egyptian Lotus, Arabian Spice, and Orange Flower. Do it now.

Christie Sets Special for April 20

"Sally's Blighted Career" in Two Reels Presents Fay Tincher in Chief Role — Filming Requires Five Weeks

Al E. Christie has launched production of comedies in two reels

"SALLY'S BLIGHTED CAREER," the first of the Christie two-reel Special Comedies, has been completed under the direction of Al. E. Christie and will be released to the trade on April 20, bookings to be made through the chain of independent exchanges which have for a long time been handling the Christie one-reel comedies.

In addition to bringing Fay Tincher back to screen comedy, this first Special release will also introduce a special cast, including Molly Malone, who had attained considerable distinction as a leading woman in drama; Patricia Palmer, who plays featured leads in a number of the regular Christie pictures; Harry Depp, vaudeville and stage comedian; Marjorie Payne, Helen Darling and others.

In this first Special, Al. E. Christie has attempted to define his idea of screen comedy, the realization of which is made possible by branching out into the production of features in two reels. His desire is to present pictures of real people in humorous but not exaggerated situations, letting the plot tread its way merrily into fast farce, with now and then an incident which in motion pictures is termed "hokum."

The scenario of "Sally's Blighted Career" was written by W. Scott Darling from Walter Graham's original story. After Al. E. Christie had spent five weeks in the actual filming of the picture, he was assisted in cutting and titling by Darling, who has been added to the Christie forces. Darling has already written a number of original stories for Christie Comedies.

In presenting the first two-reel Special, the Christie firm has prepared many forms of exhibitors' aids, unusual in comedy presentation. Among these are special art lithographs, from drawings done by E. G. Klein, a Los Angeles artist; music scores which will give for the first time synchronized musical accompaniments for the showing of the comedy; and a house organ, issued monthly, a large part of which will be devoted to illustrative material which can be used in advertising the showing of the Christie Specials.

Vitagraph Sets New Anita Stewart Release

IN the wake of the reported success being scored by "From Headquarters," comes the announcement from Vitagraph that its second Anita Stewart production, "Two Women," has been set for release for the latter part of April.

"Two Women" has already been screened for a number of exhibitors and they have expressed themselves enthusiastically over the new possibilities for exploitation that the production offers.

The story is said to be an altogether different tale than the drama offered in "From Headquarters," a contrasting tale of the pure, unselfish love of one type of woman on one hand and of the faithless, fickle, selfish spirit of another type of woman. Most of the story is set in beautiful mountain country the sort of background that the author, James Oliver Curwood, uses so frequently and with such telling effect.

"Two Women" was directed by Ralph Ince and was edited by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester.

It is Vitagraph's contention, therefore, that "Two Women" offers exhibitors a production that throughout has been guided by master hands. There is, in the first place, the popularity of the star; the author, James Oliver Curwood, who has to his credit some of the biggest screen successes, is in himself an attraction; the direction of Ralph Ince assures a picture of the utmost dramatic quality, and the editing of Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester is a further guarantee of the style and finish of the production.

"Silver Girl" Scheduled for April 8

Edward Peple, author of the Broadway play, "The Silver Girl," has declared that the screen version, starring Frank Keenan, released April 8 by Pathe as an Extra Selected Star Photoplay, is the best adaptation of all of his stage productions thus far given to the screen. Technical reviewers have pronounced it a big production in craftsmanship and in emotional appeal.

"The Silver Girl" deals with the love story of a man well on in years and a friendless girl.

Pathe Review Shows Dream City

Pathe Review No. 7, released April 13, has been pronounced by educational authorities and exhibitors as one of the most diversified and interesting of the series thus far given. The Pathecolor scenic, "The Relics of Pomp and Power," is of added value now that Africa and the East are playing so large a part in the settlement of the world peace, and "empire" and "democracy" are familiar words in every discussion; for the once populous city of Timgad in North Africa was founded by the Roman Emperor Trajan when Rome promised to be the one great power to monopolize the sunlight of the world.

Mildred Harris Picture Gets a Name

"Home" is the permanent title given Mildred Harris' latest Jewel production directed by Lois Weber and to be released shortly. The story deals with the efforts of a young girl to enter society, of her experiences at the country home of a girl schoolmate, and the contrasts of the artificial society life and that of the girl's poor parents, who enjoy far more happiness in their humble surroundings than do the wealthy people who carry out a daily schedule of teas, dansants and entertainments.

"Rescuing Angel" Is Here

Shirley Mason in "The Rescuing Angel," was released by Paramount through the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges April 6, and is an adaptation of the play of the same name by Clare Kummer.

Edith Kennedy wrote the scenario, and Forrest Stanley, formerly of the Morosco and Pallas companies, has the male lead.

Miss Mason is said to be at her very best in depicting the role of the heroine of the story, a young girl who, in order to save her father from impending ruin, marries a man she does not know she loves.

Vitagraph offers Alice Joyce in "The Cambric Mask," said to have many thrills

Lays Aside One Story to Begin Another

J. A. Berst, president of the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., has been in the motion picture business for a great many years and, as an expert on the art of writing screen dramas, has had many experiences in the scenario writing line and with authors of motion picture plays; yet he considers an experience recently in Los Angeles as most unusual.

Tom J. Geraghty, a writer, submitted a story to Mr. Berst at his hotel. Mr. Berst promised to read it when he had the time. One evening he picked up the story and immediately became intensely interested in the same. He did not lay it down until he had read it from cover to cover. He called a conference in his hotel room which was attended by several experts including Dustin Farnum, Lee Ochs, vice-president of United, and Mr. Geraghty himself. Immediately it was planned to start the story at once and a play, which had been decided upon, was postponed and the new one entitled, "The Harvest of Shame," substituted.

"Island of Intrigue" Heads Schedule

Metro's first release, in the quartet of April features scheduled, was "The Island of Intrigue," starring May Allison.

The photodrama is a screen adaptation of Isabel Ostrander's popular novel of the same name, which, at the time of its publication was said to be one of the six best sellers, and in motion picture form is one of the six best productions of the month, according to Metro.

It is a story of love, romance and intrigue and has been deftly converted to the silent drama by June Mathis and A. S. Le Vino, of the Metro staff.

Mary Pickford Appears as Bold Buccaneer

In "Captain Kidd, Jr.," just released by Famous Players-Lasky as Mary Pickford's latest Artcraft production, the star is said to use the title merely as a basis for a series of odd adventures and a bonnie little romance with a treasure hunt and comedy galore.

Rida Johnson Young wrote the play from which the scenario was adapted by Frances Marion and the picture was directed by William D. Taylor. The photography is by Charles Rosher.

Pearson Film Comes May 18

It was announced this week by President Meyer of the Virginia Pearson Photoplays Company that May 18 has been scheduled as the release date, through Pathe, of the first Virginia Pearson feature, "The Bishop's Emeralds." Sheldon Lewis is in the supporting cast.

Work on the picture, it is announced, is advancing towards completion at the Thanhouser studio under the direction of Jack O'Brien.

Time Nears for New Pathe-Roland Serial

ADVENTURE, thrills, mystery and romance, the four big elements of the successful fiction story, are said to have been skilfully and grippingly blended in the forthcoming Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, which will be released on April 20, following the Pearl White serial, "The Lightning Raider." Advance showings of early episodes of the production have convinced reviewers and company officials alike that the House of Pathe has taken another long step in the perfection of the form of screen entertainment it has made famous—the serial.

In star and supporting cast, "The Tiger's Trail" leaves nothing to be desired, Pathe announces. Under the Pathe banner Ruth Roland has become one of the most popular serial heroines before the public, and she has an established reputation wherever serials are known. Miss Roland's previous serial, "Hands Up!" demonstrated her popularity, and was one of the most successful ever distributed by Pathe. As it drew to a close, exhibitors from all parts of the world began asking for another Ruth Roland serial, and it was this demand that resulted in the making of the new production. "The Tiger's Trail" will be the sixth Pathe serial in which Ruth Roland has been starred, those previous being "Who Pays?" "The Red Circle," "The Neglected Wife," "The Price of Folly" and "Hands Up!"

In the chief supporting role opposite Miss Roland is George Larkin, who was also her leading man in "Hands Up!"

Recommends Love Films for Matinees

Vitagraph contends, in an announcement this week, that no releases in recent months offer a better opportunity for exhibitors who are seeking to build up their matinee than do the Bessie Love pictures. "Not only her latest release, 'The Wishing-Ring Man,' but likewise her two earlier releases, 'The Enchanted Barn' and 'The Dawn of Understanding' are so thoroughly wholesome, so delightfully entertaining and withal so broad in their appeal that exhibitors are finding them as potent for their afternoon business as for the evening shows," said the announcement.

Good Chance for Him

Vitagraph's latest Harry T. Morey release, "Fighting Destiny," in addition to giving Vitagraph's star a typical "he-man" role, gives Morey the opportunity for a bit of what is considered the cleverest character work of his career and incidentally brings to the screen a new phase of underworld life.

The story of "Fighting Destiny" is founded on a Blue Book Magazine story, "Jungle Heart," by Stanley Shaw, and was directed by Paul Scardon.

"Tempest and Sunshine" Scores

Screen Version of Mary J. Holmes, Famous Novel, Registers with Stanley Booking Corporation for One Hundred Days

WHEN Frank M. Buehler, Managing Director of The Stanley Company of Philadelphia, saw "Tempest and Sunshine," he immediately booked it for one hundred days in the Stanley theatres.

Then the Comerford Circuit at Scranton quickly contracted for eighteen more days. Added impetus was given when the Chamberlain Circuit of Shamokin booked the film attraction for twelve days and the Jack Meyers Circuit at Williamsport took it for another dozen days.

J. Frank Hatch of Newark, New Jersey, owner of the World rights and the original negative, then began to wholly realize that his hunch was a good one. For, according to report, the big buyers along Broadway had not enthused. They had assumed a sort of lukewarm attitude, it is said, when suddenly Mr. Hatch, a former circus man and now owner of film exchanges at Newark, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Cincinnati, was inspired to buy the negative and World rights.

As a showman, he is said to have immediately recognized the array of exploitation-aids open to the exhibitor on "Tempest and Sunshine." Mr. Hatch says that he took into account the immense sale throughout the country of the popular novel.

Mary J. Holmes is the author of twenty popular novels, and Mr. Hatch felt that of all these "Tempest and Sunshine" was the best liked and most widely read. He estimates that more than fifty million have read the book or seen the play, and states that 20,000 copies of the book were sold and that it was produced on the stage 15,000 times.

The stage drama of "Tempest and Sunshine" has had long runs in all the leading cities and shorter runs in the smaller towns. It is said to have provided hundreds of repertoire companies with the best night of the week.

J. Frank Hatch first wanted to assure himself of the merits of the screen version. He declares that he found it a production worthy of the highest honor in the big film special class.

"The casting was perfect," declared Mr. Hatch. "Every one of the most likable roles in this immortal classic of the South was portrayed by a capable film actor or actress who seemed to fairly live the part.

"It is not only well acted and faithful to the story with the true Kentucky atmosphere but it is skilfully directed and consistently mounted in every set."

Twenty States have already been sold on "Tempest and Sunshine" and it is hailed by many experienced buyers as one of the few big and welcome surprises of the season.

Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Florida, New Jersey, Georgia, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, Texas, Mississippi, Arkansas, Oklahoma, Maryland, District of Columbia, Alabama and Wisconsin were sold before March 25.

Hiller and Wilk are the selling agents for Mr. Hatch, and the production is in six reels.

World Acquires Two Pioneer Features

A deal is announced by M. H. Hoffman, of the Pioneer Film Corporation, whereby the World Film Corporation gain control for certain territory of two of the big Pioneer features.

The territorial rights to "Wives of Men," the big feature starring Florence Reed, for Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota, have been acquired by World. The same territory on "The Still Alarm" was also bought by the World Film Company.

The United States rights to "Little Orphant Annie," the filmization of James Whitcomb Riley's famous poem, with the exception of the State and City of New York, were also sold by Pioneer to the World Corporation.

Judging from the way in which "Little Orphant Annie" is booking in the New York territory, Mr. Hoffman says that he is assured that the picture is worthy of greater exploitation. He has therefore arranged to give it an elaborate billboard showing and boost it on big lines.

Says Houdini Serial Goes Strong in South

REPORTS received from the South by Octagon Films, Inc., on the B. A. Rolfe serial, "The Master Mystery," starring Houdini, are said to indicate an unparalleled artistic and financial serial success.

The Company states that a report has just been received from the Criterion Film Service, of Atlanta and New Orleans, which is distributing the production in North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, Mississippi and Louisiana.

"In every theatre where Houdini is playing the serial is going over big," the report of the Criterion Film Service reads, "Among the notable instances is the Piedmont Theatre of Charlotte, N. C., one of the finest vaudeville houses in the South. The owner and manager of the house, G. W. Pryor, writes us that Houdini has increased his business $100 every day that "The Master Mystery" has been shown.

"Another example is the Signal Amusement Company, whose headquarters are in Chattanooga, Tenn. This company owns and operates eight theatres in Chattanooga and Knoxville, and we have a contract with them for both towns.

"A big contract we hold is with the Saenger Amusement Company, of New Orleans, La., which will probably use Houdini in twenty or twenty-five of their theatres. One of their houses is the Liberty, regarded as among the finest in the South.

"Formerly a losing proposition, the Saenger Amusement Co. acquired it and put in the Houdini as one of its big weekly attractions, with the result that the house is now on a paying basis, according to Mr. Richards, the general manager of the company."

Bowers an Old Timer

Arthur Bowers, casting director for Samuel L. Rothapfel, has been on Broadway for twenty-five years in the capacities of actor, stage director and technical man, and was stage director at the Metropolitan Opera House for several seasons. Mr. Bowers defies anyone to name a theatre of any prominence from here to the Coast in which he has not acted in one of the above capacities.

Weeks Leaves for Coast

C. A. Weeks, treasurer of the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., and Great Authors Pictures, Inc., has left New York for a flying trip to Los Angeles, where he will confer with B. B. Hampton, president of the two organizations, and other associates in the western offices of these companies.

The Zane Grey company is now completing, as the first of its series of special productions, an adaptation of one of Mr. Grey's most popular books, "Desert Gold." At the same time there is being made on the coast by the Great Authors Pictures, Inc., "The Westerner," from Stewart Edward White's book of the same title.

Sells "Wives of Men"

Supreme Photoplays, Inc., of Denver, has bought the rights for "Wives Of Men" for Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico from the Pioneer Film Corporation of New York City.

The Greater Features, Inc., of Seattle, has the rights for this feature in Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

Hall Heads Four Large Organizations

"Youngest Man" in Industry to Control This Number of Big Concerns—Tells the Why and Wherefore of Each—Has Every Confidence in Rothapfel Program and Promises Bigger Things

NOTHING succeeds like success, and it is contended this axiom has never been better illustrated than by the activities of Frank G. Hall during the past year. Holding the distinction of being the youngest man in the industry to stand as promoter and executive head of four of the trade's largest most successful corporations—Independent Sales Corporation, The Film Clearing House, The Film Finance Corporation and Rothapfel Picture Corporation, all of which companies Mr. Hall is the creative and managing head—he has earned the distinction attributed to him by hard plugging. His success is marked by rapid strides during the space of only a few months and the corporations for which he stands, speak for themselves. They are recognized in the motion picture world as big, doing big things and rendering service and product that have stood the test. Each day shows advancement, improvement and greater scope, and with creation of the Rothapfel Picture Corporation and the realization of its intentions, Mr. Hall has added a strength, the progressive force of which is yet to be determined, but in which both he and Samuel L. Rothapfel have the greatest confidence and ask only that the motion picture world wait and judge for itself. One of the prime reasons for Mr. Hall's success is due to his insistence in keeping in close touch with every phase of the motion picture industry.

Rothapfel Unit Program

Mr. Hall was asked by a representative of the NEWS to tell the why, wherefore and accomplishments of each of the four corporations for which he was sponsor and of which he is executive head, and in the following interview he answers:

"Since Rothapfel Picture Corporation is the latest spoke to radiate from the wheel whose circumstance incloses the activities concerning which you ask, I assume that you would like to be enlightened on this first. As a matter of fact, I am going to say little about this for I would prefer to have Mr. Rothapfel talk of his one big ambition, now partially realized. He's a pretty busy man during these days but I'm sure that if you can see him "between the acts" at the Bacon-Backer studio where he is holding the megaphone over the cast of players now creating the roles of his first big feature for the Rothapfel Unit Program, he will tell you what he has done, what he is going to do and concerning the results expected. I, for one, expect big things but would rather wait and let the things speak for themselves. And, believe me, they are going to speak in stentorian tones when they make their debut on the screen. This much I will say about the Rothapfel Unit Programme.

"I conceived the idea several years ago, when I first became acquainted with Mr. Rothapfel at the time he was president of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, with which company I was also connected, having the franchise for New Jersey. I was always a great admirer of Mr. Rothapfel. I thought his idea of presenting pictures was so far in advance of anything else I had ever seen, that I used to go to the theatre each week to see what he was offering new, and I was never disappointed.

"When I learned that Mr. Rothapfel resigned from the Rivoli and Rialto theatres, and there was a rumor he was going into the production field, I immediately placed the idea before him. He was so taken with it, that it just took me four days to make the Rothapfel Picture Corporation a reality with Mr. Rothapfel as its president. He is giving his entire time and attention to the producing of his first unit, which will be ready for distribution some time in May. If I am any judge and I think I should be from the experience I have had as an exhibitor, he is going to give to the exhibitors of the United States the most unique and highest class entertainment of motion pictures ever presented in any theatre.

Frank G. Hall, of Independent Film Corporation

"We are going to present the Rothapfel Unit Programme in New York at a trade showing, and the manner in which it will be presented will be just as unique as the whole idea. Mr. Rothapfel is handling the producing end and the sales end comes under my supervision. The help that we are going to give the exhibitor in bringing this to the attention of their patrons is going to be something entirely different from anything that has ever been offered or suggested by any company.

Why I Branched Out

"I am satisfied that the pictures, which I acquired and put out on a percentage arrangement with various distributors, were good, but when they left my hands they were beyond my control as far as selling them to exhibitors was concerned, and the uncertain gains and the more frequent losses I sustained, proved to me the fallacy of this plan. I decided if sound business principles were applied to the picture industry, there would be no reason why it could not be a continuous success. I saw success if I could concentrate all my efforts on the distributing end of the business.

"The first idea was the Film Clearing House, Inc., which came into existence October 30, 1918, and by December 1, 1918, we had in operation throughout the United States, eighteen units. The Film Clearing House was organized for the sole purpose of providing Independent producers or groups of producers, who maintained their own sales force, an agency through which they could have their films shipped and inspected and their rentals collected and turned over to them weekly. In order to get the product, it would be necessary to furnish a sales organization, hence the existence of the Independent Sales Corporation.

Sales and Finance

"I figured that if the plan was good, we would be doing business with a number of different producing companies, and I wanted to have sales forces that would be independent of each other, so that if one man had a star series and he wanted so many salesmen to handle his product, we could contract with him for a certain number to sell this series and so with any other concern, and all would be sold on an independent basis.

"To get the class of pictures, to distribute, the producers stated that if I could arrange to finance the cost of prints and make them an advance on the cost of production so that they could go ahead and continue to complete additional pictures, they would be willing to place their product with us for sale and distribution and for that reason I formed the Film Clearing House. It might be termed a private banking company. This company makes contracts with producers and agrees to advance them sufficient money for the cost of the positive prints and in addition pay the producer a fair portion of the negative cost. This allows the producer to continue his production, without loss of time, which ordinarily comes with the state righting of the picture, so the Film Finance Corporation now has a contract with the Film Clearing House and the Independent Sales Corporation to have the pictures which they acquire sold and distributed by them throughout the world.

"White Heather" Claims Unusual Features

UNUSUAL interest is said to center in the forthcoming release of Maurice Tourneur's latest production, "The White Heather," adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama.

There are said to be a number of unique features to "The White Heather," not the least of which are the scenes taken at the bottom of the ocean and which provide the big punch of the melodrama. These scenes were taken by Mr. Tourneur off San Pedro Harbor by means of the remarkable invention of the Williamson brothers which makes sub-sea photography possible. This invention, utilized so successfully in "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" and "The Submarine Eye," has been still further developed by the Williamsons. Under water photography is now perfect by means of this device, which was built especially for Mr. Tourneur at great expense to make the filming of "The White Heather" possible and utilized off the California coast. The results are said to be startling to the last degree.

"The White Heather" is declared to be the first instance of a motion picture being actually directed on the ocean floor. Mr. Tourneur donned a deep sea diver's suit and directed his players at the bottom of the sea by means of signals.

Not only is "The White Heather" said to possess greater punch than Mr. Tourneur's melodramatic "Sporting Life," but it possesses greater and broader appeal. "The White Heather" tells a story not only of tremendous interest to men but to women as well. It lies far from the world of sports, the romance being one of the Scotch highlands and the sea. It is a story of remarkable contrasts, too, revolving between the upper strata of Scotch nobility and the lower dregs of the London underworld.

Schlank Completes Capital Exchanges Tour

AFTER a trip over the entire chain of Capital Exchanges, Ike Schlank, president of the Capital Film Company, returned to the Indianapolis headquarters last week. He states that he traveled fully 6,000 miles on the tour.

With considerable enthusiasm, Mr. Schlank offers his decision that the entire country now is in the most healthy way from the motion picture standpoint, since the inception of the screen.

Mr. Schlank's first stop was made at Kansas City, where he states that he found a more prosperous condition than has been known for years. Every picture theatre in town was doing capacity business, and every manager accordingly very affable and optimistic.

Speaking of Minneapolis and St. Paul, the energetic "Capital" president described the twin cities as enjoying the greatest boom in its history, with practically every town of the northwest being swept along in a similar tide of prosperity.

"It seems," states Mr. Schlank, "that practically every section of the country is flourishing as never before. Of course, there are spots here and there that the prosperity of peace times has not yet visited, but they are few and far between."

Mr. Schlank's visit was in the interest of Capital's new policy of "foremost stars in short features." According to reports the avalanche of contracts from the various branches caused Mr. Schlank to immediately make a complete survey to see whether conditions really warranted an elaboration of the Capital program, the issuance of more releases each week, and the possibilities of strengthening, as far as possible, all advertising aids to the exhibitor.

Osso Forms Company with Miss Cassinelli

ADOLPHE OSSO, who recently promoted the organization of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., has organized a second producing company to make pictures featuring Dolores Cassinelli.

"Miss Cassinelli's latest production, in which she was starred, is the patriotic drama, "The Unknown Love," which is being released by Pathe; and it is said that her contribution to that picture is a noteworthy one. "The Cameo Girl" will be at the head of the new company, which will operate under the name of the Cameo Pictures Corporation.

By special arrangement with Albert Capellani, he will direct Miss Cassinelli and supervise the productions, and although the Cameo Pictures Corporation and the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., will operate independently of each other, he will serve both companies. This arrangement is indeed a happy one, inasmuch as Miss Cassinelli will be in a position to avail herself of Mr. Capellani's successful experience, and especially enjoy the benefit of his particularly unique ability to enable an actress to register the maximum values of a dramatic situation.

Miss Cassinelli's company will commence work immediately at the Capellani studio in Fort Lee, where the great French director is producing "Oh, Boy," the first of his own company's special productions for release through Pathe, it being the first of a series of Capellani Productions featuring June Caprice and Creighton Hale.

McCutcheon and Seay to Gray Seal Productions

Announcements have been made by George Julian Houtain, President of Gray Seal Productions, of the appointment of John L. McCutcheon to succeed Richard Turner as Manager of Productions.

President Houtain also stated that he has engaged Charles Morgan Seay to direct Myrtle Stedman in these productions.

Mr. Seay has been with the Edison, Vitagraph and World, and has also produced many educational subjects according to report.

Aywon Films Announces Fifteen Features

Fifteen five-reel features will be released by Aywon Film Corporation, according to an announcement of Nathan Hirsh, president of that organization.

The first three releases will be "The Eternal Penalty," with Christine Mayo and Henry Kolker; "Roses and Thorns," with the famous Belasco star, Lenore Ulric, in the stellar role, and "In the Days of Daring," starring Tom Mix, the noted cowboy actor. All of these are described as dramas of the most absorbing kind, full of punch, thrills and tense dramatic scenes, well produced and enacted by capable casts.

On each of the fifteen releases it is announced that there will be available a full line of paper and advertising accessories, all prepared by experts and designed with the one idea of increasing business.

This is heralded as especially attractive advertising matter that will prove a great help to exhibitors if used properly.

In the New York territory Mr. Hirsh will handle his own bookings. At the present time he is booking "Beyond the Law" in New York state and the feature is said to be booking well and proving a most dependable box-office attraction.

Diggs Prepares Press Sheets and Posters

To aid the exhibitor in placing "When My Ship Comes In" and "When a Woman Strikes," the two latest specials announced by Frank Hall for the 10-20-30 series of Independent Sales Corporation's releases, Lynn S. Card, general sales manager, and Harry P. Diggs, of the exploitation department, have prepared distinct press sheets, heralds, posters, throw-aways and a complete line of accessories on these two subjects. The campaign is distinguished from others prepared on Independent Sales' releases of this series in that it has been made more comprehensive and more attention has been paid to detail. These advertising aids have been placed in the hands of all of the Independent branch managers.

"The 10-20-30 series of special productions is the result of an idea I conceived several years ago before I entered the distributing field. Thirty dollars does not mean first run, but it means that this price prevails for about the first eight weeks, and in such cities as New York, Chicago, Philadelphia and Boston, "day and date" runs are booked. After it is eight weeks old, it becomes in the $20 class. I mean eight weeks after the first run has played, or eight weeks for any particular zone or teritory, then after a specified period it automatically goes in the $10 class. Under this plan we have already signed up over 2,800 exhibitors, and we are adding daily new accounts, which I hope in a short time, will reach the four thousand mark. I have been careful to select pictures of exceptional box office value for this series and every exhibitor who has played our pictures to date, has been satisfied. The best proof of that is, we have not received one cancellation.

Serials to Be Released

"It is my intention to release this year about forty-eight productions. I have not contracted for all of these, but within the next month I hope to have all the ends tied up and be off for business early in the summer.

"In addition to feature productions, I am going to arrange for two big serials, and twelve comedies."

Alex Tenenholtz, leading man in "Khavah," first of the Sholem Aleichem pictures

Post Pictures Engages Paul Swan

A contract has been signed by Paul Swan, who has had a most extraordinary amount of publicity as "the world's most perfect man," to appear in a series of feature photoplays with the Post Pictures Corporation. This corporation has up to now become well known in trade circles for travel and scenic pictures.

The pictures starring Paul Swan will be based on this artist's varied talents.

Claims Screen Story Sells the Book

In an announcement issued this week by Frohman Amusement Corporation, of which Wiliam L. Sherrill is president, it is declared that the screen production of "Once to Every Man" has helped materially in selling the published book version of the story. "Once to Every Man," in its screen form, is being sold on the state rights basis.

In the State of Michigan, during the past three weeks, and since "Once to Every Man" opened at the Majestic Theatre in Detroit, the local book-stores have re-ordered one full edition, and the duplicate orders to the publishers from New England, Western Pennsylvania and the Southeastern territory have compelled Grosset & Dunlop to re-print two additional editions.

Gale Henry Comedies to Bee Hive Exchanges

R. C. Cropper, general manager of the Bee Hive Exchanges, has acquired the Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin rights for the Gale Henry Comedies. Gale Henry is declared to be the latest comedy discovery in Los Angeles.

Vincent Bryan is writing some of her scenarios, and the first three, titled "A Slavie," "Cash," and "Wild Women," are now on the way to the exchanges. They will be in two reels and released every other week.

Fox Studio Doings

The "between-pictures" calmness at the Fox studio ended early the week of March 29th when all producing units became active, three starting on new plays.

William C. Dowlan, formerly director of Mary Miles Minter at the American following a long experience at Universal, where he directed Carter deHaven and others, has been engaged by the Fox organization, and this week began the filming of a story starring Peggy Hyland. The title has not been selected. Dev Jennings is in charge of the photographic work of this company.

Mr. Dowlan succeeds Lynn Reynolds who resigned after almost a year with the Fox organization in order that he could devote several months to the making of subjects for the independent field. Reynolds will shortly begin the production of these subjects he has in mind. While with the Fox organization he directed a series of six western pictures starring Tom Mix, and for the past several months has been director of Peggy Hylan.

"The High Flame," a story by Evelyn Campbell, has been adopted for the screen by Dennison Cliff, and is the vehicle for Madlaine Traverse, now being filmed under the direction of Harry Millarde. A cast that includes William Conklin, borrowed from Thomas H. Ince for this picture, with Clyde Fillmore and Claire DuBrey will suppotr Miss Traverse in this film.

Charles Kenyon has written an original story and continuity for the same titled "The Romance of Cow Hollow," to be produced by Arthur Rosson starring Tom Mix. The story will take Mix and his troop in the photoplay to New York City. Juanita Hansen is to be leading woman of the troop.

According to schedule made by the Fox studio management, three directors are to be retained for two stars, Tom Mix and Gladys Brockwell. The three directors are Edward J. LeSaint, Arthur Rosson and Frank Beal, and they will alternate in the making of subjects with these two principals.

About Metro Players

Fay Tincher, who returns to comedy in the first Christie special

Fully two-thirds of the Metro studio's mammoth stage was needed this week for a setting representing the interior of a large metropolitan theatre required for scenes in the Nazimova production "The Brat." This setting does not represent any theatre of to-day, but was designed by M. P. Stantcup, art director of the Metro studios, and is something on the order of the Winter Garden type. Stage, fly galleries, proscenium arch, auditorium, boxes, foyer and lobby were included in the setting. In fact, there was everything there from the back wall of the stage to the line in front. When scenes were taken, more than 600 extra people were used. This week will see the last scenes for "The Brat" filmed, the theatre setting being the last one required for this production being filmed by Director Herbert Blache.

In addition to Alice Lake, leading woman, Joseph Kilgore and Gus Phillips will be the principal players in support of Bert Lytell in "The Lion's Den" now being directed by George D. Baker, who prepared the continuity for the film play from the story by Fredrich Oren Bartlett, who was author of Lytell's success "The Spender."

Vitagraph News Bits

From Eureka, California, comes a call to the Vitagraph studio for some Southern Californian sunshine, as the Vitagraph Company producing unit headed by Bessie Love and directed by David Smith, has been at this northern location more than two weeks, and there have been but two days in which they could make pictures because of unfavorable weather conditions. The Vitagraph company is using exterior locations in the lumber region.

After eight weeks in the snow-capped mountain district near Truckee, California, the Vitagraph Company making the "Perils of Thunder Mountain" serial, returned to Los Angeles March 22nd with all snow scenes needed for the fifteen episode serial which will co-star Tony Moreno and Carol Holloway. Wm. J. Bowman directed the making of the exterior scenes, but from now on he will have the co-operation of Donald Bradbury in the production of the remaining scenes which will include many exteriors and all of the interiors of the fifteen two-reel releases. Besides the principals in this cast Jack Waltemeyer, Kate Price and George Stanley were in the north for the eight-week period.

William Duncan and company filming "The Man of Might," have returned from two weeks on the Pacific where they cruised about in a two-masted schooner. The marine scenes will be used in all episodes from the eleventh to fifteenth, inclusive. The entire company experienced some undesirable conditions due to "heavy" weather.

Universal Newsettes

The Universal Company has added two more directors to its already big staff increasing the total to fifteen, the most recent additions being Al Santell and Eric Von Stroheim. Santell is a former comedy director associated with American, Kalem, Universal and National, who has just been discharged from the army after service of more than a year. He will make a series of comedies, the first of which is titled "One Lovely Night," and will offer as its featured player, Josephine Hill, who succeeded Lila Lee in Gus Edwards' song review "School Days."

"The Pinnacle" is the name given a feature play written and now being produced by Von Stroheim, who appeared as the heavy in "The Heart of Humanity," following work in D. W. Griffith and Douglas Fairbanks subjects. This play was written by Von Stroheim, and the cast selected includes Kathrine Adams, late leading woman for Earle Williams, Sam DeGrasse, and the director himself will play an important part. Reeves Eason is to be the assistant and co-director.

R. S. Sturgeon has begun the direction of the production of Bayard Veiler play "The Chatter Box," which is to star Priscilla Dean. Francis MacDonald will be the leading man, and the cast includes George McDaniels, Gertrude Astor, Joseph Swickard and Claire Greenwood.

Complete cast selected to support Dorothy Phillips in her coming production being filmed by Allen Holubar includes Robert Anderson and William Stowell as leading men, both of whom supported her in her recent success "The Heart of Humanity." In this subject titled "The Light," Miss Phillips will play a dual role.

Rhea Mitchell, late leading woman for William S. Hart, has joined Universal.

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

The cast for "Secret Service," the Paramount-Artcraft Production being made by Hugh Ford from the play of the same name by William Gillette, has been announced, and contains a big array of noteworthy players. Capt. Robert Warwick will appear in the role of Louis DuMont; Wanda Hawley will be leading woman, appearing as Edith Varney; Theodore Roberts, General Randolph; Capt. Ferguson, Wilfred Varney; Edith Chapman, Mrs. Varney; Raymond Hatton, Morgan Varney; Robert Caine, Henry DuMont; Irving Cummings, Arreford, and Guy Oliver, Jonas the negro. Jo Boyle is the assistant director, and William Marshall the photographer. This play, based upon the happenings within the city of Richmond during the siege, will have a number of remarkable settings, all of which have been built. Those who are not familiar with the story of this play have gained the wrong impression that it is a war drama, all of which is erroneous, inasmuch as it merely shows life within the city while the northern troops were about it.

The Lila Lee Company, being directed by Irvin Willatt, has gone to Truckee; and James Cruze with Wallace Reid and company are back at the studio making the interiors for "The Valley of Giants"—a story laid in lumber region of northern California—after spending four weeks in timber camps. The troop brought back with them many stories of narrow escapes, runaway trains, etc., which gave them harrowing experiences during the filming.

Ethel Clayton is on a month's vacation, and has gone to New York to spend this time with friends.

The C. B. deMille play from the Edgar Selwyn story "For Better For Worse," is now receiving its final cutting.

Here and There

Clarence G. Badger will begin directing the Jerome J. Jerome play "The New Lady Bancock," with Madge Kennedy as star. John Bowers is to be Miss Kennedy's leading man, and Herbert Standing will appear in the principal character role

Having completed the scenario and working script for the next Rex Beach film, the cast for this subject was selected this week, and includes Clara Horton and Cullen Landis as leads, with Sidney Ainsworth, Walter MacNamara, Ernest Spencer, Colin Kenny, Wilson Taylor, Billy Bennett, and Hallen Colley in the supporting cast. Reginald Barker, who has directed three Beach subjects, will be in charge of filming this photoplay.

The Universal Film Company has decided to secure travelogue and scenic subjects from the Orient, and with this end in view have engaged William F. Alder to make a tour of the Indian Ocean Islands. Alder leaves the latter part of April with the expectation of being on the trip more than a year. He will be accompanied by Eddie Laemmle, who will serve as his assistant.

W. E. Atkinson, manager of Metro Exchange system, arrived in Los Angeles March 21st while on a tour of the country on which he is visiting all exchanges of the Metro.

William S. Hart has been supplied with another suitable story by Charles Alden Selzer, author of "Riddle Gawne," and Mr. Hart and Company left this week for Victorville, 150 miles north of Los Angeles on the desert, where exteriors will be made. The new play is titled "Square Deal Sanderson," and has a very complicated plot, Hart masquerading as the brother of a girl who owns a large cattle ranch and is being harrassed by other ranch owners who wish to secure her property. How the girl finally learns that Hart is not her brother, makes an interesting climax. Lambert Hillyer picturized the story which appeared in Argosy magazine, and the direction is being done by Hillyer and Mr. Hart. Ana Little plays the feminine lead, the heavies are Frank Whitson and Edwin Wallock, and an important part is taken by Lloyd Bacon.

Director Scott Dunlap has been making good progress in the filming of "Words and Music," co-starring Albert Ray and Elinor Fair.

On the Fox comedy studio lot a new director is at work. He is Frank Griffin, former director of Sennett Keystone and Paramount comedies, and he is at work on a scenario written by Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of the comedy department. Slim Summerville, Ethel Teare, Dave Morris and other will known comedy players are to appear in this subject.

Director Jack Blystone is making the final scenes for a comedy titled "Footlight Maids."

May Allison is to be seen in her next play, at present titled "His Father's Wife," as a Swiss singer who is deserted by her sweetheart who comes to America. She follows him and becomes a Broadway success in one of the New York roofs, where she is sought by her former sweetheart whom she makes believe is her stepson, by the story that she has married his father. Henry Otto will be the director and Walter Percival plays the male lead.

APRIL 12, 1919 NEWS MORE NEWS

Almost fair.

Spring is almost upon us.

Albert E. Smith's in town.

W. E. Atkinson's in our village.

Al Ray had the grippe this week.

Richard Roland, the Metro chief is out west.

Even if Arizona is dry, it is not to be movieless.

There is much talk about a high jinks to be held April 24th.

George Hackathorn was a caller at HOOKUM office this week.

Doug. Fairbanks has moved. Melrose avenue is the new address.

Fritzi Brunete, Mitchell Lewis' leading woman, admits she has a new hobby-making perfume.

Madge Kennedy has come back to the west with five trunks of new gowns and she arrived in Los Angeles Home Products week.

Since Bill Hart had his head shave for convict scenes, he is said to have gotten along extremely well without the use of hair tonic.

This publication was advised that the B. B. of B. B. Features stands for Bessie Barriscale, and we herewith thank the giver of this information.

Bill M. Ritchey has come out flatfooted against the eight hour law, and therefore you will understand that Bill is not an actor, but a scenarioist.

Mr. Jones of Jones, Lennick & Schaefer, Chicago, spend two weeks in Los Angeles with the First Nationalites in January, and now he's back for an indefinite stay.

Hoping to get a lot of good ideas, the editor of HOOKUM contemplates at some early date, sending the star reporter to Culver City to interview Mister Samuel Goldwyn.

Transactions with film exchange salesmen is briefly summed up by Jack Calicott of Grauman's as follows: "Ask $100, wants $80, will take $60, I'll give $40, but offer $20."

Being interviewed on the national question, "Scoop" Corlon insists that he be quoted as emphatically against the enforcement of the prohibition constitutional amendment.

Tully Marshall on being stopped by a speed cop, advised that a friend of his was dying of convulsions (meaning his Director, Reignald Barker), because he was ten minutes late.

Mabel Normand called on the nurse at the Goldwyn sudio hospital this week with her eye in a sling, and asked to have her eyelashes combed out as they were so badly tangled.

Our town had a "home products parade" this week, and Tom Mix came down the street with his black and white overcoat, and it drowned out the strains of six bands and a drum corps, singly and collectively.

Gene Allen says that regardless of the fact that the Hart Company will be on location two Saturdays on the desert, the church wagon will move with clock-like regularity and pay-day will be observed on Saturday as usual

Hugh Ford got all fussed up this week because he had about sixty stars to direct at one time, but he said the sea wasn't very heavy, and from what we heard, there wasn't any temperament displayed, those present all being Lambs.

J. Gordon Edwards always says this speech when everything is in readiness for the taking of a scene: "quiet, music, camera." But on location the other day, he had several thousand extras who would not heed his command—they were sheep.

Adam Hull Shirk was taken unawares at an exhibitors' luncheon and asked to make a speech, and being a magician, as well as a publicity writer, he made a confession that he was not there with the goods, and so he could not do any tricks for them.

S. E. Schlager, who has been writing pieces for the paper about Universal people and celluloids, has been promoted. In the future he is to give his time only to serial company promotion and publicity, succeeding the profaner of typewriters, Ike St. John.

Bob Dillon, who used to write comedy scenarios and others, has stepped right out into the open with a play for the speaking stage titled "Crooked Crooks," which is to see the light of day through Oliver Morosco's company shortly. Its a three act farce, and Bob guarantees a laugh in every act.

Ben Grimm, who has just wandered back from the aero service in Honolulu, is authority for the statement that the best hulu dancers are on Broadway, and that he hasn't heard any real ukulele music since he left his eastern shore—meaning a place in the vicinity of the roof gardens.

When Bill Farnum came west, it was with the understanding he was to make pictures in Los Angeles, but he has found it convenient to spend most of his time at Palm Springs. Our Chamber of Commerce would like to know what the Palm Springs chamber of commers has done to keep Bill up at that almost forsaken place.

Lou Anger says that every ingenue must have a fad or fancy and so he has chosen ice cream for his hobby. Yes, he'll eat a quart at a time. The other day he had a twelve inch plate heaped up with all it would hold, and made a bet he could eat it all, and then collected the money, but not until after it was disclosed that the mound was greatly taken up by cans of sardines. Yes, Lou faked on them a little.

Our city council was extremely good to the film industry this week, inasmuch as they found it convenient to enlarge one of the zones in Hollywood in which studios may be built and maintained. The enlargement consists of a graveyard, and now people of the industry want to know why the city fathers thought any actor could be induced to work there.

HOOKUM has received a serial poem from our neighbor, Dick Willis, down the hall, and we're going to put it up to our readers as to the number of episodes we shall release. This week will come the first. If there are any demands, we'll give you another, and if the applause is sufficient, we'll come back as many times as the riotous noise making seems to insure. Here's the first:

Characters cameo-cut,
Farmhand, bookworm, jay,
Hero out of mutt;
Who? Ray.

Let's see if you can stand another. Spring is here.

Prizma Moves to Twenty-third Street

Prizma, Incorporated, producers of the Prizma Master Pictures in Nature's colors, has outgrown its quarters at 11 East 14th street and has made arrangements to move its executive offices on April 1 to 71 West 23rd street, where it has leased the entire fourteenth floor.

The present offices of the company are in the old Van Buren Estate at 11 East 14th street, which is of considerable historical interest in the moving picture business and has been the home of several notable successes.

At one time it was the home of the old Biograph Company. Here Mary Pickford, Bobby Harron, Lillian and Dorothy Gish and others made some of their first pictures, and here D. W. Griffith laid the foundation for his later successes.

The work of enlarging the Prizma laboratories at 3193 Boulevard, Jersey City, in order to provide facilities for meeting the demand for prints, is being carried on rapidly under the supervision of Mr. William V. D. Kelley, inventor of the Prizma processes, and quantity production is assured within a short time.

Re-engaged by Universal

Ben Wilson, who with Neva Gerber was featured in the Universal series, "The Voice on the Wire," "The Mystery Ship," and in divers other productions, and who is one of the olders actors of the cinema studios, has been re-engaged by Universal and will begin work in comedy productions immediately.

Brentwood Comedy Makes Progress on Coast

The new Brentwood comedy drama, "Better Times," King W. Vidor directing, is now well under process of production. The cast is made up of players widely known for their work in many of the biggest successes of the screen. It was chosen in accordance with the Brentwood's policy that the perfect fitness of each player for his part and the perfect balance of the cast as a whole should outweigh the importance of nationally known names.

For "Better Times," King Vidor has a cast comprising Jack McDonald of Slap Jack fame in "The Spoilers," and the Mr. Taine of Harold Bell Wright's "Eyes of the World"; Za Su Pitts, the pathetic Slavey, with Mary Pickford in the "Little Princess"; Hugh Fay coming from two years' work in many Fox productions; David Butler, the Mons. Le Bebe of "The Greatest Thing in Life"; W. P. (Billy) De Vaull, the Old Nelse of "The Clansman," prominent in other Griffith productions and in the two recent productions of H. B. Walthall; George Hackathorn, the youngest son in "Heart of Humanity," and with Jack Pickford in Mark Twain pictures; also a number of attractive screen society buds for scenes of a modern fashionable young ladies' school.

Hodupp Again with Pathe

V. H. Hodupp is again connected with Pathe Exchange, Inc., in an important capacity after a brief absence. He entered the organization in May, 1914, as a salesman for the Pathe News in Jersey City. Later he was appointed salesmen out of the Syracuse office, and after several months' service in this capacity he was appointed branch manager of the Syracuse office. In 1915 Mr. Hodupp was appointed branch manager of the Chicago Exchange, and after more than a year was called into the home office and appointed as special representative.

His new duties will call upon him to visit the various exchanges to inspect the poster and shipping departments and put them into first-class condition. He will also install the sales control and see that it is being kept up to date at all times; also it will be to install the perpetual inventory on posters, which Pathe is confident will prove beneficial to every exchange.

Kitty Gordon Dresses Lavishly

United Picture Theatres, Inc., this week declared that the array of costumes which Kitty Gordon is scheduled to wear in her forthcoming production called "Playthings of Passion," is going to be dazzling, in a financial sense, to say the least.

When Miss Gordon is fully arrayed in this picture, United places the value of her clothes at a mere $200,000.

Advance Information on All Film Releases

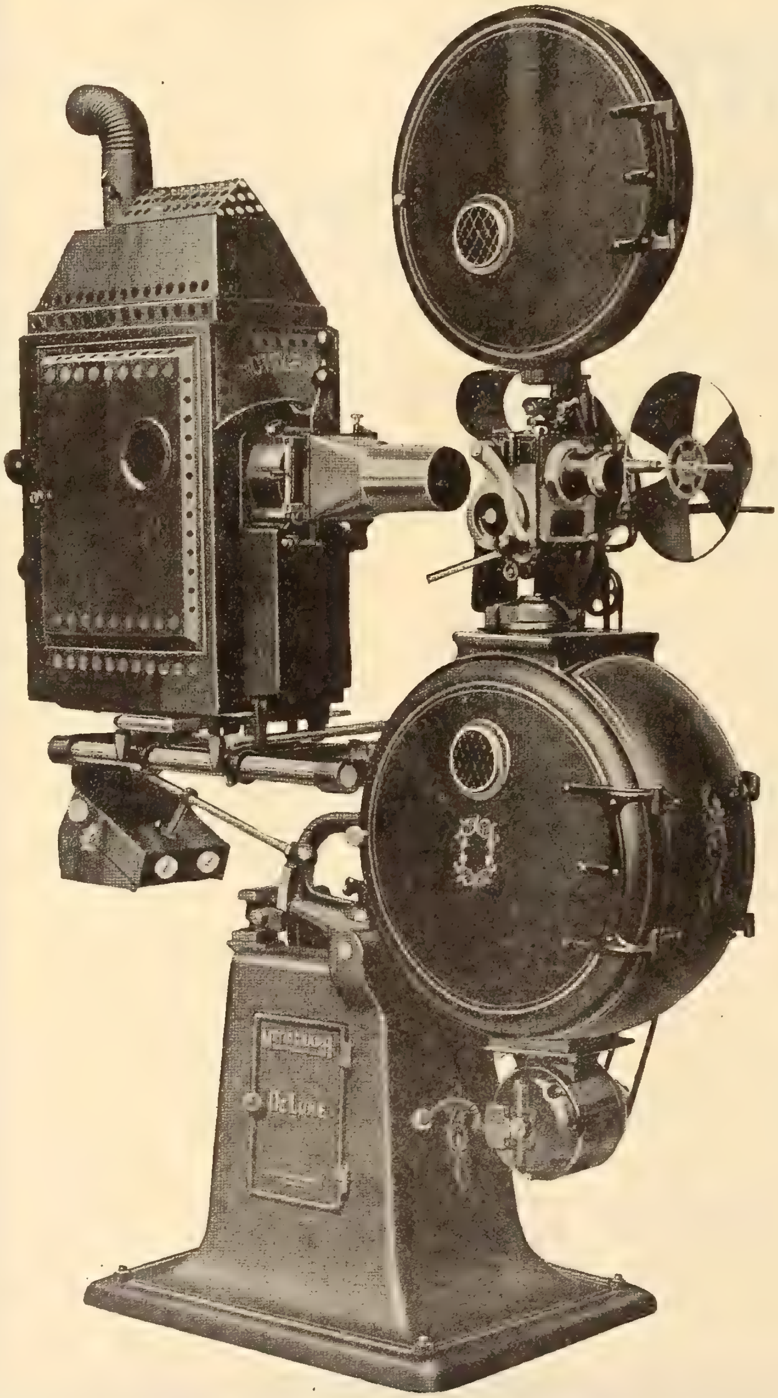
ACTUAL PERFORMANCE PROVES ITS WORTH



Read what Dee Robinson, Manager of one of the finest theatres in the state of Illinois says about the MOTIOGRAPH:

" We are sending you today a casting which I wish you would duplicate and send to us at once. Our operator let it fall and broke it.

" Am pleased to tell you that we today placed an order with your agent here for two of your De Luxe machines. Wish you would rush them out as we want to get them installed this week.

" Your MOTIOGRAPH machines certainly have given us good satisfaction, and we are pleased to boost them when we can. Am taking the old ones down to one of our other houses.

" Yours truly,

Dee Robinson (Signed)

Operating Ordinance

THE following ordinance submitted to the Board of Aldermen of New York City governing the operating of motion picture machines in theatres and elsewhere will be of interest to those in other cities. It will give a means of comparing the strictness of the various regulations and may ultimately lead to more nearly uniform laws all over the country.

Report of the Committee on General Welfare in Favor of Adopting an Ordinance to Amend the Code of Ordinances Relating to Operators of Motion Picture Projection Machines.

The Committee on General Welfare, to which was referred on February 4, 1919 (Minutes, page 330), the annexed ordinance to amend subdivisions 1, 2 and 3 of Section 43 of Chapter 3 of the Code of Ordinances, relating to operators of motion picture projection machines, respectfully

REPORTS:

That this ordinance is favored by representatives of moving picture exhibitors and projecting machine operators as a safeguard against panic and fire.

Your Committee believes it desirable and recommends the adoption of said ordinance.

AN ORDINANCE to amend subdivisions 1, 2 and 3 of section 43 of chapter 3 of the Code of Ordinances, relating to operators of motion picture projection machines.

Be it Ordained by the Board of Aldermen of The City of New York as follows:

Section 1, subdivisions 1, 2 and 3 of section 43 of article 2 of chapter 3 of the Code of Ordinances, relating to operators of motion picture projecting machines, is hereby amended to read as follows:

Section 43. Operators of motion picture machines.

1. License required. No person shall operate any motion picture projection apparatus or any connection thereof, involving the use of a combustible film in or upon the premises of any public or private building or any place of public assemblage, unless he shall have been duly licensed as hereinafter provided.

2. Application for license. Any person desiring to act as a motion picture projection machine operator shall make application for a license as such to the commissioner of water supply, gas and electricity, who shall furnish to each applicant blank forms of application which he shall fill out and file with the commissioner.

3. Examination. The commissioner shall make rules and regulations governing the examination of applicants and the issuance of licenses and certificates; provided that each applicant shall be given a practical examination, under the direction of the commissioner [.], and an Examining Board which shall consist of two employees of the Electrical Bureau, and a moving picture operator who has had not less than five years' experience as such operator; the last named shall serve without compensation.

4. An applicant shall be at least twenty-one years of age.

5. Each application must be accompanied by the affidavit of a licensed operator to the effect that the applicant has served as an assistant to such licensed operator for a period of not less than six months prior to the date of the application, except any person who has operated a motion picture projection machine and its connections for not less than six months may present his own affidavit stating that he has so operated motion picture apparatus for not less than six months.

[4.]6. Issue of license and certificate. If, on such examination, the applicant is found to be competent to operate motion-picture apparatus and its connections, he shall receive a license for which he has applied, within six days after his examination; which license shall continue in force for one year from the date of issue, unless sooner revoked or suspended. With every license granted there shall be issued to the person obtaining such license a certificate, made by the commissioner or such other officer as the commissioner may designate, setting forth that the person named therein is duly authorized to operate motion-picture apparatus and its connections. And further provided that no license shall be granted to an applicant unless he shall have served as an assistant to a licensed operator for a period of not less than six months prior to the date of application, or shall have operated a motion-picture projection machine and its connections for not less than six months.

[5.]7. Posting certificate. The certificate shall be displayed in a conspicuous place in the room in which the licensee operates a motion picture apparatus and its connection.

[6.]8. Discipline. The license and certificate may be revoked or suspended at any time by the Commissioner, in his discretion, for cause.

[7.]9. Renewal of license. Every license, unless revoked or suspended, as herein provided, may, at the end of the year from the date of issue thereof, be renewed by the Commissioner in his discretion, upon application and with or without further examination as he may direct, but every application for renewal of license must be made within the thirty days previous to the expiration of such license.

[8]10. Unlicensed operators. No person, not licensed as provided in this section, shall be employed to operate or be permitted to operate any motion-picture projection apparatus, or any connections thereof, [in any motion-picture theatre, open-air motion-picture theatre or other place where motion-pictures are exhibited, to which the public is admitted, with or without charge for admission.] except as set forth in §42, article 2, chapter 3, of this ordinance.

11. Issuance of permits to assistants. Any person over 18 years of age desiring to act as assistant to a licensed

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Started by N. A. M. L. Members

THE communication printed below should be read by every projectionist—and operator. To those readers who are members of the N. A. M. L. will come a thought that at last some one is working with us toward the same end.

But now is not the time to slacken our work. Be more careful and watchful than ever, for by so doing you will be upholding all the more thoroughly the pledge of membership. See that every film returning to the exchange is in as good condition as you can make it, with mis-frames removed and punch holes eliminated insofar as it is possible. And above all else be sure that N. A. M. L. stickers are placed on every film which has been examined. If your supply has given out write in for more, as our stock is now sufficient to take care of all requests.

When the mutilation of film has been stopped, we want to get our share of the credit, and this can be done only if every one works for the League at this particular time:

MOTION PICTURE NEWS,
New York City,
Gentlemen:

"THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is determined to put a stop to the practice, prevalent among a large number of operators, of deliberately mutilating film, particularly the punching of holes in the celluloid for cues. Letters of complaint from exhibitors are received almost daily at the home office of the company, the following from George A. Haley, of the Dudley Theatre, Roxbury, Mass., being cited as an example:

"I wonder whether you people can or will do anything toward correcting the abuse of having operators punch film full of holes at the end of reels. Most of my Paramount stuff is only thirty days old, and yet it is too often full of holes that make it look like commercial stuff. I know my operator does not punch holes, but uses stickers, which are not nearly so offensive. The sudden appearance of a succession of holes is something shocking to eye and nerve."

The matter has been taken up vigorously by Al Lichtman, General Manager of Distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, who has instructed all the company's exchanges to take immediate steps to stamp out the practice. In his letter to the Branch Managers, Mr. Lichtman says: "I trust you will get after the theatres who are abusing our property and do everything possible to stamp out this unjustifiable practice. Theatres in your territory should be asked to co-operate with you and the film room examiner should be notified thereafter to note on their reports to the managers any cue punchings they find. The report can then be sent to the booker for the theatre last playing the picture and the responsibility thus placed."

Mr. Lichtman suggests that the other companies engaged in film distribution take similar procedure. "After a print has been in some of our exchange territory thirty days," he says, "the last scene of each reel looks like a Swiss cheese. This is all wrong. All the operator needs for a cue, if he is too stupid or careless to watch the cue sheet is stickers. There is no excuse or necessity for punching holes, and exhibitors should be charged with all the film they ruin. If the leading distributors get busy now, we can eliminate the evil in a very short time."

New Catalog

SHARLOW BROTHERS, 440 West 42nd Street, New York City, have issued a new catalog showing their new line of reels, film cans, shipping cases, rewinders and tables. Practically every device needed in film laboratory and exchange is included in their stock.

Trouble with Lantern Slides

"J. B." of Quebec says:

"I would like you to give me some advice about the following: I have been lately interested in lantern slide making, and I have met with some trouble which has stuck me.

"I have an Ansco camera 3¼ x 4¼ (size of picture), the lens is a Modico Anagtismat equipped with a capax shutter. I have a model the size of which ranges from 6 inches by 8 inches up to 22 inches by 30 inches. I mean by model, the article I want to photograph, like 'Goodnight,' etc., painted in black, dull black on white paper.

"Now the results I get with this is that the white is gray, not clear glass, as we have from the exchange, and the black is not dense enough.

"I have tried different kinds of developers, also many kinds of plates including process, lantern slide, Royal, Seed's, Illford, etc., and still I can't have a slide like we have from the exchange to advertise their features, i. e., a very dense black and very clear white.

"Don't you think that this trouble may be on account of the lens, which is just a regular lens to take snapshots on the street, etc.? I am inclined to believe that I must have a copying lens to do this kind of photography.

"I might also add that I have put in the plate holder of the camera a lantern slide plate so that I get a positive direct, i. e., don't have to make a negative to obtain a finished slide. With this I have a better result; the white is better and also the black, but is not good enough."

This letter was shown to Mr. Crabtree of the Eastman Kodak Company, an authority on slide making, and his reply follows:

"The trouble is not in the lens but in the method of working. Precisely where you fall down it is not possible to say from the information given—possibly it is because your copy is not sufficiently illuminated.

"The copy should be on white card, printed in black printers' ink or India ink. This should be well illuminated by daylight or preferably by two arc lights or nitrogen tungsten lamps fitted with suitable reflectors, one on each side of the copy. A process plate should be used and this should be developed with a contrast developer such as the following:

A.	Sodium Bisulphite	25 grams	1 oz.
	Hydroquinone	25 grams	1 oz.
	Potassium Bromide	25 grams	1 oz.
	Water to	1 liter	32 oz.
B.	Caustic Soda	50 grams	2 oz.
	Water to	1 liter	32 oz.

Use equal parts of A. and B.

Develop for three to four minutes at a temperature not above 65 degrees Fahrenheit, rince well and fix in an acid fixing bath.

For printing use a contrasty lantern plate such as the Standard slow lantern plate and develop for two or three minutes in the developer recommended with the plates."

Picture Not Clear and Title Streaked

C. A. HONNOLD, Royal Theatre, Le Mars, Iowa, writes: "We have been having a little trouble lately with our pictures not being clear and titles streaking.

No. 1. We have Powers 6-A machines (2 of them), have a generator in basement that changes the a. c. to d. c., use solid ½-inch carbon below and ⅝-inch cored carbon above.

We have tried adjusting the shutter but it will not clear up the trouble entirely. Seems to work loose, as the first reel after adjusting will be good then it will go to streaking again.

2. Would you recommend putting on Extra-Light shutters. I notice that the new Simplex machines are equipped with them.

The company will send them on seven days' trial which seems fair enough.

3. The way our system of light is now—when one light on one machine is turned on it kills the light on the other. How could this be remedied,

4. Do you think a Transverter or Compensarc would be better, so that we could use the a. c. as it comes from the power plant?

5. When light is first turned on should it be frozen or just touch the carbons enough to get the required spark for light?

Reply. 1. For troubles such as yours, the Powers Company suggests obtaining a shutter blade with the main blade a trifle wider than the one you are now using. It might also be that the smaller gears Nos. 635, 677, 678 and 680 are worn so as to cause back-lash. Replacing the worn gears will probably remedy your trouble.

2. The use of the Extra-lite shutter is not to be recommended for every installation. Perhaps you are getting a picture brilliant enough as it is, in which case an Extra-lite shutter would certainly not help matters. But if your screen illumination is weaker than you would like to see it, then take advantage of the Simplex offer. Within a short time there will appear in the Projection Department an authoritative account of the Extra-lite shutter with facts that will prove instructive to the operator.

3. You did not give the name of your motor-generator set. Some sets have been designed to permit the simultaneous burning (for a short time) of both arcs, accomplished by the insertion of a steadying resistance. Evidently you have a one lamp outfit in which event nothing can be done.

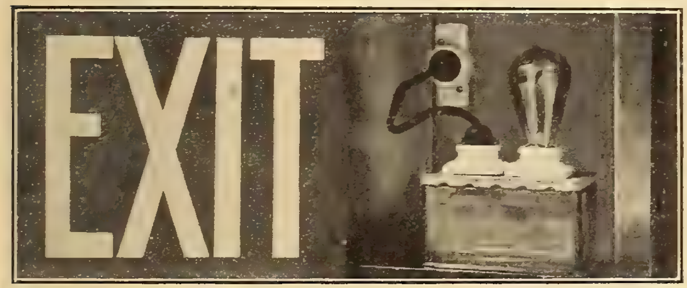
4. Stick to d. c. You aree obtaining as efficient conversion as is usually possible. Moreover, a Transverter is a motor generator set similar to the one you already have, with the addition of special features in design to make it more suitable for motion picture work.

5. You gain nothing by freezing your carbons. Merely bring them together for an instant, then after the arc is struck draw them apart the proper distance. When you freeze your carbons you are producing a short circuit across your generators through the carbon resistance of course. Generators for motion picture work are designed to withstand this momentary short circuit, however, so that fuses or circuit breakers are not affected.

An Electric Disinfectant

An electrical device for disinfecting, purifying and deodorizing the atmosphere of motion picture theatres has lately made its appearance on the market. Up to this time the Projection Department has not been able to secure a sample for testing, hence only the manufacturer's claims may be stated here.

The device is known as the "Perdis Perfumigator." It consists of a jar of "Perdis" liquid and a cover for the jar, to which are attached the electrodes and also two receptacles, one of the latter being used for the plug connection and the other for the lamp connected in series with the electrodes.



It can be used on either a. c. or d. c. The cost of operation and maintenance is claimed to be slight, a jar of the electrolyte lasting a week.

When the jar is filled and the current turned on, the electrolyte is broken up into hydrogen and oxygen gases which in penetrating the farthest corners of the room neutralize and destroy offensive odors, leaving the air purified and sweetened.

The illustration shows how the Perdis Perfumigator may be installed inside the exit signs of theatres.

Lewis M. Swaab of Philadelphia is sole agent for this apparatus and inquiries should be addressed to him.

SWAAB'S SUPERLITE SCREEN

Is a perfect Silver Screen and will not oxidize; remains bright and Silvery and can be cleaned easily and quickly. Swaab's Superlite Silver Screen now in use in the Stanley and other large representative theatres in this and other cities. Price is 75¢ per square foot. An additional charge is made for the Special Stretcher Frame, according to size, the average extra cost is $30.00. You are not obliged to buy the frame.

NEW SPEER CARBONS

now ready and far superior in quality and screen results to any carbons thus far produced.

SWAAB'S MOTORS

for Power 6A and 6B are pleasing their users—not a single one has fallen down or been returned. They are sold for $37.50 and $40.00 respectively and are complete absolutely. Dealers do not recommend our Motor Equipments because they cannot make anything on them. We have priced them so that the Exhibitor gets the best price regardless of the Dealer. Synchronizing Music and Pictures

RICHARD P. YOUNG, Director of Productions for the Pathescope Cie, Cincinnati, Ohio, has submitted a rough idea on which he is now working and by which he hopes to bring about the successful synchronizing of musical score and motion picture. His letter reads:

"This is the idea in brief: It is a phonograph having two arms, two disks and one sound box, the two disks being necessary in order to play continuously. When the end of a record is reached another is ready and no break takes place, the change-over being done automatically.

"As to speed control, the machine would be run by an electric motor with a speed control device on it. A record would be kept of the number of feet of film, and then by a table inclosed with the film the operator would know at just what speed to set the motor. It would be necessary also to have a meter to register footage, this meter of course to be placed on the projector. Another meter on the phonograph would correspond to the one on the projector, and by means of the two indicators the correct relation between film and music could be maintained.

"The shorter a film would get the faster the record would be run, as the law of averages will generally hold good.

"I would like to have any suggestions either by you or by your readers. At present I cannot give the matter all of my attention, as I have to do some producing for the local Pathescope Company, but I can spare the time to answer inquiries.

"Thanking you for the interest taken in this and wishing your department continued success, I am,

"Yours respectfully,
"Richard P. Young,
"2532 Alms Place, Cincinnati, Ohio."

Comment: The weakest part of Mr. Young's idea lies in the lack of mechanical connection between film and phonograph record. During the life of a film many sections are cut out from one cause or another. A thousand-foot film may, after a 30 to 60 day travel be reduced to nine hundred feet. In Mr. Young's scheme he has made no allowance for this state of affairs. With his device the operator would be called on to lift the needle of the sound arm and skip a certain number of grooves to again synchronize the action of the film and the utterances of the players. The one thing which would condemn a synchronizing device would be to have one or more of the players continue talking after the scene has been completed, and while a title was being shown, thus making a comedy, perhaps, out of a serious situation.

If any of the readers of the Projection Department have ideas of their own along these lines they should communicate them to Mr. Young, either direct or through these columns. The editor will gladly publish any communications which may be submitted. A general discussion of that kind will be of immense help to any others who may also be working an synchronizing schemes. Some day one will be evolved, and the fortunate inventor will be overwhelmed with offers to market it. This field offers an excellent opportunity to projectionists who like to experiment in mechanics and electricity.

As Conditions Are Sometimes Found in Iowa

ROBERT F. SMITH, Hospers, Iowa, N. A. M. L. No. 893, writes:

"Will you please forward to me a new batch of stickers for film inspection? I have used up my last batch and want to continue using them. Evidently they are giving satisfaction, at least to the exchange, for the girl inspectors down there send me the worst prints to be repaired so they can have more time to loaf and chew gum. I always repair prints and put them in first-class condition, but the exchange doesn't cooperate and help a fellow out. Some of the prints I have received were not fit to run through a projector in the condition in which I received them. I have protested to the exchange rather strongly upon several occasions and I notice the girls don't put inspectors' slips in the reels any more.

WHITE A.C. SPECIAL

MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

For Alternating Current Projection

Projectionists using alternating current projection realize the superior quality of White A. C. Special Carbons after a short trial. Hundreds are now convinced that these carbons lead in this field and would not attempt to use the old style. White A. C. Specials have all the good qualities of a perfect carbon and give a light that is hard to beat.

The silent operation, the intense white light and the flickerless screen illumination possible with the use of these carbons have made them the standard of the alternating current field.

WRITE FOR CIRCULARS

NATIONAL CARBON COMPANY, INC., Cleveland, Ohio

In this section the punch hole epidemic is on the wane, but I have discovered one of its sources. I visited an operating room in a nearby town recently and of all the places in the world to expect to put on a decent picture that place was the limit. Reels, film scraps (about 15 feet of film was lying on the floor, supposedly used up in cutting out misframes, but why do they need to cut out six inches on each side of the misframe?), pieces of carbons, tools, mud, and all conceivable scrap materials cluttered the floor. The operator was not in (it being the afternoon), but a repair (?) man was fixing up the equipment. I listened to him for a few minutes and then decided that if he was a repair man I must be an expert. He was cleaning up the booth a little, but he advocated smoking in the booth, and seemed to care about as much whether or not he put on a good picture as a two-year-old baby. The regular operator had left, leaving a reel half run through the machine, and others half wound and tangled up all over the floor. If I had to run in conditions like that I'd quit (if I couldn't fix 'em up). I never thought conditions could be as bad until I looked in that room. The man in that booth wouldn't even sweep out his own booth and if the regular sweeper didn't, he wouldn't. I believe every operator should take care of his own booth and put it in first class order.

Please forward the stickers as soon as possible; I have been out for about a month. I wrote for some a few weeks ago but haven't received them as yet."

Reply:

The labels have gone forward and you should get them in due time. When you write again we will send you a larger supply. as a new stock has just been received.

If you happen to know the operator's name in the theatre you have described, send it in to N. A. M. L. headquarters and we will try to get him to join the League. As a member he will have something to work for besides his weekly envelope, and while we don't pose as reformers we may be able to show him "the better way." Your name won't be used unless you wish it.

Mr. Smith's letter shows that he has ideas of his own as to how a projection room should be operated and maintained. If he would only put those ideas down on paper the editor would gladly publish it, and readers would certainly read it.

motion-picture operator, shall register his name, age, address and place of employment as such assistant, on a form furnished for the purpose by the commissioner, the commissioner may issue a permit allowing such a person to assist a licensed operator in a booth or enclosure, but such person shall not himself operate a moving-picture projection machine and its connections, except under the personal supervision of a licensed operator. The permit shall be for the term of one year from the date of issue thereof, but may be renewed yearly by the commissioner, unless sooner revoked or suspended.

§44. Violations.

Any person who shall violate, or refuse or neglect to comply with any provision of this article, shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $100 or by imprisonment not exceeding 30 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment; and any such person shall, also, for each offence, be subject to the payment of a penalty in the sum of $50, to be recovered in a civil action.

Sec. 2. This ordinance shall take effect immediately.

Note—New matter in italics; old matter, in brackets [ ], to be omitted.

* * * *

The only further suggestion which might be made again at this time is that about which we have harped on so long, namely the classification of the operating fraternity according to their ability and knowledge. It should be done and we hope that it will be done by the organizations of the men and not as we have seen it carried through—by local or state statutes.

E. K. Gillett.

How Westinghouse Helps the Theatre Owner

WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC

Our last advertisement told how Westinghouse is enabling the producer to secure perfect studio illumination—contributing much toward a high standard of picture production and toward making American Made pictures the best.

A Good Picture Deserves Good Projection

Poor projection prevents appreciation of good picture qualities. Under such conditions all efforts for perfection in producing will have been in vain.

Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipments aid projectionists in bringing out every artistic achievement that is embodied in the film for the patron's entertainment. They insure that fundamental requirement of good projection—a steady and brilliant light—and, consequently, pictures that are always steady and clearly defined.

Westinghouse Motion Picture Equipments are very simple in operation. No tinkering is necessary, no electrical adjusting is necessary, nor is any great electrical knowledge necessary to keep them operating. Once started, they may be forgotten—the bright, steady light tells the projectionist that his Westinghouse set is operating satisfactorily and he is free to concentrate on many other duties that require his undivided attention.

How to Prepare Photographic Solutions

By J. I. Crabtree

Many metallic compounds such as salts of copper and tin, metallic sulphides, etc., exert a powerful fogging action even when present only in minute quantities, and should be avoided. The following table indicates the nature of and effect of the more common impurities present in the chemicals used for developing and fixing baths:

Chemical	Chief Impurity	Effect of Impurities
Pyro, hydroquinone, etc.	Oxidation products and adulterants	Chemical fog Adulterants weaken the effect of the developer
Sodium sulphite	Sodium sulphate	Keeping properties of the developer are impaired
Sodium bisulphite	Iron and sodium sulphate	Iron gives a dirty red solution with pyro
Caustic soda	Sodium carbonate	Decreases the accelerating power
Hypo	Sodium sulphite	Diminishes the fixing power
Alum	Sodium sulphate and ammonium sulphate	Diminishes the hardening action
Chrome alum	Ammonium sulphate and Sulphuric acid	Excess of acid tends to cause sulphurization of the fixing bath
Acetic acid	Water	Deficiency of acid causes milkiness of the acid fixing bath due to the precipitation of aluminum sulphite.

(b) For impurities introduced during storage see "Storage of Chemicals."

(c) If during mixing the mater contains dissolved air and the developing agent is dissolved before the sulphite, it becomes oxidized and the oxidation product formed causes fog. (See "Mixing of Developers," "Storage of Solutions" and article on "Chemical Fog.")

STORAGE OF CHEMICALS

Chemicals should be stored in well corked or well stoppered jars in a cool dry place because most chemicals are affected by air which contains oxygen, carbon dioxide gas, and moisture.

(a) Oxygen readily attacks such substances as sodium sulphite, especially in the presence of moisture, converting it into sodium sulphate, which is useless as a preservative. With crystallized sodium sulphite the sodium sulphate forms on the outside of the crystals as a powder; which may be washed off and the crystals dried. It is less easy to detect sodium sulphate in desiccated sulphite except by chemical tests.

Other substances which combine with oxygen and are therefore said to be oxidized are sodium bisulphite and potassium metabisulphite and all developing agents such as pyro, hydroquinone, etc., which turn more or less brown, the extent of the color roughly indicating the degree of oxidation.

(b) Carbon dioxide gas combines with substances like caustic soda and caustic potash, converting them into the corresponding carbonated alkalis which are less reactive. If caustic soda is kept in a stoppered bottle the stopper usually becomes cemented fast by the sodium carbonate formed, so that it should be kept in a waxed corked bottle. Owing to the solvent action of the caustic alkalis on glass the inside of the glass bottle containing caustic or strongly carbonated solutions becomes frosted, though the amount of glass thus dissolved away will usually do no harm.

(c) Certain chemicals have a strong attraction or affinity for the moisture present in the atmosphere and gradually dissolve in the water thus absorbed forming a solution. This phenomenon is termed "deliquescence" and the chemicals are said to "deliquesce." Familiar examples are ammonium thiocyanate, potassium carbonate, caustic soda, caustic potash, sodium sulphide, uranium nitrate, sodium bichromate, etc., which should be stored in corked bottles and the neck dipped in melted paraffin wax.

As mentioned above, it is difficult to prepare a solution of definite percentage strength from a chemical which has deliquesced, though it is usually sufficient to drain off the crystals, or to use a hydrometer, referring to a table giving the hydrometer readings in terms of percentage strength.

(d) While some chemicals absorb moisture as above, others give up their water of crystallization to the atmosphere and therefore lose their crystalline shape and fall to a powder and are then said to "effloresce," the phenomenon being termed "efflorescence." Some crystals do not contain any water and therefore cannot deliquesce.

A very dry atmosphere is suitable therefore for storing deliquescent salts but not for efflorescent salts. The only way to store chemicals is to isolate them from the air by suitably sealing.

HOW TO STORE SOLUTIONS

Stock solutions and developers should be stored in either large glass bottles, earthenware crocks, wooden vats, or tanks of resistive material, and so arranged that the liquid may be drawn off at the side and near the bottom.

Large glass bottles and crocks should be fitted with a right angled glass or lead tube passing through a rubber stopper wired to the bottle, the tube being opened and closed by means of a pinch cock clamping a short length of rubber tubing.

In case a solution such as pyro has to be stored for a long time and withdrawn at intervals, an absorption bottle containing alkaline pyro may be fitted at the intake, which absorbs oxygen from the air as it enters the bottle after withdrawing part of the solution.

It is often recommended to pour a layer of refined mineral oil on the surface of a solution so as to protect it from the air, though this is very messy when the bottle has to be refilled.

A battery of stock solution bottles is shown in Fig. 3, the bottles being arranged on lead covered shelves under which a large trough is placed, or, the floor may be so arranged as to form a sink so that in case of accidental breakage no serious damage is done. This precaution is of special importance in the case of hypo solutions which might otherwise flood an entire building and inoculate the various rooms with hypo dust causing an epidemic of spots.

The End.

An Improvement in Eastman Film

THE two illustrations tell more forcibly than words the value of footage numbered negatives as now produced by the Eastman Kodak Company. Hereafter all negative stock perforated by the Company will be furnished without extra cost with consecutive edge numbers, one foot apart, which will appear upon development on the opposite side from the usual words "Eastman Kodak."

The change necessary in the printing machine is slight. It consists merely of a small slit, cut 5/64 of an inch wide on the left side of the aperture plate. Through this narrow slit the measuring numbers can be printed and made to appear on the edge of the finished positive. The figures will run from zero to 99999 before being duplicated. The advantage of this system of consecutively registering the footage of the negative and positive is in its application to its final cutting and assembling of the successive scenes which portray or carry out the action of the story, and in addition will be invaluable when selecting scenes for duplicate prints or re-orders for making repairs.

Previously, the method of locating the portion or portions of each negative scene to be used for final printing, has been to compare the negative with such marks or checks as have been

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

Our activities for the past year have been nearly 100 per cent. devoted to war production of vital importance to the government, compelling us to discontinue regular manufacture in practically all of our lines.

The cessation of hostilities has now enabled us to begin the readjustment to a peace production basis. While this adjustment must be gradual, we are pressing it with all possible speed in order to satisfy the requirements of our normal trade at an early date.

We appreciate the patience and understanding with which our patrons have reacted to the situation and trust they may continue to exercise such consideration until our manufacturing facilities are once more on a pre-war footing.

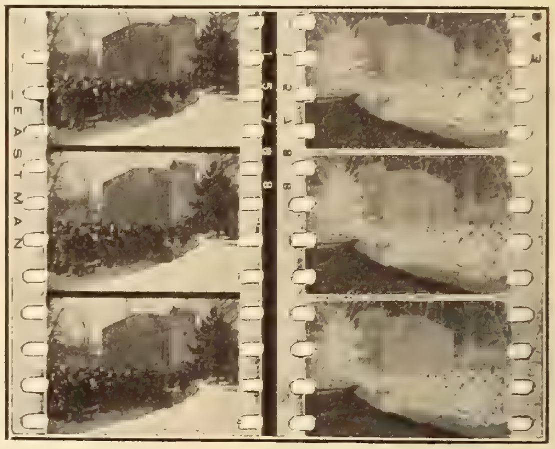
placed on the positive after decision on the action and footage to be used has been determined by projection. This method, aside from being slow and tedious, particularly in the cutting and assembling in large productions, also entails frequent and often serious damage to the negative, due to the image becoming scratched or otherwise marred as the result of constant handling when comparing the negative with the positive.



The advantages of Eastman edge numbered perforated negative motion picture film are many. Cutting and assembling will be materially cheapened and simplified. The possibility of selecting the wrong scene will be done away with, particularly if the selection has to be made from among several re-takes. For example: scene No. 15 begins with footage 11707 and runs 42 feet to 11749. If retakes are made on the same roll, the numbers will be higher or possibly running into a new roll having entirely different numbers, as, for instance, 42 feet from 4961 to 5003.

When it has been decided to use a particular scene and the first print has been made, it is then only necessary to re-wind the negative of that scene to find the footage numbers which have been marked or checked on the positive of that scene as described above, and thus quickly arrive within the space of one foot of the point at which it has been decided to cut the action. In other words, it is simply a case of following the figures, even though the action carries through several rolls, each bearing entirely different figures.

Lantern Slide Crayons

FOR those projectionists who once in a while would like to make up lantern slides in a hurry, the Projection Department recommends the Slide Pencils manufactured by the Rialto Theatre Supply Co. of Minneapolis and sold at 25 cents each. These pencils write on glass as easily as a pencil on paper. They come in several colors so that with a little practice excellent effects may be secured on the slide.

Two Arcs—One Economizer

H. B. McFarling, Morehouse, Mo., asks:

Please inform me whether I can light up a second machine on my Edison Economizer, and have light burning ready to start next reel. I have two machines, but only one Economizer. I use 110 V. 60 cycles A. C.

Reply: Practically, it cannot be done. If you attempted to do it, the increased current due to the second arc would pull down your voltage to a point where it became insufficient to support the arc. Theoretically, it can be done by having all parts of the system in nice adjustment, but you know, yourself, how difficult this would be.

Your simplest solution and one that you should use is to get another economizer of an up-to-date type. At present you have nothing in reserve in case something happened to your "Edison."

What a Progressive Musician Has to Say

THE editor of these columns is in receipt of a very interesting letter from Miss Alice Smythe Jay, a musician of repute and progressive ideas. The letter, which follows in its entirety, points out some of the many difficulties arising through the ignorance of some of our still-existing "nickle exhibitors."

Editor,
Music Department,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS.
Dear Sir:

Your article "How To Play For Western Dramas On the Screen" attracted my attention and is especially interesting for two reasons. First—It is to be appreciated that we are waking up to the fact that synchronizing music to a picture means all that the word implies, to make to agree in Time, Tempo and Character, be it a Furioso or Andante, but in all fairness I ask you, "How can we determine these points with Managers as well as Orchestra Leaders, Organists and Pianists who cannot agree on the character displayed on the screen.

"My experience during the last few months has disclosed the fact that many Managers in the smaller theaters and some large ones fail to appreciate the great necessity of fitting music to the picture and call for "Shimmie With Me" or some popular melody when a sad scene is depicted on the screen, and when told that it does not suit the scene, reply, "Oh, the people like popular stuff." True, because they do not hear anything else. Many of the theatres remind me of pioneer days of music with pictures. Musicians will see only rag time music to an Oriental Palatial scene, where classic music of Oriental character should be used and blended to the next scene. Can this be accomplished by changing in the middle of a scene?

"I am anxious to know what makes a perfect synchronization of music and the picture, change of tempo and music at any old place, or at a stated point? I can't advise popular melodies unless the words of the song fit the scene any more than I can advise Carmen in a comedy scene. Words detract from scenes unless fitted to the scene appearing on the screen. I believe that day will come when music will fit each and every picture the same as opera music to a libretto. How can we assist the smaller theatre to a better grade of music, where the majority of the audience is composed of children ranging from six to fifteen? These children must be amused. Why not give them the better grades of pictures and music? Mr. Manager, it is up to you."

Very sincerely yours,

ALICE SMYTHE JAY.

To enlighten readers and Miss Jay on some of the subjects mentioned in the above letter, the editor will carefully analyze above and handle some of these problems in detail.

Miss Jay is anxious to know how it can be possible to make a Furioso or Andante agree in Time, Tempo and Character, and how these points can be determined with managers as well as orchestra leaders who cannot agree on the character displayed on the screen. The answer to the above is very simple. In my estimation, somebody should have the sole authority in deciding such facts. It must either be the musician or manager. In a case where the manager is not progressive enough to understand the real facts, he will of course insist on imposing his incorrect ideas on the musician. In such an instance, there is only one way out of this difficulty. The musician must be aggressive and must be able to substantially defend his points with logical proofs and common sense. However, sometimes even such action can not convince the doubting exhibitor. Then I can only suggest that the exhibitor be given his own way, and it will only take a very short time to gradually convince such exhibitor that he is travelling on the wrong path.

I admit that it is very hard to convince certain people of certain things, but at the same time musicians must realize that not only in this line, but in everything else, enforcement of progressive ideas is not an easy task. It was only recently that the editor experienced such difficulties, where an exhibitor claimed that the scene portrayed required a slow number, and the idea of the editor was an allegro. After considerably lengthy disputes, the editor with all his arguments at his disposition was not able to convince the exhibitor that he was wrong. He finally had to give in, and the result was that the audience was the deciding factor in this matter, proving to this exhibitor that his ideas, although he has the right of enforcing them through the power of authority, were not the right ones.

I firmly agree with Miss Jay in her remarks regarding the elevation of children to an appreciation of better music with pictures. It is up to the exhibitor firstly, and the musician secondly, to create the proper environment and love of good music for our coming generations.—THE EDITOR.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Then You'll Know You're Home"—An unusual one step by Jesse Winne. The New York dancers are going wild over this one-step. Although this number is only a few weeks old, it has already attracted such notice that we predict for it the great popularity of any dance number we have ever heard. It's full of pep, and just makes 'em dance. (Chappell & Co., 41 E. 34th St.)

2—"Carry Me Back to Old Virginny Waltz," by J. H. Rayder. The song by the same name is one of the most popular Home Songs of the century and is the most melodious. The waltz is adapted from the same melody. (Oliver Ditson Co., 178 Tremont St., Boston.)

3—"Rainy Day Blues"—Arranged by Dave Kaplan. Accepted as the big dance hit, and featured by every society leader in the country who caters to the "quality" social events. This dance hit has swept the country. The orchestration is a wonderful piece of work with all those little frills which make a dance number doubly effective with dancers. (Richmond, 149 W. 45th St., N. Y.)

4—"Chong" (He came from Hongkong)—The greatest Chinese-American hit. Fox trot by Harold Weeks (Feist, 237 W. 40th St., N. Y.)

5—"How Are You Going to Wet Your Whistle" (When the whole darn world goes dry?) Some question and some number. Fox trot, by Percy Wenrich, (Feist edition.)

6—"Anything Is Nice" (That Comes from Dixieland.) The newest rag song hit—successor to "Peaches" and "Dixieland in France." Fox trot by Clarke, Meyer and Ager. (Feist edition.)

7—"Lanette." The big waltz hit by H. Benne Henton. The remarkable popularity achieved by this waltz is not alone due to its unusually attractive strains, but also for its swingy, dancy rhythm and the very striking and novel effects for the saxophone part in both orchestra and band. Lanette is always the big feature number wherever played, and it is only natural that H. Benne Henton, the famous saxophone virtuoso, did himself proud in writing the saxophone part.. (Carl Fischer, Cooper Sq., N. Y.)

8—"Frenchy Koo" is the successor to "Ballin' the Jack." It is written by Baskette and Maceo Pinkard, writer of those hits you'll never forget, "Real Kind Mama," "Lovesick Blues," "Draffin' Blues," etc. They claim that this is their best endeavor. Music with that "Frenchy" atmosphere will be all the vogue this season, and it is predicted that songs of this type will be "the rage" at the theatres and

9.—"Mythical Suite"—Ruritania, the land of the swashbuckler, love and romance is cleverly represented in the Mythical Suite. There is found therein the peasant dance, love song and romance, also a characteristic allegro, and a beautiful melodious andante. (Helwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.)

Gene Rodemich, director of the Symphony Orchestra, Fox Liberty theatre, St. Louis

By Edward L. Hyman

Manager Fox's Liberty Theatre, St. Louis

DO you know of more exacting critics than the patrons of a moving picture theatre? If you give this question a few minutes of thoughtful study you will agree with me that the movie fan is the most exacting of theatregoers.

Naturally, the first question that arises in your mind is "WHY"? My answer is a word of nine letters—education.

The fact that the movie fan has been educated to such a high degree by the first-class producers that he is not satisfied with "half-baked" productions but demands realities.

And the producers, as a consequence, are exerting every effort to make their productions of a super-high quality.

The people of St. Louis have shown their appreciativeness of the better form of presentation of the product of the movie studio, the high degree to which lighting effects are employed and lastly but not least, music.

In St. Louis there was unearthed a musical genius in the person of Gene Rodemich. Rodemich was given carte blanche to gather a symphony orchestra which would stand head and shoulders above anything else in the city, so far as a moving picture theatre was concerned.

In a few brief weeks there was assembled in the Liberty theatre a group of 25 talented musicians. A few rehearsals showed that without question that Rodemich's judgment could not be questioned.

Today, several weeks after my arrival in St. Louis, the people of the city are praising the exceptionally good work of this orchestra, which is classed with the best in the United States.

When independent newspapers of any city send members of their own reportorial staffs to "cover" a performance and that critics say things that any musician cherishes then it is an established fact that the orchestra has "made good."

In a hap-hazard way St. Louisans heard indifferent musical accompaniment to pictures. Things are different now and when in former times citizens of St. Louis who wanted to hear a Symphony concert they were compelled to wait from week to week, until they could hear the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra.

Now, in the most centrally located section of the city within 20 minutes car ride of the farthest point they are enjoying not only the highest brand of classical and syncopated music but also witnessing the best pictures that money, brains and energy can produce.

All of this in the most beautiful theatre in the city. Money was not spared to make this theatre not only the most beautiful to the eye but also the most comfortable.

The treatment accorded patrons of the Liberty theatre is all that the human mind can conceive, from the smiling cashier to the doorman "who thanks you" and to the girl usher whose sole thought and duty is to make you feel that you were entering a theatre of which you are a part owner.

And I may say, without a trace of boastfulness, that talk has reached me through many channels that this theatre has filled a much needed demand in this city. No longer is such comment heard among Liberty patrons as "The picture was very good—but the music would have been much better if it had been absent during the performance."

The Liberty theatre is literally "whipping into line" theatres who thought that to give the people what the management wanted was enough. This is so untrue that it is laughable.

Some old sage said that the people "want what they want" and time and tide, narrow mindedness and conceit will never change it.

This has been so thoroughly demonstrated in St. Louis, which has been classed as the most critical city in the country in so far as the spoken drama is concerned, that it behooves the management which strives for success to "hew to the line."

Comedy Song Dedicated to "Fatty" Arbuckle

"OH HELEN!," the comedy stuttering song, has been dedicated to "Fatty" Arbuckle by Jos. W. Stern & Company, publishers of the popular hit. The run on this song is rapidly approaching the million mark and in vaudeville and musical comedy productions comedians like Henry Lewis, Wellington Cross and others are using it with big success.

A special cover for the song has been designed, presenting Arbuckle's smiling photograph, duly autographed, and the publishers have started a big drive among their local dealers to co-operate with exhibitors of Paramount-Arbuckle pictures along the following lines:

In the windows of Woolworth stores all over the country, large electric signs carrying reproductions of the Arbuckle cover of "Oh Helen!" have been leased and special window displays have been arranged for. Sets of slides illustrating the song are being shipped to these dealers. These slides are reproductions of stills from the current Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, "Love," and carry credit lines. Arrangements have also been made by the publishers to have dealers supply exhibitors with singers.

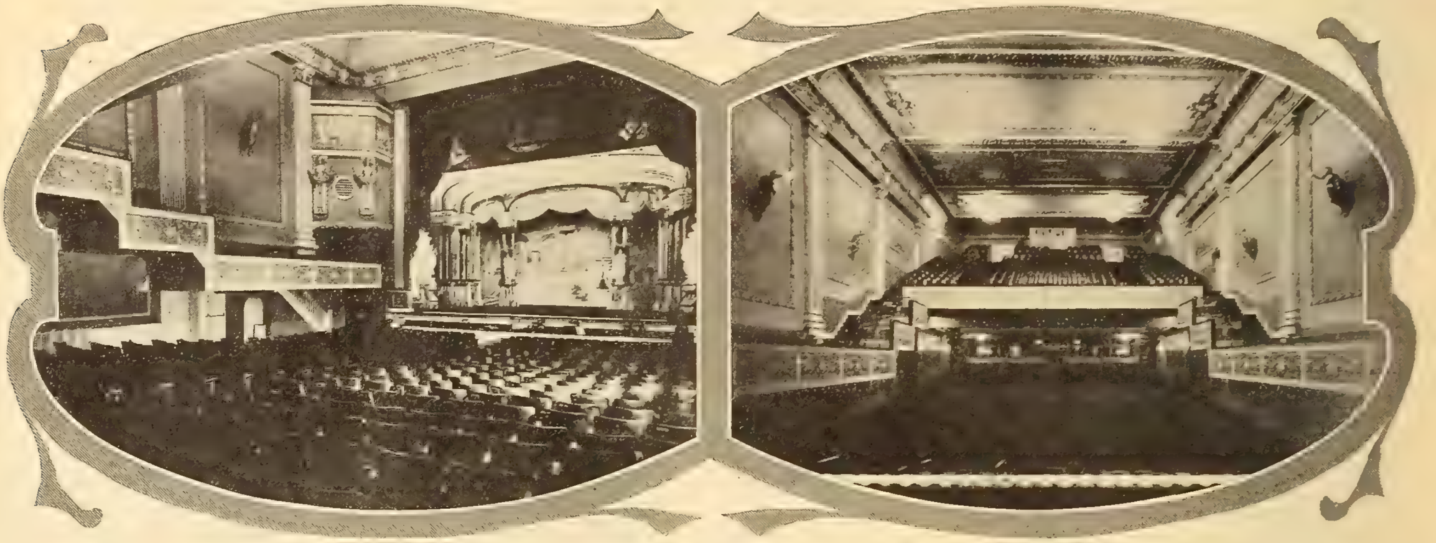
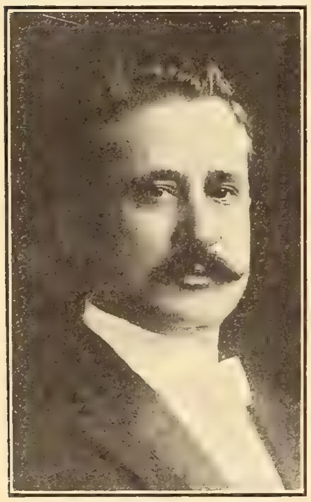
Theatres Worth While



Two views of the interior of the new Nemo theatre at Johnstown, Pa., of which George Panagotacos is president and active head. Mr. Panagotacos is also head of the Grand Amusement Company of Johnstown

Nemo Theatre, Johnstown, Pa., Remodeled

WITH the installation of a balcony and other alterations, the Nemo theatre, Johnstown, Pa., has been made one of the largest and most beautiful playhouses in the western end of Pennsylvania devoted to the cinema art. The remodeled theatre has a seating capacity of 1,600.



George Panagotacos

The installation of a balcony in the Nemo, always classed as an example of genuine beauty in theatre architecture, has worked a transformation in the house, no expense being spared in providing everything that might add to comfort and beauty.

The Nemo is an exceptionally high house. The balcony, with a seating capacity of 600, including the loge boxes, forms a huge cove over the rear of the first floor, and extends in a series of boxes to the proscenium edge, where a stairway drops to the lower floor. There are three loges along each side of the house, and five across the front of the balcony.

Decorations are in light colors, gray and gold predominating. The decorations were in charge of S. Busa, Pittsburgh contractor. The theatre was planned by M. Nirdlinger, also of Pittsburgh, while the general contractor was H. H. Gardner, of Johnstown.

The Brasco-lite system of semi-indirect lighting is used, and was installed by the Reese & Bernard Co., of Johnstown. The house lights are all on dimmers, so that any amount of illumination desired can be obtained at all times.

The Nemo is using the latest type Simplex machines and the Wertsner Super-Lite screen, manufactured by C. S. Wertsner & Son, Philadelphia. Projection presented a real problem for the Nemo, which has a throw of 135 feet, but the equipment finally adopted gives a clear, white picture that is as nearly 100 per cent perfect as pictures can be made.

The theatre has a large stage, with a proscenium opening 42 feet in width, and is fully equipped with scenery and lighting effects for legitimate or vaudeville shows, although only pictures are shown. A six-piece orchestra is used. The open booking plan is in force at the Nemo, pictures being used from two days to a full week. The screen is placed well back on the stage, with the result that the front seats are as desirable as any in the house.

The Nemo is operated by Panagotacos Brothers, who also operate the Grand Amusement Company, controlling the Grand, Parkview and Victoria theatres at Johnstown.

George Panagotacos, President of the Nemo Theatre Company and the Grand Amusement Company, active head of the concern, is one of the oldest exhibitors in western Pennsylvania. His Grand theatre, opened in the fall of 1909, is the oldest motion picture theatre in the city, and was the first picture house built in Johnstown with a balcony and with appointments similar to those of "legitimate" houses.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

A FEW REASONS

why "NEWMAN" METAL FRAMES have been chosen by all the big circuits and best class of theatres.

1—Because the constant exposure to all sorts of weather conditions cannot affect "NEWMAN" NON-CORROSIVE METAL FRAMES.

2—Because of their richness in beauty and design, they liven the entrance and render the lobby more inviting than any other kind of frames.

3—Because they will outlast a dozen wood frames. They are practically un-wear-out-able.

"Master of Men"

(Harma Productions)

THIS is one of several British productions, brought over from across the water by Harry Maze Jenks, offering them to American buyers. In reviewing this picture, one is naturally inclined to look at it with American eyes, since it is to be offered to American audiences. Although as a production this particular one falls below the average American standard, as an entertainment, it comes up a little above, because of the good story. It not only holds the interest, but also appeals to the better emotions.

The story is based on the novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim. It deals with a poor inventor who is loved by a titled lady; but circumstances force him to marry a poor girl. He, however, is cut up for bigger things. Inspired by the titled lady, who still shows love to him he reaches higher and higher, until he is elected a member of the Parliament to represent a labor district. The prime minister, recognizing his worth, offers him a position in his cabinet. Although he is urged by the Lady to accept, he declines, preferring to go abroad with his wife, in order to save her from herself, who, due to his neglect, had started to renew acquaintance with her old friends. In time they are blessed with a child and are happy.

The one big selling point of this picture is the author's name; it is so well known to the American book-loving public, that it should help to draw the crowds. Another good point an exhibitor might pick out to exploit is the fact that Mary Pettingay, who assumes the role of the titled Lady, is the prettiest woman on the screen; and she not only photographs well, but also acts realistically.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

Educational's Late Releases

(Two Recent Scenics)

IN "Gypsies of the Arctic," Educational offers an exceedingly interesting reel containing various views of the large reindeer "ranches" maintained by the Laplanders. The spectator is treated to scenes in which the camera has caught thousands of the animals, one of which, showing them fording a river, is particularly fascinating. Educational has a habit of providing exhibitors and public with really "different" films and "Gypsies of the Arctic" is one of them.

In "An Essay of the Hills" Robert Bruce presents another reel of beautiful views taken in the northwestern part of the United States. Two scenes stand out in particular, one taken of a series of mountain ranges from the opposite side of a lake. Mr. Bruce has caught the beginning of a rainstorm in some of the best photography it has ever been our pleasure to see. Another scene shows rain clouds sweeping over the mountain tops. But the whole reel is an artistic gem. As usual, instead of producing an ordinary scenic, Mr. Bruce has brought forth what might well be described as a thousand feet of poetry.—Peter Milne.

"Fit to Win"

(Public Health Films—Six Reels)

ALL paper provided on this production carries the line, "The first motion picture to speak frankly on the causes and effects of venereal diseases." And this line really constitutes a complete review. It is of interest, though, to add that "Fit to Win" was authorized by the United States Health Service and produced by the Commission on Training Camp Activities of the War Department. It received its "first run" in the training camps during war time, the purpose of its exhibition being to warn and teach the soldiers.

The first reel of the six devotes itself to the display of the effects of venereal diseases. Such scenes have been confined to the clinic heretofore. The general public will doubtless profit by their exhibition, providing its collective stomach is not easily disturbed. Then the other five reels take up the cases of five army boys. One of them heeds the lectures of his officer, stays away from temptation, goes to France and returns a hero. One of the others after having his fling escapes serious consequences through the army treatment, but the other three have a pretty severe time of it.

The print shown for review contained the subtitles used in the army prints. These were of a necessity absolutely frank, employing the medical terms frequently as well as the common colloquialisms of such terms.

The picture's story is of considerable interest and was given a production by Lieutenant E. H. Griffith that, if not subtle, is forceful and carries every point. Sergeant Raymond McKee, an actor by profession, soldier by adoption, makes well of the part of Billy Hale, the fellow who stays straight. Paul Kelly and Harry Gripp give very good performances.

If the exhibitor is possessed of the desire to better the future chances of his community, then "Fit to Win" is the picture to show, provided that he can arrange the exhibitions of the picture for men and women at different times. Any attempt to exploit it as a sensational production will only react to the exhibitor's discredit. If it is presented properly it will do immeasurable good.

"THE FIRE FLINGERS"—UNIVERSAL

Holds Interest from First to Last; Dual Role Story

IF there is any particular kind of stories Mr. Julian is perfectly at home in, they are undoubtedly the detective or the mystery sort. He knows how to work up the suspense in them. Of course this doesn't mean that he is not as skillful in handling other type of stories—you well remember " The Kaiser," also " A Kentucky Cinderella," a comedy drama, that ranks with the best program picture ever made—he simply seems to have an extremely well developed proficiency for the detective and the mystery brand. Those of you who have run " The Mysterious Mr. Tiller," or " Midnight Madness," have sufficient evidence of that.

Although not built along the same lines, mystery and suspense are the predominant elements in " The Fire Flingers," and in spite of its extraordinary length, it holds the interest from the beginning to the very last. The only point a critical patron might pick to criticise is the fact that the story is of the dual role type. In it, a stranger takes the place of the heroine's husband, without the substitution being detected. Of course such an incident requires quite a stretch of imagination to believe, the skillful handling of this situation by the director, however, has made it as convincing as is possible in such cases.

The picture should have a wide appeal.—Released April 21.—Length, 7 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

PRESS NOTICE

Such a celebrated personality of the picture art as Rupert Julian makes his return to the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— this week in the latest Universal production entitled " The Fire Flingers." Mr. Julian will be remembered as the man who produced and played the star part in the great attraction, " The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." Since then his appearance on the screen have been all too infrequent and there is a large number of film lovers who will welcome his return in " The Fire Flingers." This picture is an adaptation of a Saturday Evening Post piece of fiction of the same title by William J. Neidig, and it was one of the most popular stories published in that paper during the past year.

Many will remember the strange story of the two convicts, Richard Hatton and Chris Cotteril who when finally freed from long years in prison set out to begin over again and find the going tremendously difficult. The peculiar chain of circumstances that makes good their freedom, prevents them from being forced back behind the prison walls, is an excellent piece of writing from the fictional viewpoint, and as produced under Mr. Julian's direction it takes on a dramatic force the value of which can hardly be overestimated.

Mr. Julian himself plays the dual role of Richard Hatton and Richard Olwell, and in his support appear E. A. Warren, Jane Novak, Fay Tincher, Fritzi Ridgeway, Clyde Fillmore, Fred Kelsey and William Lloyd. The picture has been given a presentation worthy indeed to hold such an unusual and strong story as this one of Neidig.

THE STORY

Richard Hatton and Chris Cotteril, released from prison at last, determine never to violate the law again. The breathing of the free air is to them a long longed for luxury, and as they walk down the highroad their spirits soar. When they approach a town they apply in a printing plant for work and are put at the presses. But the morning is hardly done when their employer, Olwell, is informed by the police as to the men's career. Cursing them he puts his hands at work driving them forth, and even the slight money they earned in the morning is not theirs to take away. Cotteril is for demanding the pay, but Hatton is wise enough to know that if they create a disturbance it will only make things harder for them.

Playing a trick on fate the men apply at Olwell's home for food, and Winifred Olwell, the printer's wife, gladly satisfies them. Winifred's life is empty. Her husband's brute temper and mistreatment of her have long since killed all her love for him. That very day Olwell plans to elope with his stenographer, and he returns to his home to shave away his beard. He discovers the men there and brutally attacks them, felling Hatton with a cruel blow on the head. As he rushes at Cotteril he steps aside and the fiend drops to the floor after crashing into the brick of the fireplace. They find him dead!

Prison looms ahead for both of them again—the life that they had suffered for years—and so when Cotteril makes the discovery that Hatton is the duplicate of the dead man, things are quickly arranged and the imposition is made complete. And Winifred grows again to love her " husband," until one day Hatton, despite his great love for her, tells her all. And it is not for this woman to turn the man she loves back to prison. They live in happiness.

PROGRAM READER

Another Saturday Evening Post story done on the screen. Such a statement might have startled the picture world five or six years ago, but today we accept it as one of the ordinary occurrences. There are almost as many Post stories on the screen as there are in the Post. However and notwithstanding this latest one which will be presented here shortly is rather unusual. Many of our patrons will remember it—" The Fire Flingers "—when it was published last year. Written by William J. Neidig, it told the vividly dramatic narrative of two ex-convicts, before whom the free world about them revealed itself as the greatest blessing in life. How they were hounded out of their jobs and how they stepped right into the midst of a situation that, if it became known, would send them back behind the bars, perhaps to the electric chair, and how they managed to elude the law are events which, under the skilled hand of Mr. Neidig, form a tale of startling originality. The picture was produced under the direction of Rupert Julian, the man who made and played the leading part in " The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." Mr. Julian plays the dual role of one of the convicts and his persecutor, and is surrounded by a cast that in this instance, at least, appears to be of exceptional ability.

CATCH LINES

To Richard Hatton this appeared the only chance. Olwell lay dead on the floor before him. He knew that he would be accused of murder, knew that he would be convicted and probably sent to the chair for no one would believe his, an ex-convict's, story. .What wonder then that Hatton should seize the only way out, to take advantage of the dead man's resemblance to him and play the impostor! And though he knew that Olwell was married he did this thing! See " The Fire Flingers "—for dramatic suspense it ranks in a class by itself.

Adapted from William J. Neidig's story of the same name in the Saturday Evening Post—one of that magazine's most successful pieces of fiction.

You have never languished long days, years, in jail—you do not know then what it means to breathe the free air—it is one of the greatest luxuries in the world—to go about unshackled, unrestrained with the limitless sky overhead. What wonder then that Richard Hatton, for years a convict, took this desperate means to stay free! Means so startling, so daring, that they form one of the greatest photoplays of the year—" The Fire Flingers."

Produced by Rupert Julian whose great picture " The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin " established him as one of the masters of his art.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a great story to advertise in this picture and you should go about it in an appropriate way. Don't content yourself with a simple announcement that Rupert Julian is to be seen in " The Fire Flingers," for the inards of this picture deserve much more than that. In preparing your copy, both drawings and word arguments, there are two big points to bring out in regard to the story. One is that the two ex-convicts consider their freedom the greatest blessing that has ever come to them. Words will convey this impression and convey it in a strongly dramatic way if you present it with care and proper thought. The other point is that one of the ex-convicts assumes a dead man's place before the world and the widow, on discovering that he is the other's double. Certainly these

"FIGHTING FOR GOLD"—FOX

Clean Picture with Tom Mix Unusually Entertaining

YOUR patrons should enjoy this latest Tom Mix picture, because it is clean and, although a Western, is free from excessive shooting and killing. Entire dependence to entertain has been placed equally upon the story and the legitimate thrilling stunts of the star, accomplished with the aid of his horse and his gun, whcih have won him so many admirers. The picture, in fact, may be considered as entertaining as any released on the Fox program featuring Mr. Mix, and if the reports coming in regarding the pulling power of this star's picture be taken as a criterion, "Fighting for Gold," provided conditions are normal, should draw good crowds and satisfy them.—Released March 30.—Length, 5 reels.—*P. Parades are the things these days and you'll see a veritable parade of thrills in "Fighting For Gold," the Tom Mix picture now at the ——— theatre. Each one tries to outdo all the others and none is successful in accomplishing this!

In which a grizzly bear spoils a picnic and starts a romance!

Don't bother about any of those fake cures—you can get your hair raised at the ——— theatre where "Fighting For Gold" is being shown.

Tom Mix never mixed in anything as thrilling as this—don't miss a scene of it.

Tom Mix treats his life about as carefully as you flip a coin. But he always lands heads up! See his latest thriller "Fighting For Gold."

PRESS NOTICE

Tom Mix, the hard riding, hard fighting, William Fox star, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest photoplay entitled "Fighting for Gold." The various critics who have viewed this picture at advance showings have pronounced it just about the best thing that Mix has mixed in for quite a while. And that's saying considerable when all is done with saying for this fearless Fox star has given some mighty fine pictures to the public during the last year or so.

"Fighting for Gold" was written by William Macleod Raine and produced under the direction of Edward J. LeSaint. It tells the story of an English miner working a claim in the United States. His troubles are looking after his wayward partner and keeping the British firm operating on the land next him from jumping his claim. Even when romance enters the routine of this by no means dull existence, the fellow's troubles increase instead of disappearing. There is much villainy afoot and the hero has a hard time of it, keeping himself out of jail for a crime he did not commit, keeping his mine and keeping his girl. However he comes through with flying colors after the thrills are over.

And real thrills there are in "Fighting for Gold." The meeting of hero and heroine is accomplished during one of the best little thrills ever reflected on the screen and this initial thrill is not the finish; more like it, it is but the signal for many more to follow. The star receives graceful and delightful support from Teddy Sampson as the girl, while Jack Nelson, Harry Lounsdale, Sid Jordan, and others render adequate assistance.

THE STORY

Jack Kilmeny, an Englishman, works a gold claim in the west of the United States and he has to fight every inch of the way. To begin with he has a rascally partner in the person of Curly Brandon, who also needs the money but who is too lazy to fight for it after the manner of Jack. And Jack's troubles with Curly are made in no wise lighter by a British firm which holds the property next his and which, through divers underhand manners, is attempting to get control of the young fellow's claim. Gunmen fail in frightening Jack away. He stays and fights.

The way romance enters Jack's life is peculiar. His pet grizzly bear departs from his moorings and lands down on a picnic party. In this party are Lord and Lady Farquar, holders in the aforementioned British company, their daughter Moya and Bobyan Verinder, who considers himself very much engaged to Moya. When the bear takes possession of the picnic spread Moya takes refuge in the wagon. But it is a poor refuge after all as the horses take fright and run away. Then it's up to Jack to stage a thriling rescue which he does and, although mayhap he doesn't know it, he starts in loving Moya when he holds her, trembling with fear, in his arms.

But Jack's road is by no means cleared of trouble. In fact it only increases in proportions. Curly robs a carrier and throws the blame on Jack and while the young gallant is proving his innocence in no uncertain terms Bobyan takes possession of his mine and Moya. But Bobyan doesn't know his men. His hired villains throw dice for Moya and are fighting for her when Jack arrives and proceeds to clean things up with typical British thoroughness. And then all the differences between the adjoining property owners are amicably settled when Jack and Moya marry.

PROGRAM LEADER

Thrills and more thrills! "Fighting For Gold" which will shortly be shown at the——— has more of thrills to the foot of celluloid than anything that has come this way in quite some time. And you know that we are telling the truth when we add that Tom Mix is the star of these thrills. Here is an actor who treats his life about as carefully as the average man does a plugged nickel. It's something of a wonder that he's still alive to go and watch himself laugh death straight in the face. It's a great thing to do, that. To laugh at trouble, at danger, to fight and win. It's rather a good creed to live on. Well, we don't want to preach at all. "Fighting For Gold" doesn't preach either. It merely raises the hair on your head and gives you a wonderful and entertaining time—your full money's worth and more. The story is laid in the west, but as far as ranking with the average western don't for a minute think that "Fighting For Gold" is at all conventional. It is—well, to tell the truth, it is so rapid and thrilling and delightfully entertaining that it can't be described. To see it is to have a real time. That's coming to you. Don't dodge it.

SUGGESTIONS

Naturally in exploiting a picture of this character your chief aim should be to bring out the thrilling action that it contains. Don't stint along this line at all. Tom Mix has a reputation that few if any on the screen can approach. His stunts are daring and original. People know him for his stunts first, his personality and acting ability come afterwards. So go the limit on this angle of the picture; it's the big angle, the true angle, the appealing angle.

Mix has done so many pictures of this sort and each one of them has been so genuinely thrilling that he has carved a niche in the photoplay world all to himself. In other words he has become known for a certain type of entertainment. And this is what the exhibitor wants. We don't mean to imply that all his pictures are the same, that they run along in conventional ruts. Far from it, they are different. But it's the type. That is the manner in which they have become standardized like any successful product. So merely the display of the star's name counts for a whole lot. And if you follow this along with same bang-up actionful copy, actionful in the way of both pictures or drawings and word arguments, you will be offering your trade a combination that it will buy.

You might mention Teddy Sampson. She plays the heroine. She is one of the oldest players, from the point of experience, one of the youngest otherwise. Give her a good play for she is attractive and many of your people may remember her from her previous appearances on the screen.

two points are going to attract. Have a look at the first catch line printed elsewhere on this page. If you follow out this suggestion it should fit appropriately in your copy.

As regards the author, source, direction and star of "The Fire Flingers," here are four more selling points. William J. Neidig's story first appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and was produced by Rupert Julian. He is also the star. Surely here is a combination. You will recall Julian's work on and in "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," one of the greatest hits of war times; your people will too. And you have the dual role to play up too. All things considered, "The Fire Flingers" affords an exceptional opportunity for the progressive exhibitor who wants to get more than the average money for his show.

"THE UNKNOWN QUANTITY"—VITAGRAPH

Exceedingly Pleasant O. Henry Story with Corinne Griffith

THERE is an unknown quantity, the only quantity that will make friends of the millionaire's son and the girl whose father and brother sufferer with her as the result of the moneyed man's operations in the market. The unknown quantity is love and when it comes certainly the differences of the two fly away.

This is the bare outline of the O. Henry story on which "The Unknown Quantity" is builded. It makes an effective entertainment, particularly as it is presented in good spirit and acted with the pleasing realty that was always to be found in the O. Henry stories themselves. It is endowed, too, with the surprise finish, a factor that figures largely in the works of this author.

Corinne Griffith is a perfect delight in the star part and she has two very good aides in Huntley Gordon and Frederick Buckley, the last named gentleman having formerly spent the hours reviewing the work of other actors. "The Unknown Quantity" sends one away in a pleasant frame of mind and is possessed of a peculiarly rosy outlook on life despite all its faults.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 14.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Mary Boyne	Corinne Griffith
Dan Kinsolving	Huntley Gordon
Septimus Kinsolving	Harry Davenport
Thomas Boyne	Jack Ridgeway
Peter Kenwitz	Frederick Buckley
Sammy Boyne	Jack McLean

O. Henry story.
Directed by Tom R. Mills.

PRESS NOTICE

It certainly was a red letter day for the motion picture art when the Vitagraph Company acquired the rights to O. Henry's works. This author who wrote of New York in the wonderful volume "The Four Million," who wrote of the real New York, not just its Broadway, its Fifth Avenue or its Third Avenue, worked with a pen that must have been magic indeed. At any rate, his stories have made ideal picture material as has often been proven in the previous Vitagraph pictures taken from his works. "The Unknown Quantity" is the most recent of his works to find its way to the screen. It is this picture that will be presented at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week with the beautiful Corinne Griffith as the star.

To tell the story of "The Unknown Quantity" would be to spoil one of the best pieces of entertainment that has ever made its way to the screen. O. Henry wrote with a surprise in every paragraph. This indeed was as much a part of his art as his vast knowledge of the city and its people of which he wrote. And this spirit of the original story has been communicated to the screen with all faithfulness to detail. Both the adaptor and the director of the production have seen to it that little if any of the original O. Henry charm was lost in the work's transition to the screen.

Miss Griffith is a perfect delight in the role of Mary Boyne, the baker's daughter. Huntley Gordon is a clean cut hero. Performances of exceptional merit are given by Frederick Buckley as Kenwitz, by Harry Davenport in the role of Kinsolving, the millionaire, by Jack McLean as the brother, and by Jack Ridgeway as the old baker. The picture was produced under the direction of Tom Mills.

SUGGESTIONS

Although you have a star whose popularity is ever on the increase in this picture the main selling argument in connection with it is the name of the author. One exhibitor complained that the O. Henry series, while good, were not startling because his people thought O. Henry used an apostrophe instead of a period after the O. In other words, he meant his people didn't know him. But that is certainly no reason why they shouldn't know him.

Take in the first place your newspaper copy. A good plan is to follow out a suggestion similar to that used in the Vitagraph advertising when the series was first inaugurated. Have an O. Henry set as a background for your copy and have one of the books ("The Unknown Quantity") standing apart from the others or opened. Over this can be printed any announcement you wish to make.

Here too is a real chance to collaborate with a book dealer if he is near your theatre. And if you don't take kindly to this idea get a few copies of the book in which "The Unknown Quantity" is and sell them yourself. They would also make a lobby display of an attractive nature if surrounded with the stills supplied for exhibition purposes.

Certainly play up the star's name too. You can safely play her as one of the prettiest if not the prettiest girl on the screen. She also has talent. But everyone likes to see a pretty girl. Let 'em know it then.

CATCH LINES

Because Septimus Kinsolving was money-mad the price of wheat advanced. Where on the east side five cents bought a loaf of bread before it now became a matter of two cents more. It was just a little bit, but because of this Thomas Boyne, the kindly baker, went mad, his son went to jail and his daughter became a mere drudge! How? See the answer in "The Unknown Quantity," one of the O. Henry pictures.

What was that Unknown Quantity? Peter Kenwitz called it X and went about to solve his problem by algebra. He found out in the end that it was love. But you'll enjoy the workings of this problem. It's done in O. Henry's best style and makes one of the most enjoyable pictures of the entire series.

Corinne Griffith, the most beautiful girl in pictures, in a new O. Henry production—if you want to see real life see "The Unknown Quantity."

O. Henry knew his New York, its Third Avenue, its Fifth and its Broadway, and he wrote of its people with a pen dipped at the fount of realism—one of his best works is "The Unknown Quantity"—see it at the ——— theatre with Corinne Griffith, the Vitagraph beauty, in the stellar role.

THE STORY

..Because Septimus Kinsolving had the money-making craze the price of bread on the east side advanced from five to seven cents. And because of this Thomas Boyne, a kindly old baker, lost his trade and his mind at the same time. It wouldn't have been so bad if it were not for his son, Sammy, who because of the catastrophe to his father consorted with evil companions and became more or less of a thief. And Mary Boyne, the daughter, was obliged to drudge away her time making shirts. Mary's true friend, Peter Kenwitz, a young watchmaker, looked on the whole affair in something akin to despair. The truth of the matter was that Peter was an idealist and couldn't quite tolerate the whole financial scheme of the world.

But in time Septimus died and his young son, Dan, returned from Europe. He found himself with millions and he found out that two of these millions were made off of two cent advances in the price of bread. It didn't seem quite right to him, and he went to Peter to ask him what to do. Peter told him he could no nothing, and cited the Boyne case to make his point. He offered to take Dan to Mary and let him see for himself. And Mary practically threw Dan out of her little room, but even so, he left his heart behind him. Then Mary found that a great lawyer had been hired to get her brother out of his trouble in court while her father was given every care in a proper asylum where his mental faculties were gradually restored.

And it was some time later that the faithful Peter met Mary, all befurred and just ready to step into her automobile. He couldn't understand until she told him her name was Mrs. Dan Kinsolving. Love was the unknown quantity that patched the differences between the rich and the poor. And Peter went on his way rather puzzled about everything.

PROGRAM READER

Another one of the delightful O. Henry pictures is "The Unknown Quantity," which will shortly be presented at this theatre. "The Unknown Quantity" was produced by Vitagraph, and has Corinne Griffith in the stellar role. We are not going to spoil the entertainment of our patrons by relating the plot of this tale. O. Henry wrote with a surpise in each hand, so to speak, and this one of his stories is filled with unusual twists, that though they are unusual to a degree, are realistic to the letter. This author knew his New York as few writers do. And he was not restricted to one phase of the city's life. There is many a writer of the day who thinks he knows New York because he's walked on Fifth

"THE PARISIAN TIGRESS"—METRO

Viola Dana's Personality Wins Again

WE don't know of any actress save Viola Dana, who could inject such real life into a rather meagre and conventional plot, as she has done with the case of "The Parisian Tigress." The story is one of those in which a child of the underworld is passed off as an old man's lost daughter, to be discovered as the real heir when the action is done. The scene this time is Paris, and Miss Dana has the role of a little Apache. The body of the action has to do more with her strenuous life at dancing than in her acclimation to the new surroundings of the Count's home, and in these scenes her bright personality and her lightning versatility are given full play.

Miss Dana's performance is so spirited indeed that when she is not on the scene the action is inclined to lag by comparison. However, her appearances are many and she herself is always a delight.

Regarding story "The Parisian Tigress" may be set down as only an average comedy-drama; as regards star, it is excellent and the average of the two falls on the better side of the line. The scenes have considerable atmosphere which is not distinctly Parisian but which withal is fetching.—Length, 5 reels. —Released March 31.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

Viola Dana, the spirited and talented young Metro star will be seen at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in her latest picture entitled "The Parisian Tigress." Written specially for her by Albert Capellani and June Mathis, the story affords the star the role of Jeanne, a Paris Apache dancer who is suddenly elevated to the position of a famous Count's daughter through a trick of circumstance. The old Count's last days are made supremely happy by the presence of the little waif from the gutter and Jeanne also finds herself revelling in this life, so new and different to her. A series of dramatic incidents serve to bring the picture to a close that is no less powerful than it is satisfactory.

Miss Dana, last seen here in "Satan Junior" and "The Gold Cure" performs with grace, spirit and charm in the role of Jeanne and is irresistable in every one of her varying moods. Among the younger actresses on the screen Miss Dana is certainly one of the ablest, if not the ablest. As a comedienne she is par excellence and when it comes to a more serious mood, her change of expression shows a lightning versatility that presents Miss Dana in a totally different attitude. She is able to cope with any and all parts awarded her on the screen and that something which is called personality for want of a better name, she has in abundance.

"The Parisian Tigress" was produced under the direction of Herbert Blache and the star is surrounded by a competent cast which includes Darrell Foss, Henry Kolker, Edward Connelly, Clarissa Selwynne and Louis D'Arclay.

THE STORY

Count de Suchet, an invalid, mourns the tragedy of his early life when his father succeeding in persuading his wife, of the common people, to release him. She had taken her own life and, that the husband she loved so well might not be handicapped in his future career, had hidden their baby girl away. To his friend, Henri Dutray, the Count confides this story and adds that probably the girl would be wearing a ring similar to his if she were ever found. And so Dutray, impoverished, evolves a plan, or at least the events which follow after evolve the plan for him.

One night as he is returning to his studio in Paris a girl dashes before him and runs upstairs. Dutray closes the door and shuts out her pursuer. But he cannot find her though he searches his apartment over. Jeanne, the girl, had concealed herself in one of the closets. When Dutray retires she comes forth and makes herself comfortable on the couch. The next morning she makes her presence known and breakfasts with Dutray. It appears that she is a much persecuted little dancer. Her brother Jacque had attempted to sell her to a rich old rogue and she had rebelled.

At that moment Jacque enters and the two men decide to introduce Jeanne as the long lost daughter of Count de Suchet. This Jeanne is loathe to do but her brother forces her to. The Count's last days are made happier by Jeanne who readily adopts herself to this new mode of life, so strange to her. But the old nobleman does not last long. On his death bed he sends his sister to summon Jeanne. She discovers her arguing with Jacque who has come for more money. And she learns of the whole trick. The Count dies believing her his daughter, however, and soon afterwards this belief is proven a reality for Jacque is mortally wounded in a struggle with one of the servants and before he dies he tells the truth regarding Jeanne. And with the passing of time Jeanne is made happy with young Albert Chauroy, the son of the family next door.

PROGRAM READER

Viola Dana, the Metro star, who has firmly established herself as one of the leading favorites with patrons of the ———— theatre through her appearances in "The Gold Cure" and "Satan Junior" will return here shortly in her latest comedy-drama entitled "The Parisian Tigress." This presents a charming little story written expressly for the star by Albert Capellani and June Mathis and produced under the direction of Herbert Blache. Miss Dana is the most versatile of the younger actresses on the screen today. She can pass from the lightest of humorous situations to the most serious of dramatic moments with the ease of the skilled actress. And Miss Dana is, beyond shadow of a doubt, one of the skilled actresses of the screen. Her exceptional power of mimicry as displayed in "The Gold Cure" and her ingenuity as a light comedienne in "Satan Junior," are exhibitions of her capability that have raised her to the very topmost rung of the histrionic ladder. And the spirit, youth and fire which she puts into her rendition of the role of Jeanne, the little Apache in "The Parisian Tigress" adds still further laurels to her name. This picture will be shown here next ———— and the management has assembled a program of distinction to surround it.

SUGGESTIONS

First off there is the title of this feature; a money-pulling title if there ever was one. Displayed over your theatre or in bold type over the face of an advertisement it is certainly going to attract attention. This title with the popularity of the star, the popularity that has come as a result of some of the ablest performances ever seen on the screen, should result in a surefire combination. In particular it should be recalled that Miss Dana's two immediately previous pictures "Satan Junior" and "The Gold Cure" have been reported as successful in practically every theatre where they have been exhibited. Mention of these might also be made in the advertising with good results.

In serving up "The Parisian Tigress" to your patrons present it as a comedy-drama and lay particular stress on the fact that many of the scenes are laid in the Paris Latin quarter. It might also be well to feature the Apache dance that Miss Dana and Louis D'Arclay execute as it is prominent in the action and is exceedingly well done. In fact this fetching atmosphere of the Latin quarter might well be made the background of all newspaper advertising, lobby drawings and lobby display. It will serve to attract attention particularly well and if you bring out the high spirit of the picture in pictures and arguments you will have a good display. Don't let them think that because the scene of action is Paris that the story has anything to do with the war. There is not a trace of it in the entire five reels.

"THE SHERIFF'S SON"—PARAMOUNT

Reviewer Thinks It Best of Type in Which Ray Appears

IT is hardly necessary to comment on the production end of "The Sheriff's Son," because Thomas Ince hardly ever puts out a picture in which one could pick any serious flaws in that respect. As an entertainment, it is just the kind that appeals to picture goers. It will especially enthuse all Ray fans, for he is given the part of a real hero, the hero of their dreams, who fights to win the girl.

The title should indicate to any one that it is not a society play; it is not a Western either, but a feud, staged in a fascinatingly rough mountainous country. Excitement and suspense are its predominating elements. They are so intense the attention of the spectator is held nailed on the screen.

"The Sheriff's Son" could be safely classed as the best picture of this type that ever featured Charles Ray. It should fit any theatre.—Released March 30.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

PRESS NOTICE

Charles Ray, the young Paramount-Ince star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest photoplay entitled "The Sheriff's Son." This was written for Ray by William McLeod Raine, a well known magazine writer and novelist, and affords him the chance to get in some of the best acting he has ever done. As Royal Beaudry, Mr. Ray appears as a young man who has grown up a coward. The reason for this may be traced back to prenatal influence. Even through his college career he refuses to indulge in any of the manly sports. His fear gains such a control over him that he is practically ostracised by the rest of the college.

How he overcomes this inheritance forms the subject matter of the five reels, and the transformation is worked by means of a plot fraught with dramatic incident and exciting crises. Mr. Ray is at his best while giving a character study of this type. He brings out the pitiful fear that possesses the boy to a wonderful degree. He succeeds in working the spectator up to a high pitch of sympathy. You live the part with him, as indeed, he makes you live with him every part he undertakes.

Mr. Ray is supported by such well known players as Seena Owen, a beautiful actress whom many patrons will remember in support of Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart, by the sterling old actor John P. Lockey, and Clyde Benson, Charles K. French, Otto Hoffman and Lamar Johnstone. The scenario for the picture was entrusted to the skilled J. G. Hawks while the production was in charge of Victor Schertzinger, who has scored decisive successes with a number of Charles Ray pictures. The five reels reveal a delightful western atmosphere, a fitting background for the spirited action in the play.

THE STORY

Before Royal Beaudry was born his father, the sheriff of the county, was killed and through his mother he inherited a great fear—a fear which grew into the most obvious sort of cowardice as the years went by. Brought up by his father's friend, Dave Dingwell, Royal is given a good education and sent to college. But he never engages in the sports that have any physical prowess attached to them. His fear practically shuts him off from the rest of the boys. After his graduation Royal learns that Dave has been made a captive of the Rutherfords, the same gang of cattle rustlers who killed his father. His help is solicited and after mastering his cowardice Royal complies with the request.

During his investigations he meets Beulah Rutherford, a beautiful girl, but when he discovers her identity his fear even overcomes his love. But Beulah's love for Royal works a change in him. She warns him of a plot against his life and, aided by her, he avoids it. He also makes good the release of his guardian. Then one day Beulah is lost. She had gone out riding alone and had not returned. A search is instituted for her and Royal finds her in an old prospect hole where she had fallen. Meldrum, another suitor, had found her before but had left her there as he was piqued at her coldness toward him.

When Meldrum returns Royal forces the miscreant in the hole himself. When Royal escorts Beulah to her home he learns from her uncle that he had killed Beaudry because the sheriff had killed Beulah's father. So the young people decide not to let this old animosity stand between them and they marry. And the various ordeals Royal has been through have been the making of him—his cowardice is gone.

PROGRAM LEADER

Patrons of the ——— will be glad to learn that one of the features shortly to be seen here is "The Sheriff's Son," a Paramount photoplay produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince and starring the clever Charles Ray. Mr. Ray's marvelous presentations of human character on the screen are known to all picturegoers. The work he did in pictures such as "String Beans," "A Nine O'clock Town," "The Girl Dodger," and others have added laurels to his name, and it may be said that now he is riding on the high crest of the wave of popularity. In "The Sheriff's Son" he portrays the role of a coward—a coward because of pre-natal influence—who grows to manhood with this shameful fear in his heart. The character is one that Ray handles particularly well. He makes every act convincing and his final transformation into a man who dares is done with fine effect and at the same time with a complete regard for realism. In Mr. Ray's support appear a notable group of Ince favorites, including Senna Owen, John P. Lockney, Clyde Benson, Charles K. French, Otto Hoffman and Lamar Johnstone. "The Sheriff's Son" was adapted by J. G. Hawks from a story by William McLeod Raine, and was directed by Victor Schertzinger under the supervision of Mr. Ince.

SUGGESTIONS

Charles Ray pictures sell on the star's name alone. His record as a portrayer of true characters is notable and his name always invites a good show. Exhibitors who have played his pictures with regularity know the money-making power that lies in this name and need not be told of the star's value. A few suggestions on the exploitation of this particular picture, however, will not come amiss, for really "The Sheriff's Son" is based on a theme of unusual interest. Of course it should be advertised that the star takes the role of a coward. This will immediately attract people because they will readily realize that this sort of a role will offer him the many opportunities to inject the touches of reality and human frailty for which he is known. But greater significance will be attached to the part if you state that the man is a coward from pre-natal influence. This phase of psychological development is one that always causes comment. It is the topic for discussion whenever mentioned. So play this up in your advertising. Ask your readers, if you like, whether they believe in it or not. Come right out with the fact or the question and you'll have them talking about it. If this is made the basis of advertising copy it ought to bring money to you.

Glance over the names of the other members of the cast. There are many that regular picture goers will recognize instantly. We refer in particular to such well known players as Seena Owen, John P. Lockney and Charles K. French. If you cater to a regular crowd mention these names. They will lend added significance to your copy.

"EXTRAVAGANCE"—PARAMOUNT

Fully Up to Ince Standard; Genuine Drama

THERE is one thing you can always be sure of in an Ince picture, and that is expensive stage settings. In this one, they are so pretty, they should draw many favorable comments from your patrons. The other features of the production, such as direction, acting, photography, etc., are all up to the usual Ince standard. Of course, every one of you knows that, however well a picture may be produced, it amounts to very little, unless the story is also good; but the story, in this instance, fully measures up with the elaborateness of the production. It is real drama; its different situations unfold themselves so smoothly, that they hold the interest of the spectator tense from first to last. Some parts of the story are quite thrilling.

Being free from any suggestiveness whatever, " Extravagance " should appeal to all tastes.—Released March 16.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

PROGRAM READER

One of the interesting pictures shortly to be seen at the ——— is " Extravagance," Dorothy Dalton's latest Paramount photoplay produced under the direction of Thomas H. Ince. This is a story of a husband and wife who lived beyond their means in New York. How they found out that they couldn't beat the "game" and how they finally found happiness in a spot far away from the city's bustle makes a picture of absorbing interest as handled by the producers. It was written for Miss Dalton by John Lynch, and the star is awarded a fine part. As an emotional actress Miss Dalton has few superiors on the screen today. Her work is possessed of a certain tone and quality that is rarely to be found on the screen, and her ability to portray realistically roles of this sort has been one of the principal factors in her rapid rise to stardom. In " Extravagance " she is supported by a cast of Ince favorites, including Charles Clary, J. Barney Sherry and Donald MacDonald. The picture has been given a production that carries out the suggestion of its title to the letter.

PRESS NOTICE

" Extravagance," a Paramount-Ince photoplay with Dorothy Dalton as the star, will be the main attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Written specially for the star by John Lynch, one of the leading screen writers of the day, " Extravagance " affords her the role of Helen Douglas the wife of a wealthy Wall Street man of New York. But while Douglas is wealthy he is not fabulously so. And in time his wife's numerous extravagances practically eat away his income. And as he himself lives considerably beyond his means a catastrophe impends. How it is averted and how both Helen and her husband find what true happiness is in a spot far from New York, are events which make for a photoplay of contiuued interest and considerable dramatic power.

Miss Dalton appears resplendent in the leading role. She is an actress of great emotional ability, and the part of the wife who spends money like the old fashioned drunken sailor, only more so, fits her to a " t." Mr. Hawks has provided her with many scenes of an intensely dramatic sort, and the story calls for a number of stunning gowns which Miss Dalton wears magnificently. Among her support are Charles Clary, a leading man of great prominence and ability, J. Barney Sherry, long known for his character work in Ince photoplays, Donald MacDonald, a heavy whose reputation grows daily, and Philo McCullough, a well known player who has appeared in a great variety of roles.

Mr. Lynch's story was scenarioized by R. Cecil Smith and produced under the direction of Victor Schertzinger, the man responsible for many of Charles Ray's successes. The film has an atmosphere that lives up to the promises of the title in every respect.

CATCH LINES

They thought that they could beat New York at her own game and that's just the sort that New York is always looking for. She likes to take them in hand and break them. The Douglas family, man and wife, didn't know this, and they plunged, but see what happened in " Extravagance."

Helen Douglas lived beyond her husband's income and so did the husband. They wouldn't take the advice of friends and moderate their mode of life. Instead they went at it stronger than ever, and then the crash came and caught them—see " Extravagance."

A dramatic lesson in high finance and worthless matrimony.

Dorothy Dalton resplendent in a wonderful part —making that part greater through her interpretation of an extravagant woman of New York.

He thought he could beat Wall Street, but he didn't have the stuff in him—and Wall Street showed him a lesson—see " Extravagance " and witness that lesson—its thrilling.

THE STORY

Helen Douglas is the extravagant wife of Alan Douglas, a wealthy Wall Street operator. A friend, Billy Braden, seeing the fallacy of an artificial life in the city, has put sham behind him and is going West. He urges Douglas and his wife to follow his example. On the other hand, his business partner insists that they throw their all into an exchange deal to make a " killing." Helen decides she would rather be a paving stone in New York than a boulevard in a Western city. For this good advice she asks her husband to buy her a necklace. He refuses and they quarrel and she tries to forget her sorrow in sleep. She dreams her husband fails, forges and kills a pursuing policeman, with the result that he is condemned to the chair. As she pleads for mercy with the immovable judge she awakens.

Hurriedly dressing she goes to the exchange and discovers a panic in the stocks in which her husband was speculating. In an effort to save himself he makes a wild appeal to her for her personal money and securities. She refuses him aid. Seeing himself ruined, Douglas in a frenzy, catches his wife by the shoulders and denounces her before the crowd as a woman who has taken all and given nothing. She stands firm, however, even as her husband stands over her threatening to strike. When he returns home that night Helen tells him she realizes what a life of pretense and sham they have lived, that Billy Braden was right—the city had robbed them of their ideals, their sincerity and had given nothing in return. She offers to him all her money to go to some new country where they may start life anew together and seeing before them a lifetime of happiness, he takes her into his arms.

SUGGESTIONS

Let your advertising on this production carry out the implication of the title to the letter. This title is one that will attract the eye, and if in your newspaper and lobby advertising you carry out its tone in all other words and pictures you will have created a display that will not only draw the attention but awaken a vast interest in the reader. This suggestion does not necessarily mean that you should fling money away in exploiting the picture. Quantity doesn't count for so much; in this case it is quality and tone that should be sought.

Play up the New York stuff too, tell how the husband and wife tried to beat New York in the business world and failed. This is an angle that usually attracts. Somehow people like to see the city showed up as a monster. It gives them sort of a feeling of confidence; happiness perhaps that they don't have to live there and still it is rather alluring. There have been many stage plays that have succeeded because of this suggestion in the general atmosphere of the show.

You can go the limit on the star's emotional performance and the gowns she wears. Look over the other members of the cast too. Charles Clary has a long record with Fox and has done some mighty good work. There are many who know him. The others have good records in Ince pictures and exhibitors who know that their audiences are made up of a large percentage of real fans should cash in on these players by mentioning their names in the advertising.

Should Satisfy All; Clean Romance, Well Produced

THOSE of you who have been running the Mary Miles pictures needn't worry about this one pleasing your patrons; it should give them good satisfaction.

The story is a clean and delightful romance, such as fit Miss Minter's talents particularly well. It holds the interest fairly tense. In some of the situations it is given such an interesting twist as to arouse the curiosity of the spectator. In these situations the heroine is shown as having occupied rooms in a stranger's mansion. She thought they belonged to her brother, who, to save his pride, had told her he was a partner to the rich young man, instead of a mere valet.

The production end of the picture is very artistic, direction, interior settings, photography, etc., all being of high standard.—Released through Pathe April 13.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is another American comedy-drama featuring Mary Miles Minter, and if you have been following the suggestions printed in this department on previous pictures made by this house you are making the word American synonymous with that which is light—comedy-drama. This done you should have small trouble in bringing the people in to see "Intrusion of Isabel." Read the first catchline printed elsewhere on this page and see if it wouldn't make a good line for your advertising copy. It tells just enough to get the curiosity up to the money-buying pitch, and yet it refers little to the plot of the story.

It's a good comedy situation, this one of the girl going to the man her brother robbed and demanding that he take care of her while his "partner" is away and this should be made the center of all advertising. The picture lends itself very well to snappy, light ad copy, both in the way of pictures and word arguments. Let your artist see the synopsis and then see if he can't work out some intimate pictures for additional lobby display. These in colors and centered about one of the amusing incidents of the story would arouse interest in all who saw them.

PRESS NOTICE

"Intrusion of Isabel," a high-spirited comedy-drama, with Mary Miles Minter in the principal role, will be the featured attraction at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. This is the work of Joseph Franklin Poland, one of the better known writers for pictures, and affords the star a delightful role, that of Isabel Trevor. Impoverished but of good family, she comes to New York with her brother Bert. He promptly secures employment as valet to Jack Craig, a wealthy New Yorker, but tells his sister that he has gone into partnership with him. Handling Jack's clothes when they are full of money proves too great a temptation for Bert, and eventually he makes off with a large roll.

Isabel can not understand his disappearance but decides that nothing is wrong and goes to Jack's apartment, saying that as long as her brother is his partner she will make her home in "her half" of the house with the colored Mammy. This situation naturally gives rise to a good bit of embarrassment on Jack's part, but the appeal of the girl is not lost on him and he readily prepares a section of the place for her. From here on the film develops an unusual comedy vein that is handled skilfully by the author, and in which the players find plenty of opportunities. There is however, considerable of a dramatic interest through this latter portion also. The picture is, in fact, exceedingly well balanced.

THE STORY

Left almost penniless by the failure and death of their father Isabel Trevor and her brother Bert, sell their old southern home and go to New York. Bert secures work as valet to Jack Craig, a young broker, though telling Isabel that he was taken into partnership. One night Bert takes a roll of bills from the pocket of his employer; then hounded by fear, flees to Montana. Here he succeeds in outdoor work. He promptly sends funds to Isabel, but all of his letters are returned undelivered.

Isabel, stranded, moves with Mammy into "Bert's half" of Craig's house. When she speaks of the partnership, the gallant young bachelor does not deceive her. His growing interest in Isabel, however, is hampered by a claim brought forward by a woman belonging to the gay set with which he has been traveling. She produces a marriage license signed by him one night at a wine supper.

Bert, anxious about his sister, returns to New York, but is unable to locate her at their old flat. Going to Craig's house to make good his theft he witnesses the unmasking of the adventuress. She is "Matrimony Mary," with a crook for a husband and a long record for similar money-getting schemes. Craig's true love affair with Isabel has now a clear field.

CATCH LINES

Jack's valet had decamped with a large bit of his spending money. He was willing to forget this all right but when the valet's sister came down on him with her abundant colored Mammy and demanded that he open his house to his "partner's sister" he couldn't quite understand. But Jack was a gentleman and he went through with the game and came out with a wife. See "Intrusion of Mabel"—it's a winner for comedy-drama.

Here's a new story of New York—the girl gets along all right and doesn't encounter much trouble. What she does encounter is a lot of situations not so amusing to her, but simply uproariously so to the onlooker—see these situations in "Intrusion of Isabel."

Mary Miles Minter in a brisk comedy-drama of New York—it's one of the most enjoyable of the American features.

When we say it's an American comedy-drama we have spoken in superlatives of praise.

PROGRAM READER

Mary Miles Minter, the dainty American favorite, will shortly be seen in her latest comedy-drama for that concern, entitled "Intrusion of Isabel." This is a thoroughly amusing tale of a girl and her brother who came to New York to earn a living. The brother only succeeds in getting a job as valet to a man about town, and the temptation of his position gets the better of him. One day he decamps with a bank roll that doesn't belong to him. He had told his sister that he was this man's partner in business and so when her brother does not appear she goes to the stranger and insists that during her brother's absence she be taken into his home with her old colored Mammy. Naturally the young man is rather aghast at the whole story, but he goes through with the thing, and in the end finds himself with a wife. Of course there is much merriment in the predicaments the young people find themselves in, and there is not a little substantial drama throughout the five reels of the picture. Miss Minter receives support from Alan Forrest, J. Parker Jones and others. The story was written for the star by Joseph Franklin Poland, and produced under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

"MARIE, LTD."—SELECT

Has a Selling Point to the Women

THERE'S a selling angle to this picture if you play it up to the women—and, perhaps, to their husbands—as tipping off a little scheme that wives and "sweethearts" in certain sets carry on. When they need a hat, the picture tells us, they come to an agreement with the proprietor of a millinery store to charge a certain amount over and above the actual selling price; and when the bill is paid by "Poor Man" the conspirators divide the overcharge between them.

Your sales angle is in a subtitle in which one woman declares she has to use this subterfuge because her husband is such a tightwad that he won't give her any spending money.

Aside from this interesting sales angle there is little worth noting in the picture. There is plenty of action, but it consists largely of the characters walking around.—P. S. Harrison.

CATCH LINES

An amazing expose of the way some business in New York is conducted—this particular business establishment happens to be a millinery shop frequented for the most part by chorus girls. You'll pat yourself on the back after you have seen this feature.

Alice Brady, star of the great stage success, "Forever After," in her latest Select picture, a story of New York's byways and highways.

She came from college, an innocent girl, and was plunged headlong into the maelstrom of New York City's rather seamy life—see what she discovered in "Marie, Ltd."

Hats, hats, hats. Drina came to think the world was made of hats. And she didn't like what was undearneath all this fine millinery. See what she found there in "Marie, Ltd."

A story of New York's hidden places.

PRESS NOTICE

Alice Brady's latest Select photoplay entitled, "Marie, Ltd.," will come to the ——— Theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is from a story by Louise Winters and affords Miss Brady a most attractive part. She appears as Drina Hilliard, the daughter of Marie Hilliard. Her mother runs an establishment known as Marie, Ltd., where she sells hats to rich ladies at terrifically high prices. The ladies don't pay for their hats themselves. No, indeed. It is either their husbands or their gentlemen friends who get the bills. Blind hubby or blind gentleman friend comes through with the money and Marie divides up with her customers!

Not a very pretty business indeed for a young girl fresh from college to be catapulted into but Drina gets to learn the ropes within a very short time. And although she loathes the life she must be satisfied with it for there is no other way out. Her romance and the miraculous manner in which her mother is saved from public disgrace are events which spell a most fascinating picture. Miss Brady has the opportunity to show a number of the latest millinery creations in the course of the photoplay an opportunity which many will delight in. Her emotional work is of the highest sort.

The star's leading man this time is Leslie Austen while others who appear are Frank Losee, Mrs. Gertrude Hillman, Josephine Whittell and Gladys Valerie. Jane Murfin, Jane Cowl's collaborator in playwrighting, made the scenario from the novel, while the picture was produced under the direction of Kenneth Webb. Other attractions on the bill at the ——— Theatre for the same dates are——

THE STORY

Marie Hilliard has run a fashionable millinery establishment in New York since her husband has proven unable to get along in the business world. With money earned in this way she has sent her daughter, Drina, to college. When her education is completed Drina determines to go to New York and repay her debt to her mother by helping her in the business, even though she would prefer to teach. On her way to the city the train is held up by bandits, and through this occurrence Drina meets Blair Carson, a young man who had been admiring her throughout the entire trip. He determines to see more of her but after Drina has become established in her mother's shop she gives him not the slightest encouragement.

The big customer of Marie, Ltd., is Colonel Lambert. The old roue is a single man, but a dozen or so chorus girls charge their hats to him. And Drina being a most attractive girl naturally attracts the Colonel. Her mother is very anxious for her to marry him for some reason unknown to Drina, but she refuses, as she holds not the slightest love for him. Drina is made still further unhappy by seeing Blair much in the company of Zelie, a chorus girl. Zelie had seen the Colonel's growing infatuation for Drina and had determined to catch herself another man ere it was too late.

Then the Colonel threatens exposure of her mother unless Drina marry him. It appears that Marie has been systematically overcharging him and her other male customers and selling cheap to her women patrons. With Blair in the toils of Zelie all seems lost to Drina, but in a climax of many surprises Blair saves the Hilliards from the Colonel and declares his love for Drina.

PROGRAM READER

Alice Brady, the Select star, will be seen in her latest picture entitled "Marie, Ltd.," shortly at this theatre. This is a New York story, centering around a fashionable millinery establishment where a girl, fresh from college, finds herself suddenly plunged into what she learns to be dishonest business. It was written by Louise Winters, scenarioized by Jane Murfin, known to the stage world as Jane Cowl's collaborator in playwrighting, and produced under the direction of Kenneth Webb, who made many of the O. Henry pictures for Vitagraph. It is really one of the best pictures in which Miss Brady has appeared, if one can really single out any one above another. Since appearing on the stage all this season in "Forever After," Miss Brady has made a host of new friends and today she is rated as one of the most popular actresses on the screen. Her work in "Marie, Ltd." is marked by that emotional ability that has brought her to the front rank, while she is surrounded by an effective supporting cast, including Leslie Austen, Frank Losee and Mrs. Gertrude Hillman.

SUGGESTIONS

Here you get a popular stage and screen star in a vehicle dealing with a new phase of New York life. Center your advertising about the star for her long appearance in the stage success "Forever After" has added much to her popularity, and the pictures that Select has been putting her in lately have all been of a high calibre. Secondly, lay stress on the locale of the picture, mainly a millinery shop in New York. You might be able to arouse additional interest by stating that the shop was run on a crooked basis and that the patrons were for the most part chorus girls and wealthy women whose aim was to fool their husbands. If you go just this far you will have aroused the reader's interest to a considerable degree. It smacks of the daring, just a little bit of the risque, and in this case it will provide a good selling point.

Advertisements should be gotten up to bring out the "millinery" atmosphere, and here you certainly have a chance to tie up with any local millinery establishment you know of. A display of hats in the window with a neat card announcing your attraction would do a whole lot of good. You might even hit upon some original scheme of advertising in the newspapers along with the millinery establishment.

There is a good cast in support of the star. Kenneth Webb, the director, has done considerable good work on the Vitagraph O. Henry pictures, and if you cater to a fan crowd mention of his name would be advisable.

EVERY showman knows best how to present his own show. There are times, however, when some important angle may not assert itself to the exhibitor who sees picture after picture week after week.

In the SUGGESTIONS of the Complete Plan Book, the advertising possibilities of each picture are taken up from all angles.

In them you may find THE one that you have overlooked.

Perhaps its just the one that will answer your needs.

Look over the SUGGESTIONS in this issue.

Alice Brady, star of "Marie, Ltd."

"WHITEWASHED WALLS"—ROBERTSON-COLE

Of the Light, Pleasing Variety; Should Please All

THIS picture belongs to the light, pleasing variety. Although the story deals with a fictitious Republic, apparently Latin-American, it should amuse picture goers, because it has been produced, not as something serious, but as burlesque; and the same tone is maintained throughout.

The hero is presented as a sculptor, working somewhere in a Republic situated in an unknown part of the world. He becomes the victim of much local intrigue. At one time he is arrested and is about to be shot at sunrise; his American resourcefulness, however, helps him outwit the natives. In the end he wins the love of a native beauty.

The production end of the picture is of the standard set by all pictures handled by the Robertson-Coles organization.—Released through Exhibitors Mutual.—Length, 5 reels.—P. S. Harrison.

THE CAST

Larry	William Desmond
Concha	Fritzi Brunette
Rosa	Carmen Phillips
Mendez	Jack Richardson
Dinero	Arthur Mallete
Cascaro	Frank MacQuarrie
Romero	John Dwiggins
Crisco	Jack Cosgrave
Guard	Frank Lanning
Alias Patricio Cassidano	Walter Perry

THE STORY

His Excellencissimo Romero, Governor of an insignificant South American state, struts around his two by four domain all puffed up with conceit and chianti, a Caesar, Napoleon, Hannibal and Diaz all rolled into one, in his own estimation. Posterity should gaze upon his classic features in carven stone, so he commissioned Larry Donovan, a young American sculptor and adventurer to make a statue of him.

Larry caused a riot in Altamura when he knocked the chief Generalissimo cold for interferring with his Fourth of July celebration, for which rash act Larry is led to the "Whitewashed Wall" to be shot. But Larry didn't relish the idea of having his anatomy splashed all over the "Wall," and caused a postponement of the festivities by flattering the vanity of the little Governor.

When he is again led to the "Wall" he is supplied with a nifty six-shooter, and again thwarts his executioners by grabbing the pompous little Governor Romero and using him as shield, threatening to splash the "Wall" with the Governor's gore.

One Patricio Cassidano—a Hibernian masquerading as a Greaser—and Rosa, the Demon Vampire of Altamura, who vamps and plots and hisses and wriggles and squirms—add humor and color to a story that bubbles with laughable and melodramatic situations.

PRESS NOTICE

William Desmond is cast as a carefree Yankee in his next Exhibitors-Mutual feature, "Whitewashed Walls," which will be shown at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Written by Ethel and James Dorrance this picture comes as a travesty on the comic opera style of plot that deals with heroics and villainy in a South American republic. This old plot has proven so popular in the past that the fine satire injected by the authors is going to come as a delightful comedy relief to all those who see it.

Desmond appears as a young American sculptor and adventurer who refuses to take all the pomp and ceremony of the officials of a certain republic seriously. He laughs long and loud at the General-in-Chief of General What-Is-It of the army and gets himself into all sorts of serious predicaments from which he emerges by right of his perpetual smile and Irish blarney.

A number of conventional screen characters are delightfully burlesqued in the picture. Carmen Phillip's vampire is as sinuous as any one could ask. Fritzi Brunette is a heroine of charm while a wonderful bit of character comedy is contributed by Walter Perry appearing as an old Irishman masquerading under the name of Patricio Cassidano! The whole spirit of the picture is one of harmless fun and the motion picture going public will certainly feel rewarded by a visit to the ———— theatre during its run.

PROGRAM READER

A merry bit of travesty on the comic operas dealing with the Latin American countries will be offered in "Whitewashed Walls," the latest picture in which William Desmond is starred. We have seen so much of the mock heroics that go on in such places, so much of the dashing American hero who tweeks the nose of the Generalissimo of the south that we have come to laugh "at" such antics these days instead of "with" them. So this travesty written by that clever pair Ethel and James Dorrance is certainly not out of place. Desmond holds down the stellar honors with a wonderful smile and a manner that is indeed excellent burlesque on the dashing hero of the day. The picture is set in a variety of pretty settings and the performances of the remaining members of the cast are in the general spirit of the entire picture.

CATCH LINES

He called his Excellency "old scout" and invited him to step up to the bar—this was in South America where they don't like to stand for such things but have to when breezy young Americans get down there and start to work off superfluous pep. See William Desmond in "Whitewashed Walls"—it's a winner for fast comedy and exciting situations.

Ever see an Irishman pose as a Spaniard—have a look at Patricio Cassidano in "Whitewashed Walls"—but he's only one of the laughs in the picture.

By the popular authors, Ethel and James Dorrance—one of their brightest works—all about a young American transforming the map of South America just for the fun of things.

Even a South American republic couldn't wipe the smile off Bill Desmond's face—see it in "Whitewashed Walls" and you'll have one too.

SUGGESTIONS

The old story of the American hero in a South American republic has come to be laughed at more often these days than it is laughed with, but as the authors of this picture "sort of kid the natives there" it gets over by reason of this fact. George Cohan took hold of an old fashioned musical comedy recently and found that it wouldn't go at all. He rewrote the whole thing and in it kidded the life out of this very same old fashioned musical comedy. The result was that the play scored a hit and is running along on the high tide of popularity these days. Why not adopt this plan of advertising the picture to your patrons? Certainly it will do no harm and the readers will likely take off their hats to your sense of humor and come and see your show. Fix up some clever copy along these lines, mix in a few phrases telling about the laughs in the picture and let it go at that. You'll get the people in the right frame of mind. They will come expecting to be amused and kidded a little more and they won't be disappointed.

Play up William Desmond. He is a popular player and has won a nice place for himself by reason of that smile that won't come off and his acting ability. He fits into the general scheme of things with regard to the advertising suggestions mentioned. Don't let the authors get by without some mention. They are popular in the magazine world and deserve a word also.

PLAN BOOK SERVICE

THE Motion Picture News Plan Book is the most complete service ever offered the exhibitor.

This is the consensus of various opinions expressed by readers.

Motion Picture News was the first trade paper to bring such a service to the field.

The old days of the review here—the synopsis there—the Press notice somewhere else—those old days are no more.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released previous to January 12, 1919.

WHERE THE WEST BEGINS (AMERICAN) WILLIAM RUSSELL (MAR. 2)......................................MAR. 1
"Another good picture to William Russell list."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Very good picture. Big business two days."

WHO CARES (SELECT) CONSTANCE TALMADGE (JAN. 19) JAN. 25
"Story of light pleasing sort; should be enjoyed by all."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor omment—"Constance was winsome in this light role and gave promise of great things when she is older in the emotional scenes." "This picture was very good. A little stronger in plot and story than most of this star's pictures. Star very good. Support also very good. Big and average business."
Consensus—"Fine picture, good puller."

WHO WILL MARRY ME? (BLUEBIRD) MYERS (JAN. 27)..FEB. 8
"Comedy and pathos blended in this Universal film."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Good picture. Big business."

WHY GERMANY MUST PAY (SCREEN CLASSICS) (JAN. 19) JAN. 25
"German atrocities again, with a good romantic interest."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"While war pictures are about played out, this is an exceptionally fine one and bound to draw. Excellent cast, fine story, good photography and in every way a good attraction. Advertise it 'right' and you've got something worth while. Attendance good every day. Big Sunday." "Average business."

WICKED DARLING, THE (UNIVERSAL) PRISCILLA DEAN (FEB. 24)..FEB. 22
(Six Parts)
"Strong picture that keeps interest alive all through."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Dandy story. Universal Special's usual fine photography. Cast is headed by that 'little devil of the screen.' We claim the honor of having 'discovered' Priscilla from an exhibitor's standpoint. Fine attendance for two days." "Good program feature. Priscilla Dean grows more popular with each picture here. Big business."
Consensus—"Excellent production, big puller."

WINNING GIRL, THE (PARAMOUNT) SHIRLEY MASON (FEB. 23)..MAR. 22
"Shirley Mason's latest is a nice little picture."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"A good little picture to average business."

WISHING RING MAN, THE (VITAGRAPH) BESSIE LOVE (MAR. 10)..MAR. 8
"It's naturalness puts it over; star is good."—M. P. News.

WOMAN ON THE INDEX, THE (GOLDWIN) PAULINE FREDERICK (FEB. 23).......................................APR. 5
"Genuine Goldwyn success; filled with real suspense."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Goldwyn makes about one good picture in seven. This is not one of the seven." "I did not like it, but my audience did, so let it go at that. It lacked outdoor scenery. Too stagy." "An excellent program feature. Extra good business against big opposition." "Great. Pauline Frederick has made a hit with her first Goldwyn production. Extra big business four days." "The type of picture that Pauline is best in but story did not come up to expectations. Well staged, acted and directed, but the story is not there. Business good but the star drew it all." "Goldwyn pictures are our poorest drawing cards." "Fair production but star is a dead one here. Average to poor business. Died second day."

WOMAN, WOMAN (FOX) EVELYN NESBIT (JAN. 26)....FEB. 8
"Deals boldly with sex question; morals of heroine lax."—M. P. News.
Exhibitor Comment—"Average business."

"Presents star in a new role; some situations exaggerated."—M.P.News.

Individual Opinions on Earlier Releases Received During the Past Week

"The Border Legion" (Goldwyn)—"Opened average business and then poor business for six days following."

"Out of the Shadow" (Paramount)—"Very good. Big business two days."

"The Common Cause" (Vitagraph)—"Dandy picture. Big business two days."

"Mickey" (State Rights)—"Broke all records for three days. Best picture I ever ran."

"Prussian Cur" (Fox)—"This stuff won't pull here. Poor business. Good picture while war was on."

"Heart of Humanity" (Jewel)—"Wonderful picture. Better than 'Hearts of the World.' Extra big business but business not as good as expected."

"Les Miserables" (Fox)—"A great picture but failed to draw matinee business and had only fair evening crowds. Enjoyed by all."

"Caught in the Act" (Fox)—"Not a big drawing card."

"Every Mother's Son" (Fox)—"Very good picture, but Ye Gods, will war stuff soon let up Poor business."

"The Hope Chest" (Paramount)—"Clean. Pleased. Made friends for Gish. Average business."

"Jane Goes A-Wooing" (Paramount)—"Weak. Fortunately we had a comedy with it."

"Racing Strain" (Goldwyn)—"Better than average Mae Marsh picture. Average business."

"For Freedom" (Fox)—"Inconsistent and weak ending but pleased. Average business."

"Too Fat To Fight" (Goldwyn)—"Disappointing, slow and padded. Average business.

"Every Mother's Son" (Fox)—"Would have gone big before November 11. Not now."

"The Border Legion" (Goldwyn)—"Picture very poorly cast. Blanche might have been a 'young' mountain girl twenty-five years ago but the part was not suited for her now. Cowboy lead couldn't have lasted ten minutes with the X 'Legion.' He lacked only a kerchief up his sleeve to make him a real nice girl. Hobart Bosworth is as good as ever but he could not be expected to hold up the whole cast. Poor business seven straight days."

"Mickey" (State Rights—Mabel Normand)—"A picture for all classes. Best drawing picture we have ever played. Playing return two more days later on. Extra big business for three days."

AN OMISSION AND A CORRECTION

IN a recent issue of the Motion Picture News—Mr. E. K. Gillett, the editor of the Equipment Department, had an article devoted to the prevailing custom of elaborating in detail the beauties of a new theatre, but neglecting to tell of that most vital equipment—the apparatus used in the projection room—with Mr. Gillett we heartily agreed for he said in part * * * "The installation of an organ costing from $3,000 to $200,000 is made without a thought, or at least the price is considered a natural charge. No serious objection is made to it." * * *

And in making his final point, he says * * * "And yet if it were not for the projecting machine and the wonderful results which it produces—the architect, the organ manufacturer—and all the other equipment manufacturers—would be looking for other fields to sell their wares. The projector is the heart of every house and the one excuse in the last analysis for its existence."

In a more recent edition of the News, in the same department, we read a striking story describing in detail with words and pictures the beauties of the mural decorations—the splendor of the furnishings and the glories of the lighting effects at Tom Moore's new Rialto Theatre at Washington. But the article goes no further—not a word about the "Heart of the Theatre"—the projection room—but only those things were featured that are pleasing to the eye.

SO NOW WE'RE PAYING FOR THIS SPACE IN ORDER THAT THE READER MAY KNOW THAT TOM MOORE—"AN EXHIBITOR OF NATIONAL PROMINENCE AND ONE OF THE KEENEST JUDGES OF PICTURE VALUES IN AMERICA" AND OPERATING THE STRAND, GARDEN AND PLAZA THEATRES IN THE CAPITOL CITY, HAS USED DURING HIS VAST EXPERIENCE EVERY MAKE OF PROJECTOR, AND DECIDED, WHEN THE RIALTO WAS BUILT, THAT NO MATTER HOW LOVELY THE EXTERIOR, HOW BEAUTIFUL THE FURNISHINGS—THE RIALTO WOULD NEVER BE BETTER THAN THE PROJECTION MAINTAINED, AND HE INSTALLED THREE SIMPLEX PROJECTORS.

Thus—Mr. Moore has not only furnished beauty for the eyes of his patrons, but has furnished protection as well.

More power to him!

WITH every succeeding production the name of Cecil B. DeMille becomes of increasing box-office-money value to the exhibitor.

Today he is the giant of his profession, the leader of them all, the record breaker of box-office statements.

Consider "Don't Change Your Husband," "Old Wives for New," "We Can't Have Everything," "The Squaw Man," "Carmen," "Till I Come Back to You." This is the one director of them all, whose name is synonymous with success — not only artistic success but real cold cash, box-office success.

Now comes his "For Better, For Worse," more splendid than his best, with all the wealth of detail that have made his name famous.

With a superlative cast of players including Elliott Dexter, Gloria Swanson, Wanda Hawley, Tom Forman, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, Jack Holt, Sylvia Ashton and others.

THIS is the story of the men who couldn't go—of the misunderstanding, disrespect, and isolation that came to some real heroes who did the work at home.

In it is told a love tale, poignant, throbbing, compelling, heart-warming.

It is surrounded with all the luxury and wealth of investiture that characterize every Cecil B. DeMille production.

A one hundred per cent money-winner.

DYNAMITE!

The big W. W. Hodkinson Corporation productions, beginning April 20 and including all past product released through this organization—

Can be rented singly by the exhibitors, on their value and on their merit, without signing up for series or groups. Can be booked on the sane and only sound principle of permitting the exhibitor-customer to buy what he wants with his money.

You can buy one, two, four, ten or thirty productions without signing away your own liberty and the independence of your theatre.

What a misfortune it has been for the great Rialtos and Strands and the equivalent theatres like them in the large cities of the country to have to sign up solid from thirty to fifty-two weeks of their calendar year, thereby shutting themselves out of available big productions in the market.

This would not be a misfortune if the thirty to fifty-two pictures they contracted for were of a maintained standard, but they have not been and under present producing faulty conditions never can be.

The producing allies of fine talents and capacities who are now making productions for release through W. W. Hodkinson Corporation are working slowly and carefully under selective operating conditions to deliver the best productions in the market and to insure better pictures by making fewer pictures.

Under such conditions they not only desire us but prefer us to offer them singly to exhibitors of the nation.

The Picture Girl Beautiful
Directed by George Irving

Four elements have been called into combination to make this a powerful outstanding production —the first of the Four Star Pictures.

AUGUSTUS THOMAS. America's greatest playwright; now giving his personal attention to the proper production of his biggest plays.

"AS A MAN THINKS"—a dynamic play built on the theme that only a man's faith in a woman makes him feel he is the father of his child, while a woman always knows.

HARRY RAVER. The producer of better type pictures who has always had the shrewd vision to present money-making productions for exhibitors.

LEAH BAIRD. A beautiful star whose popularity with the public and whose drawing power give further strength to this all-star combination of elements.

GEORGE IRVING. One of the strong, capable directors of the industry; a consistent maker of powerful pictures. You'll remember he directed "The Witching Hour."

"As a Man Thinks" is released April 20 and is offered singly to exhibitors under the remarkable new Hodkinson sales policy.

Triangle's 1919 Series of

OLIVE THOMAS

Special Presentations

Each picture is brand new—Spick and Span

None were ever heretofore released. Take our word for that. We say this because we are proud of our Olive Thomas Specials.

We agree with you, Miss Thomas—"Toton" released March 30th, is a wonderful production. Every critic acknowledged your wonderful portrayal of that difficult dual role.

Do you know that the way the Exhibitors and their Audiences are responding, proves beyond a doubt the justice of the critics' most lavish praise?

"The Follies Girl" your second Triangle special, will be released April 27th. And we know that this will receive a splendid reception.

But wait Olive—until we release "Love's Prisoner" that great mystery story. The date will shortly be announced. Then there's one more, it's that play of the demure little Quakeress, "Prudence on Broadway." Yes indeed, they'll respond to this with like enthusiasm.

You certainly did great work for us, Miss Thomas. We're glad that we are the distributors of these, your first special presentations.

You've the youth and energy to insist upon productions up to the Triangle standard. So we know that continued success marks the path of the talented little girl whom Triangle started on the road to stardom.

TRIANGLE SPECIAL PRESENTATION

“The Follies Girl”

Poor, wealthy, old grandfather.

Perhaps he wanted to die. It almost seemed like an expected vacation. Anything to get away from three nagging relatives.

But along came Olive from the “Follies.”

Then he quickly sat up and took notice.

So did the relatives, who expected to inherit so much wealth. For all their chances of shortly mourning this invalid as one of the “Dear Departed” quickly vanished.

Of course the relatives scheme to rid themselves of the little intruder. But even they are shocked when they discover their married cousin Ned and the Follies Girl—in negligee.

She leads them a merry chase. And then———?

Say fellows—this is Olive Thomas at her best. You know what that means to your box-office, especially when it's a Triangle production with Triangle photography.

Book this great attraction now and cash in your profits on the Triangle square-deal policy.

CHICAGO

Never has the art of the camera produced more artistic effects. There's good acting all through the production. (Tribune.)

It was an ambitious take the makers of "The Birth of a Race" set for themselves, but they succeeded with it, and the result is a truly great photoplay. (Post.)

"The Birth of a Race" in construction suggests a composite of Griffith's "Intolerance" and "Resurrection," and highly more desirable artistically and in point of recitation than the latter. (Daily News.)

A lot was invested in the picture, and wisely, for there are scenes of rich beauty. Beautiful photography rules everywhere and arrives at unexpectedly artistic and discreet scenes in the Garden of Eden episode. All the Biblical and historical incidents which form the prologue are richly done. The music is effective, descriptive, and entirely original. (Herald-Examiner.)

"The Birth of a Race" might modestly say of itself: "I am the Alpha and the Omega, the first and the last, the beginning and the end." And then some. (American.)

PITTSBURGH, PA.

Efforts of the producers have been carried out on a stupendous scale. (Leader.)

It is the most elaborate and one of the best staged films ever seen in the city. Hearty approval was given the new spectacular film. (Dispatch.)

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Most human picture production of the season. Challenges favorable comparison with such masterpieces as "Intolerance." (News.)

A vaster subject than anything ever before attempted on the screen. (Herald.)

A big picture, impressive, difficult to produce. (Press.)

TERRE HAUTE, IND.

Something like 1,200 people, including prominent citizens, last night pronounced "The Birth of a Race" a great picture. There was no mistaking the verdict of that splendidly representative audience. The picture made a profound impression and was received with mingled demonstrations. (Tribune.)

OMAHA, NEBR.

The scope and elaboration of the picture make it one of the most ambitious film offerings ever offered. (Herald.)

The composition is good, the photography excellent, genuinely impressive. (Bee.)

GALESBURG, ILL.

The photography is the best ever seen here in screen production. The cast is excellent in every respect. "The Birth of a Race," a wonderful production. (Mail.)

KOKOMO, IND.

"The Birth of a Race" is well worth the price. It is worth the time and worth seeing more than once. In fact, it should be seen more than once to catch the greatness of its lesson. (Dispatch.)

paper Critics Said About It:

Cities, at the Big Legitimate Theatres)

DUBUQUE, IA.

This great drama of the film was in preparation for about two years and employed the services of the best scenario writers, most competent actors, cleverest directors and most efficient photographers. "The Birth of a Race," the big photoplay, has been the talk of Dubuque. It is truly a great photoplay. Beautiful music score. (Times-Journal.)

FON DU LAC, WIS.

"The Birth of a Race," a great Picture, there was no mistaking the verdict. (Reporter.)

Without exception, the biggest photo offering submitted to Fon du Lac this season. It is on the same magnificent and extended scale of "The Birth of a Nation," "Hearts of the World," and other like productions. A great movie with a real purpose. (Commonwealth.)

PEORIA, ILL.

The biggest photoplay production of the age. (Journal.)

An ambitious photoplay done on a tremendous scale, to fit one of the biggest themes in life. Like a dream, the past rises before one in the unspeakable colossal spectacle. (Star.)

DAVENPORT, IOWA

Absorbing in its dramatic construction, thrilling in its grasp of human impulse. For a time "The Birth of a Nation" stood unchallenged. In "The Birth of a Race," however, the first named has been matched regardless of where the critic cares to begin. Peer of "Birth of a Nation." (Democrat.)

BATTLE CREEK, MICH.

The greatest photoplay of the period. (Journal.)

SOUTH BEND, IND.

The theme encompasses a vaster subject than anything ever attempted. (News-Times.)

FREEPORT, ILL.

Capacity houses greeted the silent players of the really wonderful "Birth of a Race." Words like "Powerful," "Wonderful," "Sumptuous," "Spectacular," "Stupendous," easily at the beck and call of the Reviewer, are rather meaningless when applied to this truly monumental cinema drama. (Journal-Standard.)

QUINCY, ILL.

"The Birth of a Race" is a stupenduous picture. One can readily believe, after seeing it, that it cost a lot of money to produce it. The photography is rare. (Journal.)

MANITOWOC, WIS.

One of the greatest pictures that the present age has produced, and the Herald-News guarantees the feature as first class. (Herald-News.)

GREEN BAY, WIS.

The most striking scenes ever witnessed on the screen. (Press Gazette.)

OTTUMWA, IOWA

Too much cannot be said of the picture, for it embodies the best that has been seen in all the best pictures of the past few years, and nothing is omitted to make it mechanically perfect. It is a beautiful lesson taught that captivates the audience. (Courier.)

BY THE SHEER MAGNITUDE OF ITS NUMEROUS SCENES, BY THE ENTHRALLING AND ABSORBING INTEREST OF ITS STORY, AND BY ITS WONDERFUL MUSICAL ACCOMPANIMENT "THE BIRTH OF A RACE" HAS PROVEN A PHOTO SPECTACLE THAT WILL LIVE FOR YEARS. ITS APPEAL IS TO ALL CLASSES. IT EULOGIZES THE WORKING MAN, IT GIVES DUE CREDIT TO ALL RACES AND CREEDS. Samuel Goldwyn presents:

THE ETERNAL MAGDALENE

By Robert H. McLaughlin

The Magdalene is in your town and every thinking and unthinking man and woman in the community comes face to face with her every day, almost every hour.

The Magdalene is a problem that has existed since the world began — a bigger problem today than ever before in human history.

The Magdalene of this day and time is the central figure in a motion picture drama that strikes at the sympathies and the heart.

Goldwyn has produced on the screen, for first release every where at Easter time, a tremendous drama of compassion; a story that draws a spark from the most deadened sympathies.

A master of the theatre, one of the painstaking, thinking, creative leaders has directed this splendid production.

First run theatres will get an even added value by presenting "The Eternal Magdalene" first Easter week, beginning April 20.

Sadie Sullivan of Ireland and the chorus — a whimsical little adventurer drawn to the land of magic promise.

She wanted to marry a millionaire and live happy ever afterward, but a jealous leading lady blocked the way.

A story of the theatre. A picture of romance and envy behind the curtain that makes life back-stage mysterious and fascinating.

A cast that includes lovely Mary Thurman and Betty Schade; Alec B. Francis known to your patrons in a dozen fine Goldwyn productions, rotund and good-natured Walter Hiers, and Wellington Playter, who was in "Polly of the Circus." A round-up of the best players in Mae Marsh's previous screen successes for her last Goldwyn Picture. Released everywhere April 6th.

No Man on Earth Is Rich Enough to Buy His Way in.

If he is big that is not enough; if he has power that is not sufficient; if he has fame that gives him no precedence over any other man in the celluloid pages of the Ford Educational Weekly.

If the man and the things he does in the life of America are of value to the country; if they contribute something useful and constructive; if the man and his works have power for good; if his fame is based upon service to the greatest number of people—

Such men – and women —and the things they have builded have the right to be found and are found pictured intelligently in the

FORD EDUCATIONAL

WEEKLY

There is no other educational screen attraction of this character so ample in its scope, so thorough in its detail, so painstaking in its portrayal of personal and industrial drama, so faithful in its efforts to show the fine things in the life and affairs of the American people.

The Ford Educational Weekly is guarded carefully against the intrusion of the wrong kind of matter. Its editor and the powerful man who gives the Weekly his name are jealous of its reputation and its prestige

The more than 4,000 theatres that, under Goldwyn Distribution, present the Ford Educational Weekly rightly consider it as the greatest educational feature of the screen.

This accounts for the fact that it has "the greatest circulation in the world."

SPEEDY MEADE

Written and directed by Ira M. Lowry

The difference between Louis Bennison and the average male star is the difference between one of those rangey, easy-riding, sit-and-be-comfortable, high-pummeled Western saddles he uses, and the postage stamp thing they put on an Eastern riding horse.

It's a difference that theatre patrons recognized the minute they saw the first Betzwood-Bennison picture, "Oh, Johnny!" It brought them back to see "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U" and it has kept them coming for "Speedy Meade". No theatre manager can afford to ignore such audience appeal.

Up-to-the minute stories, carefully chosen support, expert directing and splendid photography, have all played their part in the rapid rise in popularity of the Betzwood-Louis Bennison Star Series. But—first and foremost—it is Bennison with his breezy Americanism that has put these pictures over.

The Record of A Record Breaker

"SMILING BILL" Parsons today plays in more theatres in the United States than any comedian except one.

With the one exception, to whom "Smiling Bill" Parsons pays the tribute of admiration, no comedian now plays, or ever has played in 3500 theatres under 3500 separate contracts.

Goldwyn has given "Smiling Bill" Parsons and his Capitol Comedies the same careful attention that it gives to the sale of its own Goldwyn productions and the quality of his comedies plus his own joyous personality have made history in distribution.

In two weeks from now he will reach his first anniversary as a screen star—twenty-six fine Capitol Comedies have established his international popularity.

So thoroughly satisfying are our mutual relations that we shall fare together for a second year—with fewer and better Capitol Comedies in keeping with Goldwyn's own plan of fewer and better pictures.

MELODRAMA is the standard amusement fare preferred and demanded by the great mass of the American people.

The daring riding, the outlaw battles, the thrills of a great outlaw feud in the picturesque old setting of gold-mad California are the things in "The Border Legion" that have established it as a commercial success in the largest and best theatres of the country.

In the three months since "The Border Legion's" first release at the New York Strand, Goldwyn has placed this big special in 1,500 theatres, and exhibitor demand for it is constantly increasing.

ROTHAPFEL UNIT PROGRAMME

A TESTIMONIAL TO
SAMUEL L. ROTHAPFEL

THE Rothapfel Unit Programme has already been placed in twenty-four of the leading one-week-stand theatres in the largest Cities of the United States, all for presentation beginning May 25th.

Special representatives will have covered every territory by the end of next week and we can now promise to announce the securing of contracts for more than forty-five opening-week-runs in first class theatres by that time.

By arranging a Rothapfel week to take place in forty-five of America's leading theatres at the same time, backed by a national advertising campaign of gigantic proportions, we are doing things on perhaps the largest scale ever attempted in the history of the theatrical business. The Rothapfel Unit Programme is the first complete performance to be presented in forty-five theatres at the same time.

INDEPENDENT SALES CORP.

FILM CLEARING HOUSE Inc

FRANK G. HALL PRESIDENT

FRANK G. HALL to the
EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA

WHEN Mr. Rothapfel and I.—both being Exhibitors—created the Unit Programme, we were confident that the Exhibitors of America would back our judgment regarding the great value of an entertainment of this character:

The fact that we have booked twenty-four leading theatres in two weeks, and that we will undoubtedly arrange for at least forty-five presentations of the first Unit Programme for a full week's run beginning May 25th, should be conclusive evidence of the popularity of the plan.

Following the playing of these week stands will come the bookings for one, two, three and four day showings. The regular "Independent" salesmen, working through the Film Clearing House Exchanges, take up the work of closing these contracts immediately.

The novel manner in which the Rothapfel Unit Programme will be presented in the high class theatres running it for the opening week, and the up-to-date methods used in advertising it, not only to Exhibitors but to the patrons of the theatres as well, is bound to make this programme a tremendous success from the very start.

If you have not sent in your application for the Rothapfel Unit Programme, do so at once.

BRIGGS COMEDY

NEW YORK HERALD, MONDAY, APRIL 7,

Boyhood Comedy in New Series at the Strand

Briggs' "When a Feller Needs a Friend" Shown on the Screen—Miss Gish in New Role.

Real child life instead of the usual stage or "movie" idea of it reached the screen in the Strand Theatre yesterday when the first of the comedies suggested by Briggs' cartoons, "When a Feller Needs a Friend," was projected

The comedy, called "A S'prise Party 'n Ever'thing," depicted the joyous adventures and misadventures of a boys' party with kissing games and cake and other delights, the climax of which was the arrival of an indignant neighbor with a baseball which had been batted into a nest of setting eggs to the dismay and devastation of part of the chicken yard in the afternoon. The deacon had spent all afternoon and evening trying to decipher the boy's name scrawled on the leather and succeeding just in time to have the youngster pulled away from his festivities and sent to bed.

There was a cast of the most unaffected and convincing boys and girls seen in a long time, including John Carr as "Skinnay," the hero; Stephen Carr as 'Buck," his little pal, and little Miss Rosemary Carr as Mary. The titles were humorous and to the point, although there should have been more of them, particularly when the deacon arrived at the party to make trouble for "Skin-nay."

John Barrymore and Miss Constance Binney were the principals in "The Test of Honor," a photo melodrama taken from one of E. Phillips Oppenheim's meandering stories.

The Spoor-Thompson automatic method of processing film has produced such high grade prints of uniform quality that it has given complete satisfaction to all adopting this system. This is conclusively shown by a volume of business so steadily increasing that it has necessitated the installation of more machines and the enlargement of factory and service forces. Ask our sales manager, Mr. Charles F. Stark, for details on why we can excel other work and still save you big money.

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 19, No. 16 April 19, 1919

It Is Started—Who's Next?

W. W. HODKINSON'S hat is in the ring.

Who will answer him?

Last week we proposed an editorial discussion on a subject broached by an exhibitor.

He asked for advice on exhibitors co-operative booking concerns—those national in scope—and said that some such plan was necessary if he and several thousand other small theatres were to remain in business.

We welcomed the discussion not as bearing specifically and only upon the question of whether a theatre should or should not tie up with an exhibitor owned and co-operative booking concern, but also and principally because such a subject would necessarily involve the bigger questions facing the entire business in this, its most momentous year.

—The question of pictures, their adequate supply and quality and source.

—Their rental prices.

—The service to go with them.

—And above all the kind of contract basis upon which they should be sold.

* * * * *

The Questions Are Many

WHERE is the exhibitor to look, this year, for enough good pictures at rental prices fair to all—and next year and next?

What is the big ground wave, in the picture business, this year?

How is it shaping the industry?

Are we to have fewer and better pictures?

If so, how?

What is the distribution policy that will give the producer an incentive to make better pictures and again furnish them to the theatres so that even the smallest can have them and live?

Is this to be an open booking year?

These are the big and vital questions to which this discussion should give answer.

We feel that the men who have shaping this industry's policies know these answers. And we feel they will want to talk freely. Why not?

Mr. Hodkinson's statement is the first to reach us.

Who will answer him?

* * * * *

When Is a "Special" Not a "Special"?

EVERYBODY is talking "Specials" these days. Programs are offering them. Independent producers are keen to make them. Exhibitors want them. Policies are being shaped around them.

So it is pertinent to inquire just what the special picture is and what it means now to the picture business and what it signifies in the industry's advance.

We shall be glad to tackle this interesting subject more at length.

In the meantime we suggest that a special is not a special unless it is given means of special exploitation.

We learn from an exhibitor of a special which reached him with very inadequate advertising aids. It had no more than the weakest picture on the program which supplied it.

The exchange was not at fault. The exchange received mostly a series of letters and telegrams exhorting extra bookings and high rentals. It was the fault of the home office which evidently believes that a special should be specially exploited to its exchange but not to the exhibitor nor by the exhibitor to his public.

A special, let us repeat, is not a special, nor should it get special rental prices unless the exhibitor is helped to put it over and so get his special crowds and prices.

That demands special service.

Use All This—Gentlemen!

WE learn that extracts from our editorials on the organized reform element and its coercive efforts upon the State legislatures have been cited at recent legislative hearings upon Sunday opening bills.

The reformers brought them forward in an effort to show that the motion picture interests were organized and intended to do just what the fanatics with immense and practical zeal have been doing for some years—namely, to get an expressed sentiment from every legislative district, through petitions, in favor of their own schemes of regulation.

With characteristic dishonesty only extracts were read. May we suggest, right here, gentlemen, that this lying and contemptible trick was tabooed among decent people shortly after the printing press was invented.

But at any rate, we cheerfully go on record again in the matter, taking care this time that no unprotected paragraphs may be filched by quick fingers.

We said and reiterate that the reformers, with their thorough organization, have made it a basic move to collect petitions in each legislative district; that these names, while representing in reality only a decided minority of the population, had considerable effect upon Legislators because they represent votes; that the American public should have an opportunity to express itself before they were robbed of their liberties, and that the exhibitors of the United States must therefore arouse interest, circulate petitions, and hand them to their legislative representatives.

That's all. We lack organization; we have no funds; we don't hiss, jeer and lie; and we're pretty busy paying taxes, advertising the Liberty Loan, helping returned soldiers get jobs, and doing all the multifarious charities expected of the screen. And we may not be able to beat the fanatics with their own weapons; but, if not, we would like to convey a sensible warning that some day the American people, unappealed to, will arise in their honest wrath and do this job conclusively and permanently.

Editorially Speaking:

Use All This, Gentlemen

The reformers are at liberty to use this editorial in their characteristic manner.

* * * * *

We Welcome Aid

MAY we also call the attention of the organized reformers to the fact that the work of the American Recreation League has no connection whatsoever with the motion picture industry.

The mere fact, of course, that this organization is advocating Sunday motion pictures is enough on the face of it to bring strident yells from the reformers' gallery and gleeful accusations of collusion with the motion picture interests.

Your plan, Mr. Reformer, of course, would be to create or subsidize such an institution in your own interests, but the picture people haven't the wonderful organization you possess.

The interesting truth, gentlemen, is that the American Recreation League—altogether of its own initiative and belief—is advocating the healthful recreation of motion pictures on Sunday in an effort to counteract Bolshevism among its working classes and to teach instead the ideals of American life, prosperity and happiness.

It is regrettable, of course, that this interferes with your own plans, but again we call attention to the fact that this is a free country and that the American Recreation League has every right to its own opinion.

* * * * *

Facing the Crisis

FRANK REMBUSCH, fresh from the fight in Indiana for Sunday pictures, says the motion picture is facing its most serious era of adverse legislation.

"The next two years," says he, "will put us out of business unless we are able on all sides to down the blue laws and the well organized reformers.

"We need immediately a committee of defense and progress in every city in the country. These committees will find their hands full.

"They should be constantly supplied with plenty of propaganda, for we must carry the fight for the picture to the people—through slides, speakers' arguments and editorial facts for the newspapers.

"The motion picture seems to be able to spread propaganda for any interest except its own.

"Let's decide to put over a Victory Loan for ourselves, a rousing campaign on the screen and through the press, combatting the lies against the picture and asking the people to demand that their favorite recreation be kept free from fanatical regulation and ruinous restriction."

Mr. Rembusch agrees with our editorial contention—that the opposition to the pictures only represents a decided minority, though a decidedly well organized one; that it deals in practical politics, and that the only way to tread down the fanatic is with his own weapons, on his own ground.

The main weapon is the expressed sentiment, through petitions or otherwise, of the majority of the public.

Here's an Idea for You

"YOU'VE got to be different," is the exhibitors' slogan of Thomas D. Sorierio, of Boston.

"Give 'em novelty—all the time."

Mr. Sorierio's latest novelty is "Hero Week," at the Strand theatre, Lowell, and the Park and Franklin theatres, Boston. He is performing a fine charity and drawing packed houses at the same time; and it would seem that many other theatres could adopt the idea with success.

He puts on four acts, consisting of performances by wounded soldiers. They sing or tell stories of their experiences at the front. Other soldiers, wounded or out of work, replace temporarily all the house employes and are paid the same wages. An announcement is made from the stage that these soldiers will be glad to accept invitations in the way of home entertainment from the audience. This brings them in more intimate contact with those able to offer employment.

Increased newspaper space is taken during "Hero Week," and the newspapers have taken up the idea editorially.

Mr. Sorierio makes another excellent suggestion in this connection. He calls attention to the fact that a million and a half soldiers have returned to this country who have not seen the pictures released during the past year or more. So re-bookings of successes are evidently in order.

For instance, in Boston and its vicinity he estimates there are over fifty thousand returned soldiers; so next week he is announcing "The Man from Painted Post."

A Timely Word of Warning

FROM George A. Giles, the Cambridge, Mass., theatre man, we are in receipt of a letter which suggests an editorial campaign on the part of the trade papers.

But the letter states its own message so pointedly that we can quote:

> "The increasing use of slang and profanity in the subtitles of recent photoplays is to my mind very unfortunate.
> "For a long time the use of profanity has been forbidden in first-class vaudeville houses although some second-rate houses and burlesque houses have permitted a greater license in this respect.
> "Now the picture industry seems to be on the very eve of taking up and making use of profanity. It is easy to imagine a first-class theatre presenting a William S. Hart production on a Saturday afternoon to one thousand children only to have them read once, twice or three times, titles where the worst kind of profanity is employed. This is not only going to react but is already reacting upon the business.
> "Parents are not sending their children to the 'movies' to be taught profanity or to be taught that it is quite the proper thing to use. Anything that William S. Hart can do any boy will think is legitimate. Furthermore it is one more invitation for the 'censor' to get busy. And the sad part of it is, it does not add one bit to the effectiveness of the picture."

Dealing in Personalities

"His Insert Ideas Bring Forth the Adjectives."

We saw the engraver's color proofs the other day on a wonderful insert that will soon appear exclusively in Motion Picture News.

"Wonderful" isn't exactly the word. What we need is an adjective that will combine the meaning of "exquisite" and "striking"—or, "beautiful" and "effective."

But you'll supply your own adjectives when you see the insert, which will appear in the issue of Motion Picture News dated May 10—timed with the release of its subject, "The Red Lantern."

And we are forestalling time by giving you the picture now of the man who created the insert—Arthur James.

They say "The Red Lantern" is a knockout. We know the advertising on it will be a revelation. Some combination!

We knew it would happen. Just as soon as Fred Warren got over in the Hodkinson camp he started to explode "Dynamite." The first crash comes with the announcement of a wide-open marketing plan—each picture sold on its merits. No groups, series, or anything approaching the program idea. With the biggest theatre season in years in sight, with more worthy independent productions than ever—the Hodkinson lead seems to point to a grand and glorious year for those who crave excitement. The Hodkinson story is on page 2445.

We met Fred Warren at the hour of one A. M. in Mrs. Astor's sipping coffee and reading the morning papers before he hit the hay. "Can't get out of the newspaper habit," he explained. "Have to read the papers before I can sleep."

Fred spilled some of his ideas for the coming months to us. And all we can say is, "Heads up. The war is on!"

Lewis J. Selznick is the happiest man in ten counties these days. You can feel enthusiasm bubbling all around him. With Select entirely under his own wing now he's making plans by the minute. "The happiest moments of my life," he tells you. Then murmurs something about a half million. Then tells you he's "the happiest man alive." Then something else about a half million. He's steaming up and preparing for full speed ahead. Watch his dust. The new Select plans are told on page 2442.

Those are appreciative words Lewis J. says about keeping the present Select organization intact. "Their enthusiasm and hard work put us where we are," he declares. "I couldn't improve on a single member of the personnel."

Having frequently talked with Arthur Kane, Vivian Moses and others in the organization we agree with Lewis J. that such enthusiasm can't be bought—or duplicated.

Eugene O'Brien is to be starred by Select. Somebody pulled a ten-strike right at the go-off.

Dick Rowland isn't worrying about stars—so he says in an exclusive News interview this week on his coming year's plans. He's willing to bank his chances on the right production brains and the right stories—plus distribution methods that give producer and exhibitor a chance. He looks with favor on percentage playing to put a picture on its mettle. Altogether an important announcement.

Mr. Rowland says we will be within sight of the millennium when we get a university course in scenario writing to show creative brains what the screen wants.

May we amend it by saying that we will be almost there when we get one or two EDITORS.

A Ray Cosmopolitan Long, f'r example.

Or a Karl Red Book Harrison. Not to mention Oldtimer Robert Munsey Davis.

Our advice is free.

A new series starts this week in the Exhibitor Service Bureau that should be of interest to film company advertising men as well as exhibitors. "How They Advertise and Why" will be explained by the leaders in exhibitor exploitation. Nelson B. Bell, general press representative of the Moore's Theatres Corporation, Washington, D. C., contributes this week's article. It's on page 2455. Next week Jack Kuhn, of Loew's Stillman theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, will hold the stage.

Marcus Loew has moved his mid-west headquarters from Chicago to Cleveland. The first step in confirmation of the rumor we gave you last week. More coming.

Jerome Beatty is a father—again. Seven more Beatty's and Jerry will have a baseball team. And the team will have the coaching of one of the cleverest sporting writers we ever read. None other than Jerome Advertising Manager Beatty of the Famous Players-Lasky.

Ralph O. Proctor, well known in far-west and mid-west distributing circles is now holding an office down in the same suite with Hiram Abrams.

Kenneth Hodkinson is also in the camp of the Big Four.

Florida exhibitors probably wonder why they are threatened with censorship. And in a recent Jacksonville paper we read such advertising lines as "With all her strength Adele forced the man back inch by inch until she managed to fling him across the bed." And "See a crowd of boarding house girls running around in their chemises." "What happens in an office when the boss loves his stenographer?" "The Adventuress 1919 model 'vamping' her victim."

F. L. Greenwald and T. Lees, of the Exclusive Features Co., Cleveland, are in New York looking over the independent field.

Competition with four "legit" openings in Washington, D. C., last week didn't stop Bert Adler from getting top attention with "The Better 'Ole."

Harry Reichenbach put something over when he got a notice on "Whom the Gods Will Destroy" in the bulletin of The League to Enforce Peace. We forget how many hundred thousand get this bulletin each week but the figures are way up.

By the way, mysterious postcards are coming to our desk—and that of every other film man. We suspect you, Harry.

Harry Nolan, of Denver, dropped in the office just as we send these words scurrying to press.

There will be a hearing on the Sunday motion picture bill in New York State before Governor Smith on Wednesday at the request of the Sky-Pilots Association.

One big fact stands out in the battle and victory for Sunday pictures in New York. Real exhibitor organization—left alone—can accomplish wonders the minute it organizes the power of the screens. The only worries the exhibitors had were caused by the interference of other factors in the industry. The exhibitors hold the power because they are closest to the people. And the people are votes.

To Jake Wilk we are indebted for a Minneapolis newspaper clipping which tells that Charlie Chaplin immortalized his footprints by waddling across the concrete when the new Chaplin studio foundations were laid.

Radical Policy Changes Announced By Trio

Rowland Sees Percentage Plan

Making Announcement of "Fewer and Better Pictures" Policy Finds Value in Percentage Playing

FEWER pictures, produced more carefully, and each sold individually by the distributing agency, will be the policy of the Metro Film Corporation to become effective in September, President Richard A. Rowland advised MOTION PICTURE NEWS representatives following numerous conferences at the studio with Supervising Director Maxwell Kargar, Treasurer Joseph Engle and other executives.

"The reign of the star will end shortly," President Rowland said, "for the efforts of the producer to make better pictures have in some instances, and will in others bring to the attention of the exhibitor and public, the production itself and not the star. There are a few, and it is a very small number, of players who have been able to predominate in the picture, and these few will live together with a few others that may be elevated to stardom by their own ability to predominate the picture.

"Metro's new policy, we believe, is a step forward toward improving general conditions for the industry, and bring the producer and exhibitor closer together. Ultimately, it is my opinion, the motion picture theatres will, to a very great extent, be conducted along lines of the speaking stage theatres, booking pictures of the producer through his distributing house on a percentage basis. When this day comes, the producer can make pictures spending on each subject the amount necessary to make it correctly, with the assurance that he does not have to gamble with the exhibitor to get his money back. The booking of productions into theatres on a percentage basis, is fairer to the producer in some instances, and to the exhibitor in others. I recall the booking of one picture at a rental price of $600 for the week, and the gross receipts of the theatre were above $15,000. On the other hand, I have heard complaints from exhibitors that they lost money on this or that picture because the rental price was too high.

"Metro's new policy will not effect as radical a change in our distributing department as it would seem. Reducing the number of subjects from fifty-two to thirty-six, will disturb slightly our relations with exhibitors who have taken our entire program, but it will not cause any change in relations with patrons of the past, for we are duty bound to co-operate with them. The plan we will follow will be to make contracts for the subjects, but we cannot in advance of production, tell what a picture will cost the exhibitor. We may to a degree follow the star selling plan, but contracts will be made for each subject separately, the price of each film being made according to the film and drawing power of the subject.

"The question of cost to the exhibitor must be based upon production costs. We know distribution amounts to so much, but the fallacy of the program policy has been that we fixed the price for a subject before the film was made, and to save our hides we were forced to make the picture within a given cost. This program plan has held back the improvement of photoplays greatly, and with the elimination we believe we are improving film industry conditions.

"The star elimination must come if the personality of the star is not sufficient to predominate the picture. Many good films have been made in the last year with the so-called 'all star' cast, and they proved to be the greatest box office attractions of the year. This points out that the public are coming to realize that the play is the thing.

"The producer created an opportunity for the stars to use the strangle hold. He created stars. The exhibitor created a following for the star. These acts on the part of the producer and exhibitor have been costly to both, and to insure the successful financial conduct of the industry, the star policy must be eliminated. Whatever salary is paid the star comes from the box effice receipts of the exhibitor, and now that all have come to realize the mistake in permitting a personality to predominate the industry by the acts of the producing and exhibiting divisions in the matter of advertising, publicity and made-to-order stories, all must work together to eliminate the injurious condition.

"The star policy has been changed in many parts of the country. The exhibitor is selling his show, and depending upon the star's name to draw but a small portion of the attendance. Where the theatre manager has shown good pictures week in and week out regardless of who played in them, he has built a big clientele, and proved to the possible patrons of his theatre that he is giving them good entertainment every week, and they can come there with the assurance they will be entertained, regardless of who is featured in the main film of the program.

"At this time we are not prepared to say who will be our principal players. We consider that unimportant. Maxwell Kargar is to continue in charge of the work of supervising productions. Under his guiding genius we believe we will make pictures that are logical, have character, and highly entertaining qualities.

"More attention will be given to the stories. We hope to get the best writers in the country to write for the screen instead of writing for publishers, and the producing companies then remaking the story to fit the needs of the screen as is the present practice."

"Select Only

" Facilities Open to Brains
Selznick in Announcing Pu

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION will be solely a distributing organization in the future, according to Lewis J. Selznick, who this week made important announcements regarding the future policy of the company and confirmed the report that Adolph Zukor had withdrawn from the Select company. Mr. Selznick stated that the price paid Mr. Zukor for his half interest in the company was $500,000 over his original investment.

"Select Pictures will be operated as a distributing organization in the future," said Mr. Selznick to a representative of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. "Its channels of distribution will be open to the brains of the producing business. Big, special features will be secured, pictures that have the possibilities and the merit of 'Bolshevism on Trial,' for instance. The distributing organization will be under my personal direction and there will be no changes in the personnel

Scenario Versus Play Up in Court

On April 2, 1919, Harry O. Davis, through his attorney, Arthur Butler Graham, instituted suit in the United States District Court, Southern District Court, Southern District of New York, against David Belasco and John L. Hobble, under a claim for infringement of a copyright owned by Mr. Davis.

When Mr. Davis was associated with Universal Film Mfg. Co., he copyrighted the literary rights to a play entitled "The Little Belgian" and produced it in a motion picture of that name. He claims that the play "Daddies" now enjoying a successful run at the Lyceum Theatres is so similar in plot and incident to the "Little Belgian" as to give him a right of action for infringement. The defendant, John L. Hobble is the author of the play and Mr. Belasco is claimed by the plaintiff to present it.

Thompson Joins Arbuckle

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that Keene Thompson has been engaged as Special Publicity Representative for Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle.

Mr. Thompson left immediately for the West Coast. He is well known as a magazine writer of short stories. As a writer for Picture Play Magazine he is said to have made many friends in film circles and gained his first knowledge of motion pictures.

of the present organization. Every position is too well filled to undergo a change. And it has been due to the enthusiasm of the Select staff that the company made such a record the past year that I was able to buy out the largest shareholder at such a figure."

Mr. Selznick also made the statement that Selznick Pictures Corporation, the producing company of which Myron Selznick is president, will continue its work on an enlarged scale. Besides Olive Thomas, Eugene O'Brien has been secured to appear in a star series. Mr. O'Brien is one of the most popular leading men on the screen today and has appeared in a number of Select pictures opposite Norma Talmadge.

Myron Selznick will hold the position of production manager, all pictures made by the Selznick Pictures Corporation being made under his supervision. The elder Selznick will confine his duties solely to the distributing organization.

Arrow Sells "Huns Within Our Gates"

The Arrow Film Corporation has closed a sale for the feature, "Huns Within Our Gates," for China, India, Burma, Ceylon and Strait Settlements.

W. E. Shallenberger president of the Arrow Film Corporation, reports much activity in the foreign market and this is but one of the many deals made during the past week.

VITAGRAPH'S PLANS

"Big Subjects Coming," Says Smith in Coast Interview

VITAGRAPH was another organization which during the week made an important announcement concerning production plans for the coming year.

In an interview granted in Los Angeles President Albert E. Smith outlined clearly the plans of the pioneer producing organization and gave details concerning the big productions coming. Big stage successes and well-known prominent novels are on the list.

The interview will be found in full on Page 2473.

Hodkinson Changes Sales Policy

Bids Farewell to Program and Star System of Distribution—Productions to Be Sold Solely on Merit

BIDDING farewell to the program and star series system of picture selling, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has this week given telegraphic instructions to its representatives in the thirty Pathe branch offices of America that, effective at once, all productions past and future that are marketed through the Hodkinson organization are to be offered and sold to exhibitors singly on their individual value and merits.

Not only does the new Hodkinson order to its representatives apply to thirty or more productions in their hands during the past twelve months, but it has emphasized application to the first of the big new productions to be marketed through Hodkinson men beginning April 20. The first production to be so offered is Harry Raver's picturization of Augustus Thomas' "As a Man Thinks," starring Leah Baird and directed by George Irving. A few weeks later the first of the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., productions, "Desert Gold," picturized from Zane Grey's drama by T. Hayes Hunter under the executive direction of Benjamin B. Hampton, will be offered on a similar sales basis.

Old timers, as well as the newer generation in the picture industry, will rub their eyes in amazement to see W. W. Hodkinson, who was the father of the program system, so radically depart from methods which he devised and brought into being. And they will likewise wonder at his seeming daring in beginning a series of releases in mid April of a size and caliber that have always been held up for fall-time release. But while adopting a new sales method, the Hodkinson forces have decided to stage two sensations simultaneously. They foresee that the coming spring and summer are to be the most prosperous that exhibitors have ever known. Their reports from exhibitors in every section of the country indicate record-breaking patronage and an era of money spending by the public of every state in the Union. Unquestionably this condition has been stimulated by the demobilization of a million and three-quarter American troops, with the promise of an equal number to come back from France in installments from now until October. These demobilized troops are being restored to American industrial payrools at prevailing wage standards as against the limited pay that the men received as soldiers and sailors.

Therefore, the Hodkinson organization feels that this is the time to provide the exhibitor the biggest possible productions and to offer them under a sales policy that permits the buyer to buy just what he wants without having to take on other productions and stars that he does not want at the moment.

Buffalo Film Circles Active

Night Shipper Engaged by Famous Players-Lasky to Accommodate Exhibitors—Wineberg Entertains the Children

BUFFALO, N. Y. (Special to Motion Picture News).—Manager Richard C. Fox, of the local Famous Players-Lasky exchange, has inaugurated an innovation in service to exhibitors by employing a night shipper who is on the job from 6.30 p.m. to 2.30 a.m. This night service was installed to accommodate local exhibitors who expressed a desire to return their show immediately after the last screening in the evening. It was also started so that films could be shipped to exhibitors in the outlying territory so that they will receive their films early in the morning on the day of showing. The "all night" service is something new in Buffalo branch exchange circles, but it is sure to be popular.

Manager E. O. Wineberg, of the Elmwood theatre, this week at a special afternoon performance entertained over 1,300 children at what he advertised as "an after school matinee." Professor Murda's Humpty Dumpty circus was the attraction, supplemented by a Marionette show at which famous film stars were imitated, and a number of comedy pictures. So successful was this after school matinee for the kiddies that Manager Wineberg plans to present another one in the very near future. The house shook with the children's laughter and parents in the audience declared that "this is an ideal way to entertain our children after a day's study in stuffy school rooms."

Manager Richard C. Fox, of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange, has been appointed chief of the local Film Division for the next Liberty Loan. He has appointed as his assistants the following committee: Charles A. Taylor, Pathe; Sherman Webster, Select; J. E. Kimberly, World, and Frank S. Hopkins, Universal. These men will handle the distribution in western New York of all Victory Loan films.

Every local exchange except two has now become affiliated with the Buffalo Exchange Managers' Association, which is affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce. These two offices are the Mutual and Triangle, who desire to be "shown" before joining up. It is planned to bring a speaker from Detroit or Cleveland soon to explain to the exchange manager the advantages of the organization in ironing out petty grievances.

Sunday Bill Passes in N. Y.

THE bill providing for local option in the matter of Sunday motion pictures in New York State, which passed the Senate last Thursday and then appeared to face a stiff fight in the Assembly, went through the latter body with flying colors by a vote of 88 to 51.

On the ground when the bill passed was the committee of New York exhibitors, which has worked unselfishly and steadily for over eight months that the victory might be achieved. Those present included Sydney Cohen, Samuel I. Berman and Charles L. O'Reilly, of New York City; Harold Franklin, of Buffalo; Jules Michaels, of Buffalo; Joseph Schuchert, of Buffalo; W. H. Linton, of Utica; Louis Buettner, of Cohoes; Irving Salyerds, of Rochester; Al. Hamilton, of Yonkers, and Samuel Scheer, of Long Island.

The prospects are bright for an early signing of the bill by Governor Smith. In a telegram bearing the glad tidings to MOTION PICTURE NEWS the committee of exhibitors summed up the victory in the words, "This is a wonderful tribute to proper exhibitors' organization."

Other Sunday Notes

Through the American Recreation League a bill for Sunday motion picture shows has been prepared for introduction in the Legislature at Nashville, Tenn.

Plans are being made by the theatres of Chattanooga, Tenn., to test the legality of Sunday closing. To get the matter before the Supreme Court it was proposed to violate the law, having the operators arrested, and then take an appeal from the verdict of the lower courts.

Two well attended mass-meetings in Knoxville last week adopted resolutions condemning the bill now pending in the Legislature to permit the operation of Sunday motion pictures in Knoxville.

Finding that the public did not look kindly upon any plans to oppose Sunday motion picture plays, the Cincinnati Retail Grocers' and Butchers' League has made announcement as follows:

"Rumors that the Retail Grocers' and Butchers' League is in favor of closing moving picture shows is utterly untrue."

Petitions are being distributed under direction of the Motion Picture League of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, asking for a local option election upon the Sunday question.

Honors Shower on Arthur "Select" Kane

Two honors from outside the business have recently been conferred upon Arthur S. Kane, General Manager, Select Pictures Corporation. Soon after finishing his term as President of the Kansas Society of New York the Eastern former students of his old College elected him to the office of President for the current year. This is the New York Washburn Club, made up of Alumni and others who attended Washburn College, Topeka, Kansas.

Former Kansans in New York are cooperating with Adjutant-General Martin and the ladies, and Mr. Kane has been made Chairman of the Entertainment Committee.

Governor Henry Allen and State Officials will be given a dinner when they arrive here to welcome the Kansas boys with the 35th Division, and Mr. Kane has been made a member of the committee to arrange this banquet.

"Heroic Deeds" to Bid Liberty Loan

The National Board of Reviews of Motion Pictures has been working in cooperation with the War Loan Organization, assisting in the picturization of some of the more highly dramatic citations for bravery which were made by General Pershing during the war.

Wilton A. Barrett, Review Secretary of The National Board, has been in charge of the production work carried on in cooperation with the overseas officers at Camp Dix. The "Heroic Deeds Series" of short subjects on the Victory Loan motion picture program are now being shipped to the exchanges in cooperation with the committee on distribution of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

N. A. M. P. I. to Cooperate with Exchange Bodies

Comprehensive plans are now being considered by President William A. Brady of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, for a very wide extension of the Association's activities whereby it will have direct representation in all important exchange districts.

It is proposed to create local branches of the National Association in the cities where there now exist local managers, associations and exhibitors leagues. In such localities where the exchange managers have no organization they will be urged to organize by their home offices in New York City.

Sunday Shows and Bolshevism

As Seen by Paul Brunet

DO the majority of the people want Sunday moving pictures?

Does the man who works eight hours a day—six days out of the week, want to be entertained on the seventh day—his day of rest and relaxation?

I am speaking particularly of the man who works with his hands—the multitude of factory girls, sales girls, the hordes of those who cannot take an automobile ride in the country or go to the golf club, or play tennis, or go to the seashore or indulge in the hundred and one other pleasures of well-to-do men and women that do not "break the Sabbath day."

In my opinion, the great majority of people do want Sunday moving pictures, and if the question could be submitted to a popular vote, the result in favor of it would be overwhelming.

Assuming that the people do not know what is good for them—and are not entitled to say so—the next consideration is—

Will Sunday moving pictures corrupt the public's morals?

The reformer and self appointed keepers of the public's conscience tells us that Sunday moving pictures will keep the people away from church. The answer is—

First—That it is not proposed to open the theatres until after 2 P. M.

Second—That people are not forced to go to church because the moving picture theatres are closed.

Must the reformers seek only the salvation of the souls of those who cannot afford expensive entertainment?

Is a man or woman better off morally and spiritually at the moving pictures, where he sits in orderly quiet for an hour's entertainment, or at Coney Island or some jazz and dance resort?

Is it not better that the young man and girl go to a moving picture on Sunday than be turned loose on the street with no place to go and let the "Devil find work for idle hands to do?" I do not see how anyone with an open mind, who gives this subject any attention at all, can fail to be convinced of the actual benefit to the great masses to be derived from the Sunday shows. It is not a moral problem but a great sociological one, affecting the welfare of millions.

And at this particular time when the whole world is in a state of industrial, political and social unrest, this movement, as has been indicated recently by a well-known journalist, is attended by the menace of Bolshevism. He thus tersely puts it, "It seems that the alternative is likely to be—Sunday pictures or the soap-box orator!" I am not ready, entirely, to endorse this view, but here, indeed, is one possible angle to which serious thought should be given. I feel, however, that with influential commercial bodies swinging into line, as has the Watertown Chamber of Commerce and the various welfare organizations joining in the work that Sunday closing will not be an accomplished fact—to the benefit of millions of wage earners who find in it an orderly, rational recreation

Sidney Drew, Who Died April 9.

Sidney Drew Dies

SIDNEY DREW, actor of the screen stage, died on April 9 at his home in New York City, after a brief illness brought on by a nervous breakdown. The immediate cause of his death was uremia. The comedian had never fully recovered from the shock of the death of his son, S. Rankin Drew, in France where, as a member of the Lafayette Esquadrille, he was shot down in action. He suffered a complete physical breakdown in Detroit, Michigan, last Friday, where he had been playing with Mrs. Drew in the stage play, "Keep Her Smiling," but although the specialist who was called pronounced his condition serious Mr. Drew insisted upon being brought to New York, arriving here Monday morning. Mrs. Drew accompanied him on the journey here and was at his bedside when he died.

Mr. and Mrs. Drew had been appearing in Paramount-Drew comedies, having signed a contract last August with President Amedee J. Van Beuren of the V. B. K. Film Corporation for the making of two-reel pictures, a subsequent arrangement being consummated for releasing the films through Paramount.

Sidney Drew began his screen work with the Vitagraph Company about four years ago and one of his earliest successes was "Goodness Gracious," the first three-reel comedy to be featured on Broadway. Clara Kimball Young appeared with him in this comedy which was shown at the Vitagraph Theatre. It was at the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn that Mr. Drew met Miss Lucille McVey who became the present Mrs. Drew.

Lewis Suit Dismissed

Attachments in the case of Robert E. Worthem against Edgar Lewis which were brought by Worthem during Mr. Lewis' absence have been vacated and set aside.

Protest Atlanta "Trade Rules"

Plans Under Way for Organization in Southeast—W. C. Patterson Sends Open Letter

DRASTIC "Trade Rules" recently adopted by the "Film Exchange Managers' Association of Atlanta," bid fair to bring on wide open warfare in the southeastern territory within a few weeks. Already a call has been issued to exhibitors for a meeting to organize the theatre owners of the territory.

Plans are under way for a meeting to be held in Atlanta on Sunday, April 13. Among the exhibitors active in the proposal to organize the showmen of the southeastern states are W. C. Patterson, of the Criterion, Atlanta; Ralph DeBruler, Howard Amusement Co., Macon; Frank Miller, Mojeska Amusement Co., Augusta; E. A. Schiller, Loew's Southern Theatre Circuit, Atlanta; Max Wolf, Odeon Theatre, Savannah; John Evins, Strand-Vaudette Co., Atlanta; F. R. Wilby, Strand Amusement Co., Montgomery; H. L. Cardoza, representing Jake Wells; N. V. Darley, Alpha and Savoy Theatres; Sig Samuels, Atlanta; Abe Gugenheim, Savannah, Ga.

The new "Trade Rules" which the exchange managers declare to be a "re-stating of the terms of the contract," have aroused particular opposition because of a clause in the contract which declares, "all remittances covering film and advertising charges must positively be in the office of the Exchange prior to the time the film is to be shipped, otherwise the film will not be shipped."

All but two of the prominent distributing organizations are represented in the association of managers. The members represent: Southern Triangle Pictures Corporation, Fox Film Corporation, Metro Pictures Corporation, Consolidated Film & Supply Company, United Picture Theatres of America, Select Pictures Corporation, Goldwin Distributing Corporation, Mutual Film Corporation, Vitagraph (V. L. S. E., Inc.), Pathe Exchange, Inc., Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, General Film Company, Independent Sales Corporation, W. W. Hodkinson, S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., Film Clearing House.

MOTION PICTURE NEWS is in receipt of an open letter of protest addressed to the distributors from W. C. Patterson, from which the following paragraphs are quoted:

"Do you think there is any business today (worthy of the name) which makes no discrimination between its desirable customers and its undesirable ones? You have confessed that because of the delinquence of the undesirable customer the good customer must suffer—and that is more than you have ever admitted before.

"You ask us for a full co-operation in seeing that your Trade Rules are carried out. Why should we co-operate? Why should we, who have all along supported your policies and conducted our business in such a way as to gain confidence and respect, embrace a new doctrine which is directed, by your own confession, to those who have ignored, abused or violated the acknowledged business principles?

"Why do you ask a good exhibitor—and one whom you recognize as being desirable—to pay you in advance for film rental when you hold this exhibitor's money on deposit, such deposit being subject to forfeit at any time the exhibitor breaks, or attempts to break your contract.

"As it stands now, we pay you in advance a great deal of money to guarantee fulfillment of contracts, and then we pay you in advance for service. We have anticipated your answer: you will say that the terms of your contract are that all film rental must be paid seven days in advance. True the clause is in the contract, but you know that it has never been observed, and that you did not expect it to be observed. Moreover, it is not enforced now in the majority of exchanges operating.

"Is it not a fact that your contracts are framed in favor of your side? You do not even guarantee to furnish film to the exhibitor, nor do you bind yourself to have it delivered on time for his exhibition dates. And how many exhibitors in the country to-day are holding your Star Series contracts calling for six or eight pictures when only two or three were delivered? This because your star left you and the exhibitor waits helplessly for the fulfillment of his contract and you hold his deposit and await litigation.

"Two distributing organizations refused to go into this combine. These two organizations are financially backed by exhibitors. One in particular you used to ridicule. And it has developed into one of the most formidable factors in the field to-day. So formidable that your representatives fairly burn the rails between New York and Los Angeles to see what is going to happen next.

"In order to bring you to a realization of what you have done: Is it going to be necessary for any more distributing organizations backed by exhibitors to go into the field? Or, are you determined to continue your policy of "Let's see how much we can get from them?".

"We are your customers. You are dependent upon us for existence. Give us, at least, ordinary consideration; and when you make up your contracts next year get your legal department to word them well, for they will have to combat the searching scrutiny of the most formidable aggregation of legal talent in the Southeastern states.

"You have made the issue—but you have not disposed of it. See to it that your position is fortified. It will need much to defend it before the justice of your action has been established, and then you will want a Daniel to plead extenuating circumstances."

Kensington Company to Build New Philly House

The Kensington Amusement Company which owns and operates a chain of theatres throughout Philadelphia, including the Star Theatre at Kensington and Lehigh, the Lafayette Theatre at Kensington and Cambria and the Iris Theatre, at Kensington and Allegheny avenues, the three foremost picture theatres in the northeast, have purchased from Barber, Hartman & Co., Agents, the old Empire Theatre, Frankford avenue, below Cambria, and the ground both on the side and in the rear, giving in all a plot of ground 175 ft. by 260 ft.

The old theatre will be torn down and a new and modern one erected, with a seating capacity of 2,200.

The plans, which are now under way, will include the foremost in modern architecture, giving the theatre all the benefits of the experience in the building of the best theatres throughout the country.

Director James Hogan Ill at Post-Graduate

James Hogan, formerly connected with the Douglas Fairbanks producing staff and who assisted in the staging of many Artcraft successes, is seriously ill at the Post-Graduate Hospital in New York City. Mr. Hogan has many friends in the motion picture industry who will be sorry to hear of his condition and who no doubt, will be eager to send a message of good cheer to "Jimmy."

Hodkinson First to Bat in Circuit Discussion

In response to the invitation extended in last week's issue of Motion Picture News by William A. Johnston, to the leaders of the producing and distributing ranks to join in a frank discussion of cooperative circuit as they affect the exhibitor, W. W. Hodkinson is first to step forth.

Motion Picture News is taking no sides and giving a free field to the film men who join in this discussion. It was started by a letter from an exhibitor asking for advice on cooperative circuits, and whether they were the only solution possible for the small exhibitor in these trying days.

Our only hope is that film men will step forward frankly—expressing their opinions without hesitation.

Mr. Hodkinson's statement follows:

Mr. William A. Johnston, Editor,
The Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue, N. Y. C.

Dear Mr. Johnston:

I am keenly interested in your editorial suggestion for an open discussion of the plight of "a small exhibitor" and all other exhibitors, particularly at this crucial time.

To begin with, you suggest that there is a necessity for a new kind of distribution of pictures, a distribution that will regulate the difficulties of Exhibitor, Distributor and Producer. Why not cut away to the facts and recognize that with almost no exceptions there is no such element as the Distributor at the present time? The only two factors in the field today are Exhibitor and Producer; the Distributor practically doesn't exist.

It is rank inaccuracy and business hypocrisy to say Distributor when all we mean is an adjunct of a Producer, completely under Producer control. To get anywhere in this discussion we have got to recognize Producers as Producers, even if they distribute their own films, and Exhibitors as Exhibitors, even if they operate film exchanges. These people call themselves Distributors, but they are not Distributors, as I see the Distributor.

What we actually have is two groups who, under the present highly competitive system, are each more anxious of advancing their Producer or Exhibitor interests, respectively, than they are of recognizing any rights existing within the other camp. This fact is obvious to every intelligent man in the industry.

A Distributor is an independent factor (he must be independent) whose best interests are served by three things:

1st—Making equitable contracts with Producers for product, leaving the risk on production to the Producer.

2nd—Making equitable contracts with Exhibitors to utilize that product.

3rd—Helping the Exhibitor get from the Public the maximum amount of money for that product; doing this by reputable methods for the joint benefit of Exhibitor and Producer through efficient machinery for selling and exploiting films.

If we cannot make the Distributor fit this definition then there is only one answer—throat cutting tactics until the Producer takes over the Exhibitor or the Exhibitor drives the Producer to the wall. There seems to be no middle ground except through such independent, uncontrolled, efficient distribution. At the present time, however, a middle ground position seems next to useless; the Producer grip must be broken before anything else can be done.

It has been an unfortunate fact in our industry that the Producers being fewer than the Exhibitors, can always organize and reorganize to impose upon the Exhibitor, while the Exhibitors, being many, cannot successfully and permanently join together in organized form against their more compactly knit antagonists.

Why does the Producer-controlled distributing machine inevitably work to the disadvantage of the Exhibitor? Answer this question by another: How many of the executives in control of Producer-distributing machines have ever had an Exhibitor-distributing training or point of view to beget understanding or sympathy with the Exhibitor's problems?

Individually, perhaps, the Exhibitor is no better than the Producer from any angle. Collectively, however, the Exhibitor is sound and permanent, because of his theatre properties. The Producer, on the other hand, controls only temporary elements, as elusive as quicksilver; he has them today, his competitor may have them tomorrow. This is the basic reason for the Producer's constant effort to exploit the Exhibitor while the exploiting is good.

Is co-operative booking the right thing,—the way out? I would answer this with a question: What are the motives of the men behind co-operative booking plans? Are they trying to furnish a sure market for pictures which they themselves produce or have an interest in for the purpose of establishing Producer control over the Exhibitor in a little different form? A rose by any other name will smell as sweet, or a cabbage as rank.

Or—heed this—if they really represent organized Exhibitors, how is the Producer going to fare who trusts to their mercies? One side or the other has got to bleed under any such arrangement—and as long as either side bleeds, the industry will stay in its present bad shape.

Of this much we are sure. Producer control exists today; Producer control is what the psychologists call a vicious circle, which must go on, making conditions worse and worse, until some genuinely neutral factor steps in and ends it. Producer control was originally created by a Producer group's establishing itself with a superior line of product, and because of the excellency of this line securing control of the channel of distribution of its pictures to the Exhibitor. With control of the channel assured, the necessity for continued quality of product is largely removed, and the Exhibitor is imposed upon until at last he revolts and supports a new Producer movement. With the Exhibitor's support the new Producer group again secures the channels of distribution and again begins to depend upon its control rather than the quality of its product, once more imposing upon the Exhibitor until the latter again revolts, lending his support to some new movement that bids fair to make conditions better. Again the whole cycle repeats itself, and so on, world without end.

This has been the actual history of the motion picture industry from its inception to the present date. Independent Distributors have come out in an effort to help this condition, but up to now they have inevitably been absorbed by Producer control. Even in the case of Paramount, which, when I formed it, was so organized as to be impregnable to Producer influence from the outside, the Producer element finally crept in. Here it was simply a case of being sold out by my associates; and incidentally it is interesting to note that these very individuals who then succumbed to the Producer influence have since been discarded by the Producer elements.

Sinc ethen I have been able to form an organization which is impregnable to the Producer element both from without and within. This organization seems to be on the road to the accomplishment of what Paramount might have done had it not been sold out.

The independent Distributor is the only agency that can pick and choose its pictures, and eliminate without fear or favor; it is the only agency that is not carrying a big studio overhead, that is not bound up with exorbitant star salaries and all the other items which make it necessary for a Producer to sell a flood of poor pictures in order to keep on making a certain percentage of good ones.

I am soundly convinced, after twelve years of gruelling experience in all three branches of the industry—as Exhibitor, as Distributor, and working so closely with the Producer that I know his mind from the bottom up—I am soundly convinced that the independent Distributor is the only factor now in a position to stabilize the motion picture business. Unless his help is adopted, both by the sincere Producer and by the Exhibitor, the warfare must go on.

Yours very truly,
W. W. Hodkinson.

Flying Start for National Exhibitor Body

THE amalgamation of the Exhibitors' League and A. E. A. into one national organization, which occurred at Chicago last September, was perfected and completed at the national meeting of the Executive Committee of the new organization in a three-days' gathering at the Hotel Astor, April 3, 4 and 5. All details for carrying on the organization were agreed upon and a most comprehensive plan instituted. The name of the national organization is Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., incorporated under the laws of the State of Illinois, with offices in Chicago, where the president resides, and in Indianapolis, where the secretary resides. The Committee on Constitution and By-Laws entered a report and the Executive Committee made many important changes, after which the report was adopted unanimously.

Officers were elected as follows: Peter J. Schaefer, Illinois, president; Marcus Loew, New York, vice-president; Frank Rembusch, Indiana, secretary; Ernest Horstman, Massachusetts, treasurer.

There was further elected a member of the Executive Committee from every State, a list of whom will be given as soon as all have qualified. Under the plan of organization, the Executive Committee, comprising one member from each State, have full responsibility in conducting the affairs of the organization, and elect the president and other officers, and direct their work. The National Convention will occur in St. Louis June 17.

A campaign for membership will be started at once. An organization plan has been adopted, the details of which will be given later, whereby every member in the United States will be solicited for membership with such inducements and returns to every exhibitor member that there will be no doubt the largest membership in this organization in the history of the business. Solicitors will be active in every State in the Union at once, and all exhibitors are asked to send their application for membership to the National Secretary immediately. Every member of the Executive Committee was very enthusiastic over the success of the meeting. All felt a sense of responsibility as to the necessity of having a permanent and effective national organization. The national organization will depend on individual membership in each State. The State membership will elect one representative on the Executive Committee. Only questions of national bearing will have place in the work of the national organization.

The spirit of the meeting can be summed up in the address of President Schaefer, "That this organization shall work entirely for the best good of the whole industry. We shall be a means and medium of progress and defence for every exhibitor who becomes a member. Our function is to encourage every part of the industry and bring harmony and unity into the ranks of the exhibitors. We are opposed to any side issues or any plan of support except through the membership of the organization. Our organization is for exhibitors only. We have no entangling alliances with other branches of the industry, or any other organization of other branches of the industry. We believe that our work will be mainly to offset the evils of adverse legislation and bring about constructive legisla- dustry may assist, but the exhibitors' must be the leading tion, and these are problems that must be handled entirely by the exhibitors' organization. Other branches of the industry may assist, but the exhibitors must be the leading and guiding spirits in any matters pertaining to legislative work, as this has been proven by the past."

Exhibitors are requested to send their applications for membership to Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., Indianapolis, Ind., Frank Rembusch, National Secretary.

McAdoo Joins National Committee

William G. McAdoo, of the United Artists' Association (Chaplin-Pickford-Fairbanks-Griffith) has accepted the chairmanship of a new citizens' National Committee to increase the membership of the Boy Scouts of America.

Coincident with this comes the announcement that the Boy Scouts of America will sponsor a series of motion pictures, their entire membership of 500,000 boys, 16,520 individual troops in the United States, to co-operate in exploitation and advertising with exhibitors showing the pictures.

The pictures are to be made by Boys' Life Productions, of which A. D. V. Storey is President, authorized producers of motion pictures for the Boy Scouts of America, with Jack Cohn, former editor of Universal News Weeklies and Screen Magazine, as production manager.

New Thousand Seat House for Cincinnati

Another motion picture theatre is to be erected in the downtown section of Cincinnati. The new theatre will be located at Seventh and Vine streets, and will be financed by Albert Bejach, who runs a billiard hall and bowling alley on the site. He holds a lease for 60 years on the property and plans to convert the building into a picture show that will seat 1,000 persons. The only nearby opposition to this house will be the Star Theatre, one of the four downtown picture houses that gives shows for five-cent admissions.

Eisner Visits New York

Adolph M. Eisner, manager of the Doric Theatre at Kansas City, Mo., was a busy man around New York City last week making many business calls and renewing several old acquaintances.

The Doric Theare is owned by George W. Curtiss and Mr. Eisner has been the manager since last August 29. This house seats more than nine hundred patrons and is favorably located in the downtown district. Full week runs and open market bookings is the policy.

Admission prices including the war tax, are twenty-eight cents with fifty-five cents for the logue seats. A large orchestra provides the music.

Mr. Eisner informed MOTION PICTURE NEWS that this theatre owned three Universal cameras and not only made the local interest features of its own news weekly but also had a laboratory installed which enabled the theatre to develop and print all its own film.

Gets Big Selection

After spending eight weeks in search of screen stories in eastern cities including New York, Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago, William Parker of the Jesse D. Hampton scenario staff has returned to Los Angeles with a selection of 102 screen possibilities.

"Of the 102 stories, it is probable that we will select four. This is above the average, for a very careful selection was made before the options were secured. After looking over the stories several days, two have been decided upon, and it is probable that a similar number of additional ones will be taken.

'Big Four" of Pittsburgh Go "Over the Top".

The Hollis-Smith-Morton Company, Simplex distributors in Pittsburgh and known locally as the "Big Four," report that on March 22 six Simplex projectors were disposed of, making this a red letter day at their establishment.

This progressive concern has been engaged in the supply business for many years, each of the members of the firm being well known to the trade on account of their individual activities in and around Pittsburgh. Many of the high-class theatre installations in Western Pennsylvania are the result of their energetic endeavors and the recent reports received at the Simplex factory, from this hustling quartette, show a large number of Simplex installations.

Morris in Buffalo

Buffalo, N. Y.—Samuel Morris, president of Cleveland Exchange Managers' Association and manager of the Goldwyn branch of that city, addressed the local exchange men Monday evening, March 24, on the advantages of an organization of exchange men affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce. The talk was given in the Hotel Iroquois and exhibitors and exchange men not only from Buffalo, but from towns in Western New York, including Rochester, were present. The Buffalo men have organized and have affiliated with the Chamber of Commerce and all but two local offices are members of the association. These are Mutual and Triangle. It was to enlighten these two offices and all others interested that Mr. Morris was asked to come to Buffalo to address the local men.

Meets Success with Burton Holmes Travel Club

Sam Atkinson, manager of the Hoyburn Theatre, Evanston, Ill., has reported to the Burton Holmes organization unusual success with the idea of forming a Burton Holmes Travel Club and featuring the short subjects heavily.

Manager Atkinson organized the club among the teachers and pupils of the public schools and the parents. Prizes were offered for the best answers to a series of questions based on the travel subject, the children being divided into classes according to age. The first prize winners will appear in a motion picture with their teachers and parents, this to form a two day feature at the house.

Cropper Gets "Maciste" for Three States

The Bee-Hive Exchanges at Chicago, Milwaukee and Indianapolis will distribute "The Liberator," starring Maciste, for Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana, according to an announcement of General Manager R. C. Cropper.

This production is said to be the greatest ever attempted for "Maciste," the most massive, tremendous and masterly interwoven story ever written by Italy's greatest writer, Gabriele D'Annunzio. "The Liberator" is in the form of a twelve-episode serial of two reels each. Each episode of itself is described as an intense story, fitting into the story of the whole, affording "Maciste" a myriad of opportunities to demonstrate his gigantic strength.

"Girl Problem" Poster

In preparing its advertising aids on "The Girl Problem," the latest Corinne Griffith release, Vitagraph got out a unique three-sheet poster, showing a big head of the star breaking through a gigantic question mark. This poster, combining at once the qualities of a star portrait with a direct tie-up to the theme of the picture, has excited considerable favorable comment among he exhibitors, according to advices received from various Vitagraph branch offices.

"Particularly among the more important exhibitors who engaged in special exploitation on their pictures has this three-sheet proved of value," writes one Vitagraph branch manager.

Wayland Taylor to Exploit "Fires of Faith"

Wayland H. Taylor, formerly with D. W. Griffith, has been engaged as manager of a special Famous Players-Lasky department to exploit and publicly present "Fires of Faith" on a big scale. Several big theatres in metropolitan sections have already been engaged to present this Salvation Army special.

The Salvation Army heads, Grosset and Dunlap, publishers of the book based on the film, and Watterson, Berlin and Snyder, song publishers, are working on campaigns to aid the Famous Players-Lasky in the exploitation of this subject.

Photograph of a photograph of Marion Davies worn by her cousin throughout the war

Miss Davies Gets Souvenir from France

Marion Davies, whose latest picture "Getting Mary Married," which has received such splendid notices, and who is now working in the Paragon Studio on a new picture, which is said to be the screen version of a famous novel, is in receipt of two war mementos for which, she says, she would not take anything, however priceless, American-made.

These were brought to Miss Davies very recently when the 27th Division made its triumphant appearance in New York harbor, and were presented to her on the day of the parade by her cousin, Lieut. Edward Clark, a prominent member of the 27th Division, and a popular and well-known boy in New York. However, it is not now in its original shape, and could not be called by anyone a thing of perfect beauty, even though it is a picture of the extraordinarily beautiful film star. It is worn and torn now, as it was worn over the heart of Lieut. Clark all through the thickness of the fight "over there," in which he saw such active service.

The second souvenir is a shaft of thin copper, about eleven inches high, two inches across. Two-thirds up from the base there is soldered on a figure of Christ on the cross, beautifully wrought, with exquisite faithfulness as to detail. Above this is the Kaiser's crown, also perfectly done, and above this, on a decorated shield are the words "Gott mit uns," The whole is backed with four bullets, the spikes protruding from the shield.

Pioneer Buys Beban Film

The Pioneer Film Corporation has bought from Hiram Abrams the New York City and State rights to "Hearts Of Men," the George Beban feature. They have also purchased the New York State and City and the New Jersey rights to "The Lady of the Dug Out," the famous Al. Jennings picture.

The Pioneer Film Corporation has sold the territorial rights on "Still Alarm" and "Wives Of Men," for Kansas and Missouri, to the First National Film Co., of Kansas City, Mo.

Schwerin Returns from Booking Trip

Charles F. Schwerin, special representative for Samuel L. Rothapfel and Independent Sales Corporation in the marketing of the Rothapfel Unit program, returned this week from a trip through the South in the interest of the Programme. After visiting Pittsburgh, Columbus, Dayton, Cincinnati, Nashville, Knoxville, Chattanooga, Birmingham and Montgomery, Mr. Schwerin returns to New York with a hundred per cent sales record on the trip, having placed bookings in every city visited. The trip was made in seven days.

Mr. Schwerin reports that in his fifteen years experience in salesmanship, he has never handled a proposition that was accepted more readily.

Back to Cannibals!

Martin Johnson and Mrs. Johnson are now on their way to the South Sea Islands for their second motion picture expedition in search of cannibals, after being feted in Los Angeles and San Francisco for a week before their embarkation on April 8th.

While in Los Angeles members of Southern Californa Theatre Owners' Association tendered a special luncheon to Mr. and Mrs. Johnson which was attended by practically all Los Angeles exhibitors and film exchange men. At this, Mr. and Mrs. Johnson gave the principal speeches they made while on their way to the city of embarkation. In addition they both made a personal appearance at Grauman's Million Dollar Cinema Temple where portions of the film heretofore not shown in theatres formed an introductory for the now famous picture makers.

Syracuse Likes "Salome"

"The house was packed, jammed full, yesterday and Assistant Manager MacDowell had his hands full keeping the crowd in order; so better plan your work so you can attend the earlier performance and get a better seat."

This is the advice given by the motion picture reviewer of the Syracuse Post-Standard after the first day of a week's showing of the Theda Bara super-production "Salome" at the Strand Theatre, Syracuse. The critic continues: "The Theda Bara film is right—very, very, very film and much Bara! There are other attractions shown at the Strand, but, as I said before, you won't care!"

Extended the Run

After having played the William Farnum production "Les Miserables," three days, the Albany Theatre of Schenectady, N. Y., was obliged to extend the run for the full week to accommodate the crowds that wanted to see the picture.

In a two-column, fourteen-inch advertisement printed on Wednesday, the theatre's management printed this special notice: "Thousands have thronged the theatre every night and hundreds were unable to even get in. Never before in the history of motion pictures in Schenectady have there been such crowds. Many have asked us to continue the showing for the rest of the week. We have done it. You will have another chance."

Moss Takes Over Broadway Theatre

B. S. Moss, who owns and operates the string of popular-price vaudeville and picture theatres which bear his name round Greater New York, has taken over the Broadway Theatre for a long term lease which will go into effect on May 2. This arrangement, calls for an inaugural summer policy of feature photoplays, which will expand in the fall into a combination of vaudeville and photoplays. Among other plans of rejuvenation and modern appointments, the interior and exterior will be thoroughly renovated and retouched with ornate finishing.

Berman Forms Company

Picture camera and projectors, so simplified in construction and so moderate in cost that practically everyone who can now afford to use an ordinary still camera, may hereafter make and display their own moving pictures, is the promise of the Camo Corporation.

The new corporation, the main offices of which are in the Astor Trust Building, at Fifth avenue and Forty-second street, New York City, was organized by A. L. Berman, who has been prominently identified, for some time past with moving picture and theatrical interests. Mr. Berman heads the corporation as president.

Tom Moore Stars in Role of Traffic Cop

In the Goldwyn production released May 4, Tom Moore plays the role of a traffic policeman in "One Of The Finest."

Harry Beaumont directed the picture, and Seena Owen with Hallam Cooley support Mr. Moore in his role of Larry Hayes, the policeman. It is said that no man holding that responsible position ever went through a week without an adventure, and as more than a few weeks of Larry Hayes's life are depicted on the screen, his adventures are many.

Marshall Neilan Gives Dinner Dance

Marshall Neilan was host at one of the most brilliant private balls given in Los Angeles on Saturday evening, March 29th, when he lavishly entertained about two hundred prominent people of the west coast film colony at a dinner dance at Hotel Alexandria in honor of J. Fred Zimmerman, Jr., of New York.

Bert Lytell, Douglas Gerrard and Lou Cody assisted Neilan in entertaining and receiving his guests.

Begins Another One

Having completed "Wolves of the Night," which is scheduled for early release, William Farnum has begun the second of the series of the deluxe productions which he is to make in California. This is "The Lone Star Ranger," one of the best known of Zane Grey's books.

Dennis J. Sullivan Visits Los Angeles

Dennis J. Sullivan, manager of Distribution, Division of Films, Committee on Public Information of the U. S. Government, arrived in Los Angeles March 28. and spent several days there in the interest of the several subjects released by the government. While in Los Angeles he was the guest of T. E. Hancock, manager World Film Corporation Exchange, and visited Universal City, Goldwyn at Culver City and the Charles Chaplin plant in Hollywood.

Mr. Sullivan was formerly identified with the Mutual Film Corporation, during the period that twelve Chaplin subjects were made for this company. He spent a very pleasant half hour at the Chaplin studio watching the filming of several scenes for the coming First National release "Sunnyside."

Profit-Sharing Plan for Eastman Company

Twelve millions of dollars, the largest amount ever involved in a single profit-sharing in Rochester, is to be set aside by George Eastman and the Eastman Kodak Company for the benefit of employes, in the form of distribution of stock, according to announcement made by Mr. Eastman last week. Stock to the value of half that amount will be given outright by Mr. Eastman himself, the stock to be sold at par to the employes, and the money from the sale turned into the employes' benefit fund. It will be the largest single gift of Mr. Eastman, whose generosity toward his employes and toward the city of Rochester has attracted national attention. The other half of the total amount of stock will be issued by the company for sale on the same terms to the employes and the proceeds to go into the company treasury.

Guise Succeeds Branham

After many years experience, both editorially and as a reporter, on several of the daily newspapers in Minneapolis, George E. Guise, former secretary to Mayor Nye of that city, took charge of the local publicity for the Universal Film exchange.

When Charles Branham of Minneapolis accepted the management of the Majestic Theatre at Detroit he sent for Mr. Guise to handle the publicity. Now that Mr. Branham has resigned, George Guise succeeds him as manager of the Majestic Theatre in the Michigan metropolis.

Besides managing the Majestic, Mr. Guise promotes the publicity and exploitation for C. H. Miles' other theatres, and is said to have made a very auspicious beginning.

Billboard Campaign for Alice Joyce Picture

Plans have been perfected by Vitagraph for a national billboard campaign in behalf of its forthcoming Alice Joyce production, "The Third Degree."

A splendid 24-sheet has been prepared, carrying a big portrait of Alice Joyce and one of the big scenes of the play, and this will be conspicuous on the boards of the best stands across the entire continent.

Not only have the regular billboard spaces been reserved but special stands and locations have also been contracted for, it is said, and Vitagraph anticipates that its advertising campaign will be reaching millions of picture theatre goers well before release date.

American Announces One

Margarita Fisher's next picture, following "Put Up Your Hands" in the list of this star's offerings, will be "Charge It to Me." The American Film Company, Inc., announces May 4 as the date of release.

This is said to be one of the merriest little farces ever, from the pen of L. V. Jefferson, and directed by Roy W. Neill. It deals with a problem that troubles thousands of households—the matter of a personal allowance for Friend Wife.

M. P. D. A. Activities

With a meeting scheduled for April 15 at their lodge rooms, 234 West Fifty-fifth street, New York City, the correspondent of the Motion Picture Directors' Association enthused about the previous meeting, in the following manner:

At the last meeting, Emil Chautard presented the Lodge with a projection machine for the use of the members in cutting or showing their pictures. It will be installed during the coming week.

George Archainbaud is back in civilian clothes, having finished service with the Tenth Co. at Fort Totten, N. Y.

Jack Harvey is making a series of one-reel comedies at the Thanhouser Studios at New Rochelle. He has discovered that in making a serial a room has fifty-seven walls and four thousand angles. They will all be used.

Charles Miller is bursting with news, but refuses to divulge.

Del Henderson has a million-dollar idea which will be hatched in the warm weather.

J. Seare Dawley has finished his latest picture at the Biograph studio, and gave a showing of the complete story—titles and all—three days after the last scene had been shot. If the big releasing companies ever find out how it was done there will be very little delay in future dates. It shows one of the advantages of a director having full charge of his picture from Story to Print.

James Vincent fills the eye more and more as a typical Producer—that is, the popular idea of one. As a fact, they are usually thin and worn, but see James——

It is interesting to watch the growth of our Directors in the Independent producing field, and the closer the relation becomes between Directors and Producers, the better it will be for pictures. Too much system and red tape between the man who provides the money and the man who spends it makes impossible that sympathetic relation which should exist. We need much of meetings of sales managers and producers getting together in a friendly spirit, but the Main Office and the Studio are still miles apart.

Baker and Berman Visit Chicago Universal

Universal's general manager, Tarkington Baker, and Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges have gone to Chicago on the third of their regular monthly visits to the Windy City territory.

After leaving Chicago Mr. Baker will go to Indianapolis to look after the arrangements for the initial showing of "The Heart of Humanity" in the Hoosier metropolis while Mr. Berman will visit Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Des Moines, Omaha and Kansas City

Indefinite Run

Such was the crush at the Allen theatre during the week of March 31 for the first presentation in Toronto of "The Unpardonable Sin" that it was decided by Manager Ben Cronk to give the feature an indefinite run. Six shows were given daily and prices were practically doubled.

Fox Takes Long Lease on St. Louis Theatre

John Zanft, general representative of the William Fox Circuit of Theatres in the United States and A. M. Frumberg, of St. Louis, western counsel for the Fox company, announced today that they have completed negotiations for a seven-year lease for the building occupied by the William Fox Liberty theatre on Delman boulevard, just west of Grand avenue.

The lease was signed with the Victoria Theatre Realty Co., and becomes effective September 1, 1919.

After spending a week in St. Louis Mr. Zanft concluded that the Liberty theatre is situated in the center of the city's best amusement district and his faith in the people of St. Louis to keep the Liberty in the lead as the city's leading photoplay theatre caused him to sign the lease.

Mr. Zanft stated that the entire theatre will be re-decorated during the summer months and St. Louis interior decorating artists will be engaged and given carte blanche instructions to make the Liberty theatre the most beautiful in Middle West.

Art-o-Graf Loses Gibson

Tom Gibson, screen writer, has resigned from the Art-O-Graf Company of Denver because of business which demands his attention in Los Angeles.

It is announced that the company will produce the seven reel story of Mr. Gibson as soon as weather conditions permit. It is entitled "The Wolves of Wall Street."

Mr. Gibson still retains his holdings in the company it is said. He is the author of "The Mid-Night Man," "High Speed," "From Broadway to a Throne" and "The Last of the Open Range."

All Jobs Back

Announcement has been made at Toronto, Ontario, that all theatre employes who have returned from overseas service with the Canadian Army and have been able to resume civil occupations are all back at work at local theatres.

Picture Shows Viola Dana in Wilkins Novel

"FALSE EVIDENCE," released April 21, stars Viola Dana in the screen adaption of Mary E. Wilkins (Freeman) novel published under the title of "Madelon."

The story deals with the primitive customs of the people found in the famous Redwood section of California, one of which is that every girl is betrothed at her birth, and is expected to marry in accordance with her father's choice. The author of the novel, Mary E. Wilkins (Freeman) has made an exhaustive study of these people and their customs and habits and the character drawings in the screen version are said to be the creations of a strong cast of players whose capability has been oft proven in this type of story.

Finis Fox, of the Metro scenario staff, has converted the plot and action of "Madelon" to the silent drama. Edwin Carewe is responsible for the production, and the photography which is said to be the last word in artistic exteriors and interior lightings is the work of John Arnold.

Madelon, played by Viola Dana, is the first of the daughters of this section, to upset the local tradition of the place by her refusal to marry the man selected for her at her birth by her father, Sandy McTavish.

Among the principals will be seen Wheeler Oakman as leading man, Joe King as the heavy, Edward J. Connelly as Madelon's father, and Pat O'Malley, Peggy Pearce and Virginia Ross.

Metro officials state that never before, since the well-remembered triumph in "Blue Jeans," has Viola Dana had a more becoming role for her versatility and magnetic personality.

Cropper Gets "Maciste" Feature

R. C. Cropper, General Manager of the Bee-Hive Exchanges in Chicago, Milwaukee and Indianapolis, has purchased the state rights for Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin of Harry Raver for the release of "Maciste" in "The Liberator." Mr. Cropper has announced no release date as yet.

Mark M. Vance Resigns from "Variety"

Mark M. Vance, for eight years on the editorial staff of Variety, resigned last week to take up his new duties on the Dramatic Mirror.

Mr. Vance handled both vaudeville and picture work on Variety and will continue to do so in his new position.

Shauer Back from Europe

Famous Players-Lasky announces the return of the assistant treasurer, E. E. Shauer, from Europe. He has been in England and France for the past few months studying film conditions in those countries and has returned with a wealth of information and enthusiasm it is said.

Mr. Shauer declares that conditions there in the film business have greatly improved.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Best Advertising Brains To Help You

WITH this issue we take another step forward in affording service for the exhibitor. Since this department has been started a great deal of the space has been devoted to efforts to improve exhibitor advertising, and looking over the results that have been accomplished by showmen all over the country in contrast to a couple of years ago we are mightily pleased that we have been able to offer some assistance by the views that have been reflected here.

We have printed a number of articles from leading exhibitors on different phases of advertising, including the series by S. Barret McCormick. Further than that, when we undertook the constructive criticism of the work of exhibitors we announced to you that this department would not be governed by the prevailing practice of praising everything that the exhibitor sent in merely to keep him a "pleased subscriber." We realized that the time had passed when the intelligent exhibitor wanted anything of that sort.

We knew that he wanted the truth—we knew that he wanted to know how he could make the money he was spending or failing to spend for advertising bring greater receipts to his box office.

MOTION PICTURE advertising is not a thing for handbooks and set rules. In the first place conditions are changing too rapidly and in the next what might be good in one section of the country would not do in another.

With that in view we have decided to ask a number of the leading advertisers of the country to set down here their ideas illustrated by the sort of advertising that they do. We have asked them to tell why they are making the particular sort of appeals that they do make.

These will cover every section of the country and all sorts of conditions and certainly the result of this symposium ought to be, to put the very best advertising brains of the country before you.

Of course, we don't expect you to agree with everything that is said in every one of these articles. We don't expect to be able to agree with all of it ourselves. But there is not a man in the whole list that hasn't ideas and who isn't getting his share of the results.

YOU will be able to pick up from these articles ideas that will be the greatest benefit to you. The man who thinks that he knows all about advertising is a sad affair. The more of it we see the more we realize what we have to learn.

You will have here a symposium of thought on exploitation through newspapers that you could not buy for any amount of money. We want to urge everyone of you not only to read these articles as they appear, but to preserve everyone of them carefully and refer to them often.

We consider that we could not do you a greater service than in presenting this symposium.

FIRST of this new series appears in this issue. It is written by Nelson B. Bell who is director of publicity for the Moore Theatres Corporation. Mr. Bell is an experienced newspaper man and went from that work to the Tom Moore offices. He has a thorough grasp on advertising and we have been watching his work for a long time.

Conditions in Washington are in a measure different from any other city, because it is the nation's capital and without the industrial element that is found so largely in other cities. It is a case where class in the advertising counts—but let Mr. Bell tell you how he advertises and why.

But we want to say right here that the methods that Mr. Bell has employed has not only established the Rialto in the minds of the people of Washington, as one of the pre-release houses of the whole country, but that these methods have awakened the entire industry.

Next week there will be an article by Jack Kuhn, manager of Loew's Stillman theatre, Cleveland, O. Week by week after that there will follow articles from the leaders, and you will find everyone of these of interest and of great value.

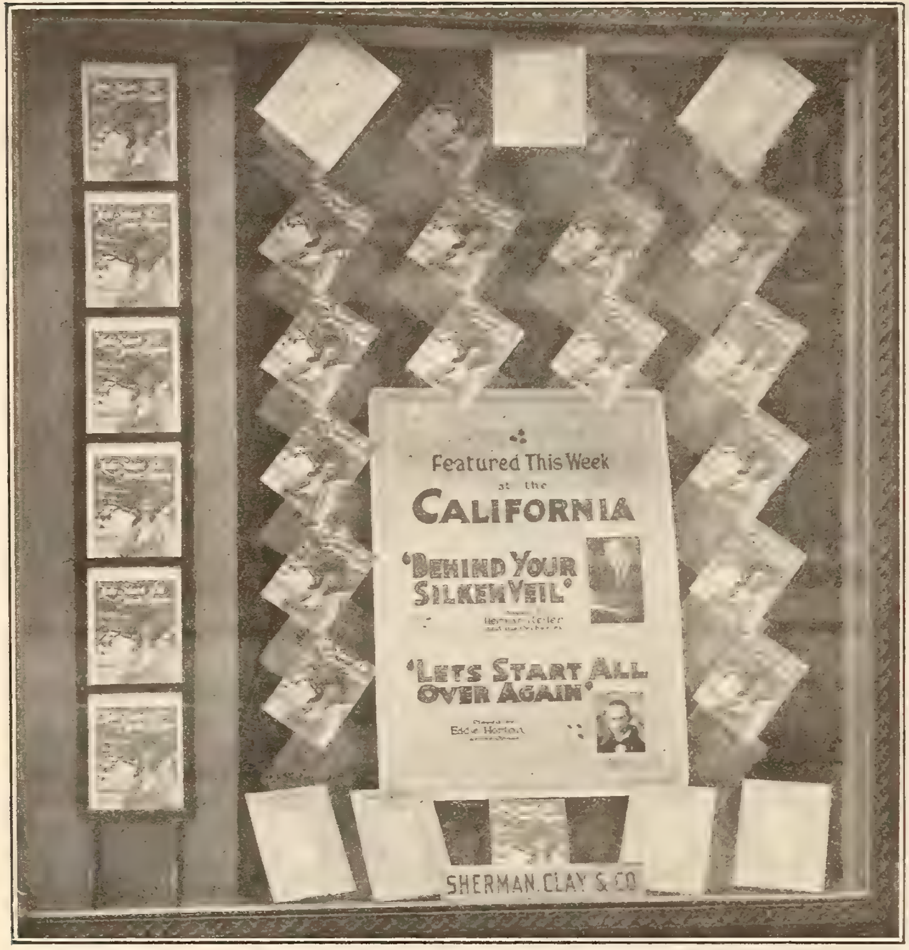
These are not the work of "arm chair" exhibitors or advertising theorists, but of men who have ideas and who put them into practise to make money for their houses.

COINCIDENT with the inauguration of this great symposium we have made a change in the arrangement of the advertising criticisms printed under the heading "Your Ideas and Ours." A large number of exhibitors have written us telling how much they have been helped by following this department, but declaring that in many instances they cannot get the full benefit because in the course of reproduction and reduction to the sizes we have to use much of the reading matter cannot be deciphered.

That is quite true and in order that exhibitors may take advantage of the selling talks used by others, we will hereafter reproduce these in the reading matter, when the reproduction renders this matter unreadable.

We hope that these changes will show that there is no Spring fever here.

And if there is anything else that we can do to serve you, only SPEAK OUT.



Typical window display advertising the California's music

California and Music Stores Cooperate Week After Week and Both Parties Get Big Results

SCARCELY a week passes that some worth while idea is not put into practice by Eugene H. Roth, managing director of the California theatre, San Francisco, and his able staff. Here is one that can be employed by exhibitors in any city where there is any attention paid to the music in the theatre and where there is any store that sells sheet music.

California theatre has one of the finest orchestras in the country, which is under the direction of Herman Heller. Not only does this orchestra play the highest class of music and the most popular airs during the regular presentations, but you have already been told here of the special concerts that it gives, including those on Sunday morning, which have attracted notice.

When a catchy or particularly tuneful number is played in any theatre there are always a lot of people who want to know what is the name of the selection, and then there are a lot more who want to get the music itself. This is the element that makes the arrangement of value to the music dealer. Of course, the direct advertising of the theatre is the big return that the exhibitor receives.

Even in cases where the exhibitor has to pay the music tax on these new compositions the increased advertising that he will receive will far more than offset this.

So the California theatre has arranged with the ten leading music stores of San Francisco to devote a window display each week to the new selections that are being played by the orchestra and by Eddie Horton on the theatre's immense organ. All that the music store has to furnish in making the display is the sheet music itself, for the card that completes the effect is supplied by the art department of the Calif.

These cards are four feet by ten, and in the case of the display illustrated on this page the card was in old rose and the decorative effects and lettering beautifully done. Much is lost in the photographic reproduction. Unusual attention is given these cards and to the color effects. Each one of these bears the picures of Mr. Heller and Mr. Horton. In short, they really add to the attractiveness of the window display.

In addition to this the California has further secured the co-operation of the music dealers by having printed thousands of slips reading, "We sell all the selections played by Herman Heller and Eddie Horton, the incomparable music artists at the California theatre." These are left in the stores where they are picked up by customers, and where the clerks include one of them in each piece of music sold

It is easy to see the wonderful advertising that is given a theatre by having the leading music stores devote a window each week to direct advertising of the theatre.

It will pay you and pay you big even if there is only one music store in your city that will co-operate, but we would attempt to go out and round them all up.

You wont have the slightest trouble in convincing the dealer of the value to him if the music at your theatre is really attracting any attention. He can see where this will make a big increase in his sale of sheet music, and he will be glad to do everything in his power.

Keep your cards that you include in the display neat and attractive. Don't get careless after a few weeks and think that anything will do. There should be "class" stamped all over this stunt, even if the stores that are used for the display are of the five and ten-cent variety.

It's a real idea. The California is showing you how to make money for yourself.

WORTH MONEY

Don't Let This Idea Get Away from You

HERE is an idea worth a lot of money to any theatre with an orchestra or an organ, to any theatre that is giving attention to the music.

You can get hundred dollars of free advertising — without any shadow of graft—and the best part of it is that it greatly benefits the stores that are cooperating with you.

If you fail to read this article you are deliberately robbing yourself.

And this is one of the ideas that are being printed in these pages week after week. Here the best brains of the motion picture exhibitors of the country are working for you.

The matter is here—and our one ambition is to be able to record every one of the good plans that are used anywhere in the country.

Go out and make money with Eugene Roth's plan and then come and tell us your own idea so that other exhibitors will be benefited by your progress.

Hints for Use Go with Sherrill Exhibitors' Plan Book

Froham Amusement Corporation has just issued a twenty page press book to provide a complete campaign on its latest feature, "Once To Every Man." This book carries all the material that exhibitors are believed to need from press notices to music cue, and includes suggestions for lobby displays, stage settings and general exploitation hints. Reproductions of the various newspaper cuts, suggested advertising and photographs of the paper are included.

This press book differs from the ordinary one in that the exhibitor is advised just what to do with specific material, the proper use for everything being plainly indicated.

Make up your mind to "start something." Then your house'll keep going so long that your generation won't have to worry about the finish.

Foolish Stuff—And Mighty Bad Business

OUR attention has just been called to a foolish occurrence out in Butte, Montana, where one exhibitor has been devoting part of his space to at least "kidding" the fact that another exhibitor increased his price on a special attraction. We are not in possession of the two sides of the case and we cannot believe that this was meant for anything more than a joke —but we repeat that it is very foolish stuff.

We do not recommend that any exhibitor try to take advantage of his patrons and charge them an excessive price for admission, but this is a case where it was certainly justified, for "The Heart of Humanity" was the offering. Exhibitors should be encouraged to raise their prices where the picture has sufficient merit and the rival exhibitor who is seeking to prevent that man from doing business—except by himself giving a better show—is hurting his own business.

Let's play absolutely fair all the time—for that is the only way that success is coming to the industry as a whole.

We are taking the incident in Butte on the face of the newspapers themselves without hearing the two sides of the case. And on the face of it the appearance is one that other exhibitors should avoid, as they would a red flag.

A picture so great—so amazing—so spectacular—so gentle—so violent—so altogether startling that cold type fails utterly in describing it!

"The Heart of Humanity" is pronounced by all critics to be one of the two greatest films ever produced. It is not a war picture but a gripping story of mother love in the great Canadian Northwest with the war as a background.

NOTE: In securing "The Heart of Humanity" we believe we have taken a step towards reducing the cost of first showings on big pictures which, as a rule, are billed as road shows at regular road show prices—one dollar. While the tremendous cost of this film will make it necessary to charge fifty cents admission, we feel that we are saving you at least fifty cents on the first filming of this greater production. What did you pay to see "The Birth of a Nation"—"Intolerance" or "Hearts of the World"? Just think it over.

This was the ad of the American Sunday before opening, See story for content

The American theatre booked "The Heart of Humanity" for a week, augmented the orchestra, arranged a special musical score and increased the price to fifty cents. Without attempting to pass upon the merits of any picture in these columns, we do not hesitate to say that the American theatre was justified in making this increase and that if the picture had been shown there as a road attraction, as "The Birth of a Nation" was shown, the price would have been at least a dollar.

Editor Bulletin:

If you are desirous of protecting the Butte public from a piece of barefaced "profiteering" please take note of the following:

I have just came home from the American theater, where they flashed on the screen an announcement that "'The Hearts of Humanity,' a picture which opens Monday, and for which they would have to charge an admission fee of 50 cents, but that Butte was getting off cheap, as it was being shown all over at $1.00 and over."

The enclosed advertisement of Loew's Metropolitan was taken from last Sunday's New York Times and speaks for itself whether Butte is favored, or being victimized by a shameless profiteer. I had seen the ad in the Times and was wondering if the American theater management could resist the temptation to raise their prices, and give the dear people a square deal. Their deception should be made known, for Loew's Metropolitan theater is a theater of the first class, and why Butte should be asked to pay this exorbitant admission is only one more proof to the public that they are surely the victims of greed and selfishness. L. J. M.

Newspaper "exposure" which was certainly misleading

So in its announcement the American theatre took occasion to say:

"In securing 'The Heart of Humanity' we believe we have taken a step towards reducing the cost of first showings on big pictures which, as a rule, are billed as road shows at regular road show prices—one dollar. While the tremendous cost of this film will make it necessary to charge fifty cents admission, we feel that we are saving you at least fifty cents on the first filming of this greater production. What did you pay to see 'The Birth of a Nation'—'Intolerance' or 'Hearts of the World'?—Just think it over."

In the same issue of the same paper there appeared a page advertisement of the Rialto theatre that at least bears every indication that the advertising writer for that house knew just about what the American was going to do, for under the heading of "Literally snowed under with the greatest galaxy etc." it proceeds to point out that the theatre has never raised the prices. It calls this "An Additorial on the Gentle Art of Hooking the Customer."

And Monday the Rialto comes back and takes a whack at its rivals with stuff maybe meant to be funny

But passing that by as a coincidence, the Rialto comes back the next day with this statement at the bottom of its four coumn display on Charles Ray and a Mack Sennett comedy with this statement:

Foolish Stuff—And Mighty Bad Business; This Sort of "Competition" Hurts Pictures

distinct slap at the price being charged at the American.

We repeat: It may have been meant as "funny stuff;" but it is particularly bad business.

In the first place it is not only unjustifiable, but it is untrue. We wonder how Famous Players-Lasky like the statement that these two pictures of theirs have been shown all over the country for a dime. Certainly in New York the price at the first run showing was sixty cents.

But even worse than this is something that the Butte Evening Bulletin did. Across the first page it ran, under the heading of "So the People May Know" the reproduction of a display of the Metropolitan theatre, BROOKLYN, showing that the picture had been run there at the night prices of 15 and 25 cents at night.

At the side of this reproduction there is printed an ANONYMOUS article signed with the initial "L. J. M." which calls attention to the fact that this was taken from the New York Times and therefore leaves the impression that these were regular New York prices for the attraction.

If the patron who clipped this and sent it to the paper knew anything about amusement prices he would have known that conditions in New York City proper, not the Greater City, and Brooklyn are radically different and that for all sorts of amusement enterprises Brooklyn is notoriously one of the cheapest cities in the country.

The fair thing would have been to state that this attraction ran for eight weeks at the Broadway theatre, Manhattan, at prices ranging from 30 to 55 cents.

Please understand that we are not attempting to boost the picture itself, but in papers that come to the desk just as we write this we see the picture being advertised in Kansas City at prices up to $1.00, in Detroit at fifty cents, at Tremont Temple, Boston, at $1.00, at the Pitt, Pittsburgh, for a return after an engagement of sixteen weeks, at prices from 25 to 75 cents.

And it just happens that at the very time there comes to hand a big display of the Columbia theatre, Portland, Ore., owned by the same company that owns the Rialto, Butte, showing that this is the ninth day of the run of the picture—and that the prices are 25 and 50 cents. Certainly the Columbia theatre raised the prices for this picture. And certainly the owners of the Columbia, and therefore of the Rialto, Butte, are not opposed to raising prices when they have the goods.

There is but one effect that this sort of thing can have and that is to leave the impression with the general public that they are being "Gypped." In our opinion, there was no reason on earth for seeking to accuse the American theatre of doing this.

We believe that it gave the public full value for the money, and that management should be encouraged in raising prices rather than to be put in the attitude of robbing the public.

So we repeat that the Rialto may only have been attempting to be funny—but it was bad business.

But the display in the front page of the Butte paper was not only misleading, but absolutely unfair.

Certainly the Butte Bulletin is not pursuing a policy that is likely to encourage national advertising of big pictures.

CONFIDENCE

It Counts in Your Exploitation of Pictures

WE take this from the sporting page of one of the New York newspapers. It is a quotation from a ring warrior, but it applies equally well to theatre managers. Here is what this winner of many battles says:

"I always fight my battles out before I go into the ring. I go through the actions, meet the sort of blows that I expect to receive, and put over the winning punch just as I would like to do it. Of course, it is seldom that the thing works out the way I planned it, but the big point is that this gives me confidence. I have persuaded myself in advance that I am a winner, and this is more than half of the fight."

That's a point in putting over pictures. Get the confidence first. Plan just how you will put over the wallop. If you don't start out with enthusiasm and the feeling that you are going to win, the chances are that you wont. There is a lot in the mental status, especially where your work is to persuade the people that they want to see a certain picture. It's common sense.

The punch worth while is the sort that the audience "gets."

"Personality of St. Paul" Will Be Recorded in Films

Going a little further out of the beaten path St. Paul is to have a film record for itself. This is not only to be shown at the local theatres, but portions of it that record the history of the city are to be preserved by the State Historical Society. Theo. L. Hays, manager of the New Garrick theatre and Tahs, Mills and Bell, motion picture makers are the interested parties.

"Personality of St. Paul" is to be the title of the offering and it is expected that many of the scenes will have a national circulation through some of the larger news weeklies.

The fellow who doesn't believe in advertising is not hiding his light under a peck—he is using a thimble.

Advertising Leaders and the Way They Look at Film Exploitation

Dignity With a Punch

By Nelson B. Bell

Publicity Director, Moore Theatres Corp., Washington

Nelson B. Bell

THE two essentials of successful photoplay exploitation, obviously, are a comprehensive grasp of the advertising points of the subject to be marketed and an equally broad knowledge of what may be termed the temper of the clientele to which it is the wish to appeal.

The surest and quickest method of appraising the efficiency of an ad is to apply the formula prescribed by the late Mr. Dana, if memory serves, to ascertain the relative merit of a news story—does it answer the questions "What? When? Where? Who? Why?" Familiarity with the habits, tastes and inclinations of the community catered to, alone can supply the modus operandi whereby the talking points may best be presented.

In conducting the publicity campaigns which have played a part in making the Rialto Theatre, in Washington, D. C., one of the great successes in the annals of photoplay exhibition in America, it has been the constant aim of the Publicity Department of Moore's Theatres Corporation to keep its advertising on a par, in point of refinement both of text and of form, with the dignified beauty of the house. It early became evident—the character of the theater, the excellence of the music and the probable superiority of each weekly bill having been established—that our greatest danger was in burdening our ads with too much verbiage. A cut, typical of the spirit of the picture, was found a convenient means of conveying a succinct idea of the subject's general nature and of conserving words, which hamper rather than aid effective display.

This one helps to stamp Rialto as one of nation's leading houses

An ad cut is never employed in a Rialto display unless it is genuinely illuminating and clearly indicative of some vital aspect of the pictured narrative. It is the view of the writer that the ad used to exploit "The Turn in the Road" furnishes a splendid example of the case in point.

"The Turn in the Road" was a totally unknown quantity in Washington when its exceptional merit was perceived by the Board of Review of Moore's Theatres Corporation for whom it was privately screened and by whom it was immediately recommended for early booking. The reason for presenting a feature not announced in the Rialto advance notices was set forth in the box following the conventional house information. The only other reading matter, it will be noted, is devoted to title, thirty-four words of description and recitation of the six names most prominent in the cast. The cut does the rest without caption.

It is our firm belief that this cut, taken from one of Brentwood's "stills"—and an actual scene from the play, by the way, instead of a specially posed group—is one of the finest bits of advertising material ever distributed. It throbs with action. There is drama in every pin-point of it—particularly since a neutral background has been stripped out. It shows conflict—psychological, however, rather than physical. It shows fidelity to life in the naturalness of its characters. The girl is not a "flapper;" the boy is modish, but not pomaded. The elder man HAS HIS HAT ON!

There is no need to caption a cut that contains so much "stuff" as this. A thoughtful reader perceives at once that "The Turn in the Road" is peopled by

Your Idea and Ours

THIS is just about as good an advertisement as we have ever seen, coming from the Liberty theatre, Seattle, Wash. It occupies a quarter of a page and appeared the day of the opening of the engagement.

Unquestionably the attractive cut of Miss Barriscale will get the immediate attention of every one and, for a change, we like very much the way the display matter has been set up. Here the name of the star and the title have been used in black faced type, while the selling arguments are in Roman, supplying a contrast, especially with the generous amount of white space used.

Misery may love company, but crowds like the happy smile.

LIBERTY THEATRE, Youngstown, O., is always a mighty liberal user of newspaper space and it went a little stronger with the booking of Fannie Ward in "Common Clay." Here it will be noted that the name of the picture is featured ahead of that of the star, and we believe that here is a case where the right thing has been done, because of the great success that the story made on the speaking stage.

IT'S A SCREAM

There is little of the selling argument used, for after stating that this is the prize play that ran a year in New York and then saying that the picture "opens the doors of polite society and unmercifully discloses its moral weakness," the designer is content with quoting the Kipling sentence.

Liberty theatre took advantage of the impression that this picture would leave by using additional space at the side but in a separate display to listing some of the other features that are coming to the Liberty in the near future.

Don't worry about your left hand worrying about what your right hand does, but let the public know.

COZY THEATRE, Topeka, Kan., furnishes a mighty good example of the curiosity arousing form of advertising by using some extracts from the press book and one of the two column stock cuts of the star in "What Every Woman Wants." However, we think that it could have been improved by a few omissions. We would have left out the question "What does this girl want?" which appears right over the cut, and we would also have omitted the line "A sentimental drama of present day society," for these in a measure duplicated other matter that has appeared. That, we believe, is covered in the sentence "A picturization of William Parker's dramatic story built around the dominant desire of all womankind," and then the matter contained in the boxes. From left to right this is the matter printed there:

WE have printed so much here about saving the material that you get and about taking advantage of what others are doing that we are basing the main things that we have to say about Arthur G. Stolte's advertisement of the Strand theatre, Omaha, right on that point.

He has used one of the suggestions from the Paramount press book in announcing the Dorothy Dalton picture and then when he comes along to the Chaplin announcement he has employed the line of heads that were sent out by First National in connection with "A Dog's Life" and then he has worked in the statement used by Dr. Riesenfeld in making the announcement of the revival of the Chaplin-Essanay product. Result is a hundred per cent display.

Instead of there being anything disgraceful about using any ideas of others, that practice stamps the live show man. If every one of us depended on his own ideas we are afraid that we wouldn't get very far. That is the reason that this forum of the thinking exhibitors in these pages is so well worth while.

It's always fair weather when advertising and enterprise get together.

HERE'S one of the "different" advertisements that are worth while if you don't use them too often. It's of the chatty character that gets right home. Aside from the announcement of the name of the star and the title of the picture, the selling point is centered on the boxed display in the middle. It reads: "Why don't you call her up? It has just occurred to me that you might like an excuse to call up your 'lady friend.' If such is the case it is up to me to prescribe the necessary direction. Go to the nearest phone, drop a nickel in the slot if necessary (it's worth it) and here is what you say—Hello, Peaches, this is the boy talking. Say, listen, how would you like to see beautiful May Allison in 'The Inspiration'—a bear of a picture at the Colonial this week. She'll go, Boy, take it from me. I'm the fellow who writes the ads."

This could have been improved by trimming the matter some. After the question it should have started with "Go to the nearest phone." Doesn't matter how small the type is, after you have finished every display take your blue pencil in hand and see how much you can cut out. You'll be surprised how much better results you will get.

This occupies nine inches three columns and is the work of the Colonial theatre, Seattle. We would rather have seen a larger cut of the star and some other than the heavy black type and border used.

If your business is wilting, use the advertising starch.

THERE'S lots of competition out in Los Angeles and each of the theatres is naturally trying to build up its own patronage and hold it. Therefore it is proper that each house should try to adopt its own peculiar style of advertising so that it will be the first thing to get the eye of the reader.

SUPERBA

NOW PLAYING

Beautiful MILDRED HARRIS

WHEN A GIRL LOVES

ANOTHER LOIS WEBER SENSATION

Superba theatre has gone rather the limit in doing this in the daily papers. It is employing two inches double column and making the name of the theatre practically the whole thing, with a mortise left for the attraction. With the reserved effect it naturally stands out and certainly will get the eye of the followers of the theatre. But it is a serious question whether it would not be better to sell the attraction every day. We are as a rule distinctly opposed to the card advertising plan, for we are more and more persuaded each day that we play this game that the goods you have today are the things to sell today—and the house as a habit with them.

THIS 8¼ inch, four column display of the Hippodrome theatre, Dallas, Texas, is highly effective, first because of the way that the hearts are used and then on account of the balance that is given it.

Manifestly the thing that should have been brought out the strongest was the fact that the picture was held over for another week. That gets the eye even before the title of the picture. You need not be afraid that the title won't be seen quickly enough after that. And then the name of the theatre gets attention and the three big facts are before the public. Then there has been sufficient white space in the other two hearts to set off the smaller type. In the upper right hand corner we have this selling talk:

Then follows the special price to the children. In the heart at the lower left there is reference to the music and the manner in which the picture is being presented.

By contrast the second week advertisement of the Holman theatre, Montreal, suffers. There isn't the slightest doubt that this seven inch, double column display is much the "prettier." But there it stops. The line saying that it is held over for the second week is set in very small type when it should have been brought out strong. The entire appearance of the display is that of an entirely new attraction. We would also have brought out strong the line "The great Canadian play is the biggest motion picture Montreal has ever known."

Second week advertising on a held over attraction presupposes that it has had strong original advertising the first week and that everyone knows the bare fact that it was shown. Manifestly the one thing on which to put the emphasis is that this is such a big attraction and that there was such a demand to see it that you simply had to hold it over so as to be able to accommodate the crowds.

Most interest some men put in their showmanship is counting the receipts after the show is over.

LOEW'S STILMAN THEATRE, Cleveland, O., was probably the first in the country to show John Barrymore in "The Test of Honor" and therefore Manager Kuhn designed his own advertising straight through. Here he has obtained a striking effect by using a large cut of the star and then a scene cut at the side showing him with the girl. We would prefer not to have used the convict picture which appears in the upper right hand corner. There are certain people who object to pictures of convicts and the like, and this is a mere incident in this production and should not be brought out strong.

It will be noted that this display is extremely simple, the larger type being devoted to the name of the actor and the title of the picture and then there following the selling argument, which says:

> In this photodrama John Barrymore attains his greatest achievement. He is the perfect master of dramatic power, the one actor in America able to play such a part, in which he strips the mask off emotion and rises to the most power acting that the screen has ever seen.

HERE is another case where the "Common Clay" title has been played up as the strongest thing about the display. It is the work of H. C. There has been special emphasis placed on the fact that this has been made fram A. H. Woods' stage success, and we like the line saying that it is even greater as a motion picture.

The line "The story of a lovely woman who stooped to folly" is a good catch line, but it is not thoroughly in keeping with the real story of the picture. Here is a case of a girl who resisted the lure of the white lights and the cabarets and when she was thrown out of her home sought employment as a maid. Her wrong was not in any desire for the gay and giddy life, but because she loved and trusted a man. We believe that anything that misinterprets the real truth of the picture to a certain extent cheapens it. We especially advising against that danger in the Special Service Section that we printed.

Be sure you are right, and then go ahead—but let the people know you are going.

TWELVE inches across four columns is well employed by the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, Ga., in advertising "The Amazing Wife." The only serious criticism is that we would have made the illustration at the upper left rather larger, for it does not come out clearly here that the man is in the uniform of an American officer. The cut should have been more striking so as to get the quick catch of the eye.

WITH the exception that the half tone does not print nearly so well as it should, here is a good appearing display in the three colums, ten inches of the Strand theatre, Birmingham, Ala. We believe that the Hart production for the latter half of the week is played a little too strong and that the name of the theatre loses prominence thereby.

The script line: "And they thought they were woman haters" is good and ought to get the eye at once and then there is a fairly good selling argument in the smaller type, but we would have brought out the comedy element all the stronger here. There is a little misleading sentence in "But—when she leaves—three bounding, admiring Romeos." We would have rather featured the bridal dress and the bathing suit idea that we suggested in the Special Service Section on this picture. Here is a case where just a little longer selling argument would have put over the appeal better and we would have emphasized that this is just the sort of a production in which everyone likes to see Miss Clark.

We have made these criticisms rather severe because the Strand is coming to the front so rapidly in advertising that we are anxious to help the theatre all we can to hundred per cent results.

It's safe to say that the fellow who says it doesn't pay to advertise never put any brains into it.

WE will admit that in many cases the matter that is supplied by producers is bad and that in others the exchanges are at fault because they fail to keep on hand the matter that is promised by the producer. But there are lots of cases in which the exhibitor is more to blame, because he fails to take advantage of the material that is offered him and to employ his brains at the same time.

George A. Bleich controls the situation in Owensboro, Ky., where he has the Express, Grand and Queen theatres, but he does not let this keep him from advertising every day in the week. Mr. Bleich is in a small city and has no facilities for getting his cuts made, and therefore it is up to him to get the most that he can out of the material that comes to him from the Cincinnati exchanges. This he does, but he does not employ the matter "straight" as it comes to him, but employs his own ideas in its arrangement.

The two single columns that we have reproduced side by side run eight inches deep, and here he has used the cuts provided by Famous Players-Lasky for the main display and then has set the other matter. We are not reproducing his selling arguments here, for the pictures are somewhat old now, but it is enough to say that they are chattily written and right to the point.

Neither is he afraid to advertise what he considers a big feature in advance. This four column 8½ inch display was used the Sunday before the opening of the engagement on "Virtuous Wives," and then he followed this up with large space every day of the week. In this case he also took advantage of the matter that he could get from the exchange, the three heads and the line "What is virtue in a wife?" coming from that source. Here is another good display, but it would have been improved with a little more space employed. This would have allowed the name of the star to have come out better and to have been used on a single line, as it should have been. But we'll admit that where a manager is advertising only against himself that this shows mighty good business building sense.

With cuts of other producers Mr. Bleich has been able to get good results, although some of them are not so effective for display purposes.

Calling every picture the greatest ever is simply the old story of "Wolf, wolf."

WE have printed a number of specimens of the work of H. L. Percy, who has been one of the managers of the Rialto theatre, Medford, Ore., and who has now gone to Roseburg to take charge of another theatre belonging to his company. So this is his last offering for the Rialto and we must say that he has just about hit the top notch with this one, which is a bit of newspaper copy used during the run of "Panthea," featuring Norma Talmadge.

Unable to get good printing from halftones, the Rialto has been using line effects, the drawings being made by a local artist. Here there is an appealing picture of Miss Talmadge that really looks like her, and the selling talk on "Panthea" is boiled down to a single sentence, "The story of a great love that will make you smile through your tears." We believe that this is sufficient to make the public want to see this film.

"A Midnight Romance"

ALHAMBRA THEATRE, Milwaukee, makes an especial appeal to women in its advertising and it does it mighty effectively because the advertising is written by a woman who has an excellent appreciation of values.

Reproductions in the size they have to be made here really give no more than an idea of the pulling power of these displays. For instance, the one on "A Midnight Romance" is 8½ inches across eight columns, while that on "His Parisian Wife" occupies seven inches across seven columns.

Now the Anita Stewart picture was shown just a week before the style show held at the Alhambra, an account of which was printed last week, and therefore it was all the more important to get the idea of the beautiful gowns into the advertising. So the two drawings at either side show Miss Stewart as a maid and then in a beautiful frock at the right. The selling arguments are especially good. For instance, directly under the name of the picture is this:

> Imagine—Anita Stewart at midnight, beautifully gowned, charming, in a love scene with a very good looking man. And then—the next morning he finds her in his hotel room—a maid of all work, and he nearly breaks her heart with the call-down he gives her for apparently fooling him. Sounds illogical, doesn't it? Well, it isn't.

And then on the other side of the smaller figure in the bathing suit we have these two lines:

> It is her habit to slip away from the hotel at night for a dip in the surf. On one of these occasions she meets Roger Sloan, multi-millionaire.

And then to the extreme left next to the figure of the maid is:

> Abuse and cotton by day. Anita plays the part of Marie, a maidservant from nowhere by day.

And at the right:

> Love and Silks at midnight. At midnight Marie is a thing of beauty in shimmering silks.

Give the striking figure of Elsie Ferguson coming from between the parted curtains as the center display there is an excellent selling argument to either side. The two paragraphs are:

> His parents said that his newly found wife was a questionable person because she came from "naughty" Paris. She helped to confirm this opinion when she appeared in a rather extreme gown. But there was nothing questionable about her except her judgment in accepting his parents at their assessed value.
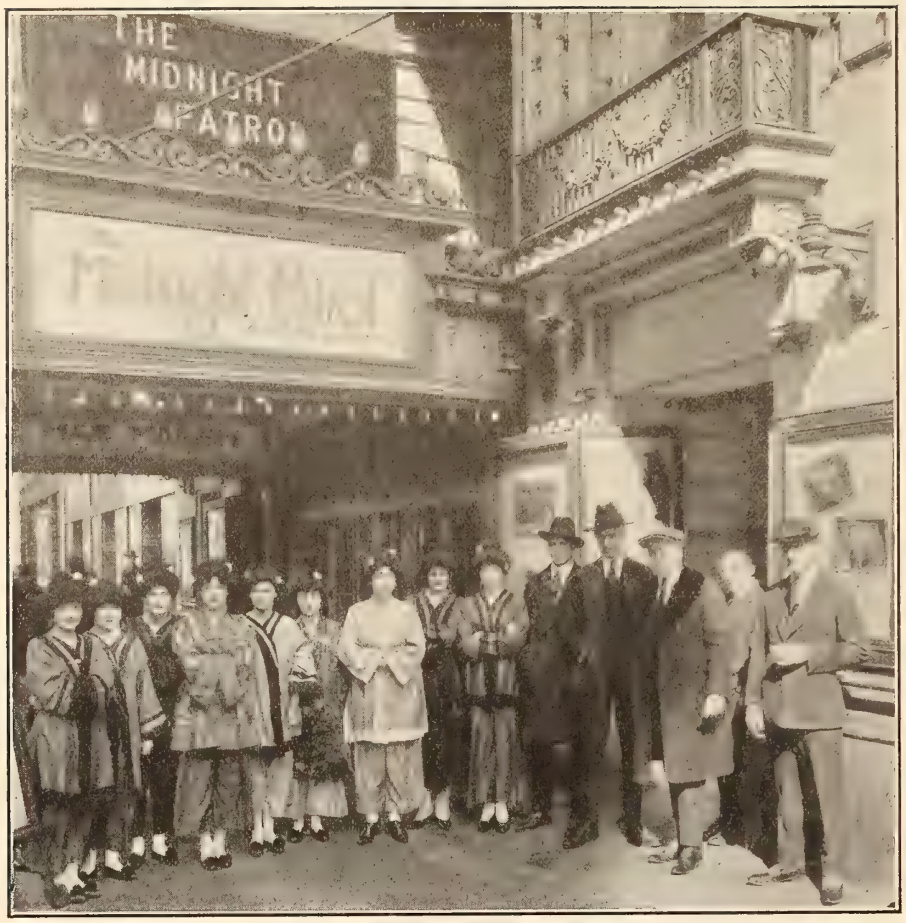
> The very first night she came down to dinner in a daring French creation. Wow! But Puritan husband and "in-laws" were horrified! Worse shocks yet to come! You will get even a bigger idea of Elsie Ferguson's brilliance when you see her dressed in these stunning Paris clothes.



Manager Perry had the girl ushers of the Strand in costume for "Midnight Patrol"

Perry "Sells the Street" with Chinese Setting for "Midnight Patrol" and Strand, Minneapolis

MANAGER C. C. PERRY of the Strand theatre, developed one of the most novel and successful picture exploitation feats seen in Minneapolis this year for the showing of Thomas H. Ince's melodrama, "The Midnight Patrol."

"The Midnight Patrol" is a story of police heroism and Chinese duplicity among the opium smugglers of Los Angeles' Chinatown. Having studied his picture, Manager Perry set about gathering the various elements that could be woven into a real Chinese motif, which, for the week, would give the Strand a real Chinatown atmosphere. His success was spontaneous and immediate.

First, all of the Strand employes, ticket sellers, doorwomen and ushers garbed in striking Chinese costumes consisting of attractive silk smocks and pantalettes of variegated design and color. Incense was burned in bronze bowls at several points in the house and Chinese lanterns were used for decorative effect. It was interesting on the first Sunday afternoon that the picture was shown to see people among the downtown throngs passing along Seventh street between Nicollet and Hennepin. Persons headed directly for either Hennepin or Nicollet avenues would catch a glimpse of the Chinese garbed doorwomen or an usher at the front of the Strand, pause for a second and then turn in. It was as fine an instance of selling the street as has been seen there in many moons. It was only a short time until the house was filled and the ropes were up. By this time interest in the street had been intensified several fold by the crowds waiting in line at the Strand.

"What is it?" you would hear someone say.

"I don't know," would be the reply, "but the girls in there are dressed in Chinese clothes. See the ticket seller? See that usher just inside the door? Let's go in. I want to see what it is."

It was a clever stunt for stimulating interest and piquing curiosity. It got over and got over big.

Once inside the Strand, Manager Perry had still further innovations for patrons. Previous to the showing of the feature picture, Harry Kessell, singer, assisted by a Chinaman, staged an opium joint sketch that proved highly entertaining. Both were garbed in Chinese costume. Mr. Kessell sang "Blow the Smoke Away," from Joe Howard's "Time, Place and the Girl." Then the curtain dropped, the picture screen was lowered and the first of "The Midnight Patrol" was flashed on the screen.

This effective staging and the atmosphere developed in the house beyond any doubt lifted the picture and keyed spectators up to a keen pitch of expectancy. For the picture continued to hold interest and patronage throughout the week.

Dignity with a Punch Is Used in the Advertising of Moore Theatres

real folks, that they are involved in forceful situations, and that reliance is reposed in intelligent impersonation rather than physical violence for climacteric effect. This impression creates a sure and highly desirable reaction at the box-office. "The Turn in the Road" played a week of capacity at the Rialto, which, after all, may be said to represent the w. k. old last analysis.

In all-type ads, such as we sometimes utilize in exploiting bills for our Strand and Garden Theaters, freakish borders frequently are relied upon to attract quick attention. A specimen of such a device is published in connection with this.

Drawn to Type Appearance

One of the most important considerations when terminoligy has been decided upon, is the manner, in which advertising copy is prepared for the printer. Typesetters, usually, are not clairvoyant in their perception of an advertiser's intended effect when the best he can offer is an ambiguous verbal description of what may not have been entirely clear even in his own mind. It therefore has been our custom literally to "draw" our ads as near to printed form as hand-lettering can be made to approximate the printed word. A penchant for drawing that led close to magazine and book illustration as a profession perhaps equipped the writer to simplify the printer's work in building the Rialto displays. While Cheltenham condensed and Roycroft caps are not always perfectly reproduced in pencil, we do not present to the composing rooms copy that preserves in exact proportion the display desired. This minimizes proof correction and saves the compositor much profanity, thus militating toward the preservation of his withered soul.

One of the rules of the Moore Publicity Department that has become almost a fetich is to ignore the producer's press sheet, which in a majority of instances betrays an amazing facility in eluding its subject's most valuable advertising qualities.

Landau Scores Big Hit with Film of Milwaukee Soldiers

Leo A. Landau, manager of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, has just scored a big hit by showing exclusive pictures of the landing of the Milwaukee soldiers in New York. Mr. Landau engaged a camera man here to take the picture, and 1,000 feet of excellent film were obtained. In fact, they were so good that the Milwaukee newspapers reproduced scenes from the pictures, giving them first-page positions in the Sunday issues.

As soon as he received a wire that the pictures had been successfully taken, Mr. Landau began to advertise them heavily, so that on their arrival the house did enormous business.

Convert yourself into the belief that yours is the best theatre, before you try to do missionary work on others.

How New York Stages the Show

ALL of the leading New York bills this week impress one with the attention that should be given to the comedy subjects which are sometimes ignored because they are shorter. Many times the music will bring heartier laughs and the arrangements for such pictures are well worth studying carefully. They are excellently presented.

By-the-way, a new series of comedies is being introduced at the Strand with the presentation of "A S'prise Party an' Everything," the first of the productions based on the cartoons of Briggs, "When a Feller Needs a Friend." It scored a big hit. The feature at the Strand is John Barrymore in "The Test of Honor."

Comedy rules the bill at the Rivoli, where the feature, William Russell in "Brass Buttons," is a farce. We have gone thoroughly into the musical arrangement for that picture and it's worth your while. There are two animated cartoons, a Happy Hooligan and a Jeff and Mutt.

"Peppy Polly," with Dorothy Gish, at the Rialto, is full of comedy and there is an added measure with Larry Semon in "Well, I'll Be ——." And the critic to whom we have referred might study the first three musical numbers at the Rialto as evidence that he hasn't made such a discovery.

Broadway illustrates Newton's truism "for every action there is a reaction" by presenting Charlie Chaplin in "The Bank," and Monroe Salisbury in "The Blinding Trail," the latter a tense feature. There is a musical arrangement that brings out the point strikingly.

Rivoli Theatre

RANGING all the way from "Pomp and Circumstance," one of the most impressive of compositions, down to ragtime, there is a wonderful arrangement of the music in the Rivoli Pictorial this week. It is unusually long this week and might become tiresome were it not for the splendid selections of the accompaniments that Dr. Riesenfeld has made. As a matter of fact the music all through the bill is especially pleasing and particularly does the arrangement add to the appreciation of the feature.

There are no less than four different settings by John Wenger for the overture, the first "Peer Gynt Suite." So far as we know this is the first time that this has been done in a motion picture house. This whole number is played with the lights of the house entirely out and bare lighting on the stage so that the effects are ghostly. After a few bars the curtains part revealing the dim outline of some tall trees, with a glimpse of water in the background and rocks in front. This is "Morning" and we see the tinting of the horizon as the sun begins to come up.

Immediately the lights flash out and then after a few bars more we have "Ase's Death." It represents a tomb barely outlined and there are two lights at the left, one slightly taller than the other. One flickers and goes out and then a moment later the other does the same thing. The third setting represents "Anitra's Dance." There are two columns of gauzy blue with a dais in the center and an oval window in the rear. As the lights come up slightly there is revealed a girl on the dais who does the dance with red lights on her. The final setting is "In the Hall of the Mountain King." With the lights out again there is a blast of the muffled horn and then we see a weird effect with a single column, cliffs and trees in the background. Not only did each set get applause, but the whole number got an enormous reception.

As much as this was appreciated at the Rivoli, this is something that the exhibitor with the average theatre should not attempt.

Then comes "Sunshine and Shadows," a Post Scenic. There is a novel opening with a shot through a tunnel and then shots of falls, snow scenes and a lot of varied effects. "Love Happiness" from "Leonora Symphony" is played on the organ for this.

With the lights in the center of the house in red and the orchestra flooded in gold and the outer curtains in blue, they part and Mme. Pascova sings the aria from "Mignon," "Knowest Thou That Land."

Then comes the pictorial opening with Gaumont pictures revealing the secret that England has the greatest fleet of submarines in the world, including vessels far bigger than those of the Germans. These are operated by steam when on the surface and many interesting shots show the methods. "Pomp and Circumstance" is under for these. Then Kinograms give us some views of the Princess Bay light which guided the transports into New York harbor and here "Evensong" is used. Pathe shows some interesting pictures of Greeks fishing for sponges at Tarpon Springs, Fla., to the music of "Vivienne."

With Kinogram views of the consecration of the Bishop of Baker City the organ plays the pictures and then the orchestra comes back with "Melody of Peace" for Gaumont views of the Roosevelt memorial commission. Universal Current Events has some clever views of the drills in making merchant seamen for our navy while "Before the Mast" accompanies. Kinograms goes to Oceandale, Fla., to bring back some pictures of a new speed boat being tried out and with the millionaire's "chauffeur" rising behind on a surf plank. "Gypsy Rondo" is played here, with the effects accompanying. Kinograms adds a touch of humor with "Great diving stunts," the action being reversed and the people coming out of the water back to the diving boards. "Apache Intermezzo" is played.

Now there comes a big series of hearty laughs with a Happy Hooligan cartoon, "It Beats the Dutch." First we have the trumpets imitated and then with the order "Ready, Aim, Fire," we have the command given in a very shrill voice by some member of the orchestra. "Parade Militaire," with trumpets and trombones dominating is played until the trench scene at "42 and Broadway" appears and then it changes to "Isme," with whistle effects as Happy pulls a crab and fish out of his clothing. There is a mock call of the trumpets and the roll of drums as he is taken before the German officer and then one of the kid Hooligans ask whether he was shot at sunrise, and Happy replies that he overslept, the music becomes "How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning." Then he goes on to tell of his later adventures in the camouflage division and there is a perfect shout as we see the bars he paints on the mule doing a dance, while "You Bet" is played and xylophone effects are used. Then when Happy disguises himself as a sausage and the Germans by the score follow him into the detention camp, "That Moaning Trombone" is played, there being a special moan when Happy observes, "I never sausage a thing" and asks how that is and the kids reply, "That is the wurst."

Kinograms comes back with news pictures showing a Missouri town resorting to the draft to get a mayor, and here "The Old Town Pump" gives the rural atmosphere. Gaumont shows pictures of the Philippine commission who come to ask independence arriving in San Francisco, and "Philippine Island March" is used. With Universal Current Events we go to Paris and see the Queen of Roumania, who is fighting Bolshevism. "Roumania" is played here and adds to the applause. But the big punch comes at the end with the King and Queen of the Belgians the guests of Gen. Pershing at a review of the headquarters division. Of course, there are the heartiest sort of cheers which break out again and again. "La Brabaconne" is used first, with "Hands Across the Sea" following through.

With the inner curtains the only setting and the house lights red, James Harrod then sings "Dear Old Pal of Mine." As we saw the show he got a big hand when the parting curtains revealed him, something unusual.

Then comes the feature, William Russell in "Brass Buttons," a farce. The unusual number of forty-two changes of music are employed here to get the most out of this offering. Here is a case where three numbers are largely used and their repetition with different phases of the action give a swingy effect and put the audience in gay good humor. "Dream Kisses" is used at the screening and then "Eileen" is played for the Irish policeman, with "Mollie Dear" following through, and then with the introduction of the mayor of the Western town we have the organ carrying a humoresque, and then a numbered selection, "Pagliacci" is played to action for the "bad man," with "Shimmee" following through. "Poppyland" is played with the title "Lemuel Hollister" and then as young Hollister calls the policeman to the auto "Eileen" is used, with "Russian Rag" introduced for the first time as the maid shows Hollister the picture of the gunman, "Jake, the Priest." As Bernice leaves the house "Forest Whispers" is used with the theme, "Love Bells," as Hollister sees her. There is burlesque music as he pretends to have a fit and then the theme again as she looks at him. Then with the change to the park scene the burlesque number is used again with sandpaper and muted horn effects and then back again to the theme as the girl laughs.

"Dance Capriccio" is used as the maid observes, "So this is the way monsieur kills his Chinaman," and then with the arrival of the mayor in the city "Sensation" is played and with the fade-out "Pagliacci," then "Sensation" as the mayor tells the confidence men why he is there, and then "Russian Rag" as they speak of Jake. "Just a Girl" is played as the maid comes out of the house, and then "Russian Rag" again as Jake confronts Hollister with the gun. When the sheriff congratulates him the chorus of "If He Can Fight Like He Can Love" is played, and then "Russian Rag" as Jake is picked up. Then as the girl begs Hollister to take the job as police chief of the Western town the theme is played, quickening into a one-step as he and the mayor walk away, and then slow again for the scene on the train.

"Eileen" is played as the real policeman awakes in the taxicab in the park, and then the organ plays to action, with a numbered selection by the orchestra with the arrival in the Western town. As Hollister jumps on the bar "Shadowland" is the music, and then as Hollister goes to the bad man and looks at his buttons "The Whistler and the Dog," and then with the job completed, "This Is the Life." Here there are a lot of laughs, especially with the whistle effects as Hollister shoots the buttons off the bad man's vest.

As the telegram is seen the theme comes in, and then when the policeman sees Hollister we have "Eileen" played once, with "Molly Dear" following through. As the girl opens the door for Hollister "First Love" is used, and then with the discovery that he is not a policeman, the theme. With the title, "A Modest Hero," "Eileen" is again used for the policeman, and then the organ with the title, "A Quiet Wedding." As Jake is seen again "Russian Rag" is played, and then when the shot is fired we have Rachmaninoff's "Prelude" played with oboe lamento and tympany rumble, and at the end with Jake's explanation the good old "After the Ball."

Mutt and Jeff in "Subbing for Tom Mix" wind up the program. There is a lot of screamingly funny stunt stuff here, of course burlesqued. "Porcupine Patrol," "Daisy Bell" and "Honky Tonky" and a world of effects are used for the music.

Final organ number is "Toccato," from Widor's "Fifth Symphony."

IT'LL HURT

Shekels for the Moment Are But a Small Part of the Game

WE picked up an out-of-town newspaper today which contained the advertisement of one of the leading showmen of the country. The picture that was being offered hinges on a wrong that is done by a woman—but a wrong that is done under the influence of genuine love.

But it seems too easy to make her an innocent who falls for the lure of the dance halls—to get the sensational into the appeal. And so this exhibitor, and others, could not resist the temptation. Undoubtedly the advertisement got the people in for the day, but it ignored the real selling points of the picture.

It ignored the things that would bring them to your theatre for that day and then leave them so satisfied that they would come again and again. And it is the sort of a display that not only keeps a lot of people away from the theatre but that works for censorship.

Why appeal to the sensational, especially when the spirit of it is not in the picture?

Strand Theatre

A BRAND new character so far as motion pictures are concerned is being introduced at the Strand theatre this week. He is "Skinnay" of the celebrated "When a Feller Needs a Friend" of the Briggs cartoons which are printed all over the country. These are stories of real boyhood days and Managing Director Joseph Plunkett has given the picture a simple, but catchy musical setting that emphasizes the enjoyment.

Again at the Strand there is a feeling of spring through the bill and though the feature is of the more tense character, one leaves the theatre with the distinct conviction that one has been amused with the liveliest sort of a show. And that is a mighty good feeling to have your audience in—for they go out and talk then and send others down to form a line before your box office window

The always welcome "Madame Butterfly" is the overture this week. As this starts the lights on the stage are red and after a few bars they go down to purple as the curtains part very slowly revealing a special stage setting. In the immediate foreground and on either side is a blossoming cherry tree. If these are not real they are so effective an imitation as to deceive even one who is seeking to analyze the intricacies of the presentation There is a water scene in the foreground and then a background of more trees and a Japanese arch effect. Toward the end the lights come up gradually into daylight, making the set all the more beautiful.

"Gate City March" is the music for the opening number of the Strand Topical. Now there is the refrain in "Dixie" in this selection and it is so timed as to be played when the title is thrown on the screen showing that these are Pathe pictures of the "Old Hickory Division" being welcomed in Columbia, S. C. Bugle effects and drums add to the realism of the pictures which stir the audience to enthusiasm. Current Events shows "Riding the Blue Streak," which includes some adventures with an ostrich at the farm at Jacksonville, Fla. Here the music is "Ostriches." Then come the Pathe pictures of the sponge fishers, "Les Ailes" being played. Current Events supplies some interesting scenes of Far Eastern brides arriving at San Francisco to become wives of Chinese and Japanese already in this country, and how they are identified by their photographs. "Chinese Wedding Procession" is the fitting music

Topics of the Day get their usual number of laughs, especially one saying, "Opera singers in Moscow get twelve pounds of flour a night. In Russia this sounds like a Mary Pickford salary." And another one: "So far peace is almost as exciting as war." "Ja Da" is played during these.

Then we go back to the news pictures again with Pathe pictures of Secretary Baker the guest at an airship fete at Kelly Field, San Antonio, where we see scores of machines in the air doing all sorts of stunts. Here the music is "Gypsyland." Then come Pathe views of the work of mustering out boys of the Twenty-Seventh division at Camp Upton and a winning, pleasing effect is given with the music, "All Out of Step But Jim." Then come Current Events pictures of the Roumanian queen with "Roumanian Hymn" played. Pathe then shows us a number of the notables attracted by the Paris peace conference including the head of the Arabs, Gen. Allenby and Clemenceau, presenting the first view of him since he was shot, "Cleopatra March" accompanying. The final punch comes with the same pictures as used for the same purpose at the Rivoli and the music, too, is very similar, "La Brabaconne" being played in honor of the Belgian rulers on their visit to Gen. Pershing and then with the title "The headquarters band" turning into "Chicago Marine March."

"A Wasmanipae Week End" is the clever Outing-Chester scenic this week. It shows some pictures of fishing at Sturgeon Island, shooting rapids, Hudson Bay traders and Indian women. The music is carried on the organ and the effects are realistic.

Then comes a mighty clever Bray cartoon, "Bobby Bumps' Lucky Day," which illustrates his narrow escapes from the Indians with the assistance of the dog. "Dance of the Debutantes" is played until the scene where Bobby grabs the Indian feathers and there the orchestra swings into "Hindustan" to the finish.

Malcolm McEarchern, basso, then sings "Three for Jack," and as an encore, "A Chip of the Old Block," most effectively.

Then comes the feature, John Barrymore in "The Test of Honor." "Scenes Rustique" is played once through at screening, and then "Reverie" follows until the scene at the trap shooting when we have "Woodland Inn," without intro, until the couple go into the lounge room and here "Manon Lescaut" until the moment when the husband enters and here we get an impressive effect with the orchestra tacet, and then we have only a tympany rumble during the fight with the orchestra again tacet as the man lies on the floor. This arrangement adds to much to the power of the scenes that one could hear members of the audience catching their breath. "Lamento" is then played to the scene with the coroner's jury, where the organ takes up the music for eight minutes.

At the title, "The only change the years," where we see the girl playing the violin, we have a violin solo played to action and then the organ continues until the title, "A few days after Martin's return." Then we have "Thais" as a violin solo, and "Without revealing his motive" brings an expressive adagio played once, and then "Romance" until the title, "Through introductions forced from Ruth," where we have the 'cello and piano playing "Liebstraume," until the girl enters with the violin. Here for her solo we have "Souvenir" on piano and violin played to action until the spectators are seen applauding, and here the organ comes in again playing for twelve minutes except with the title, "After dinner that night," when we have the piano alone playing, "Yankee Boys" With the title, "Have you one of your headaches?" the orchestra comes back with "Jewels of the Madonna" until the scene where Martin is stretched on the couch, and again there is the piano alone, this time playing "In Her Little Blue Bonnet." As doctor enters the room there is a dramatic tension used and when Ruth asks about the headache we have "Fedora," and for the final scene between Martin and the girl "I Love You Truly."

There is a beautiful setting for the vocal number that follows, Lona Laska, the Alaskan soprano, singing "By the Waters of the Minnetonka" and "From the Land of the Sky Blue Water." The girl is seen in Indian costume sitting at a fire with a kettle hanging from a tripod and a fire burning. With the Maxfield Parrish blue there is the effect of the mountain top, the blue sky and the water in the distance with the moon rising. It is one of the most delightful sets that have been shown at the Strand.

Then comes that wonderfully human comedy, "A S'prise Party 'n Everything," and we certainly do get a lot of laugh with "Skinnay" and his little friends. Every one from smallest to oldest enjoyed this, and there was a burst of applause such as few features ever received. "Danse Miniatures, No. 1," is played until the scene where the boys choose up, and then we have "Take Me Out to the Ball Game," played twice through, followed by "Doodle, Dee Dum." Then with the title, 'S'prise, S'prise," we have "Children's Games," "Wooing Hour," and "Come Along to Toytown," following through. You could not ask a more pleasing score.

"Marche la Flambeaux" is the organ solo.

WHAT IT COST!

THIS is an actual occurrence: We sat in the office of the advertising manager of a theatre. It was noon and the general manager came in with a copy of the afternoon paper in his hand. There was a half page display there and the manager was boiling.

"Have you gone crazy?" What are you doing? Where do you ever think that we'll get this money back?——" And then there were a few other things until the manager couldn't talk any more.

With that the advertising man explained that he thought the manager was ill and that the business manager of the local paper had persuaded him to try advertising on a basis of the additional profit on the picture. The theatre advertising man knew that he had a real picture and he was willing to take that much of a chance.

That evening the writer visited the theatre. The manager had evidently forgotten that the writer had overheard the conversation, for he proudly pointed to the line in front of the theatre, "That half page cost me a lot," he explained, "but it pays to advertise."

After that he stopped counting the cost—but paid attention to the profits.

Rialto Theatre

THERE is a lot of comedy in the bill at the Rialto this week and at the same time there is a character of music of the higher class that will appeal to the most appreciative. And if all exhibitors would try to give the comedy elements of their program as much attention as they get from Dr. Riesenfeld there would be less complaint about the quality of them, for there isn't the slightest doubt in our mind that the music is even more essential to the comedy than to the feature, if there must be a comparison.

"Les Preludes" is the brilliant overture and this is played with the lights gold, being followed by one of the clever Robert Bruce scenics released by Educational, "Before Breakfast." There are some wonderful shots here and the scenery is so beautiful that one looking upon them before breakfast would be likely to forget hunger in one's admiration. Mr. Bruce has achieved the registering of these views to a perfection that one forgets the screen is there. "Tschaikowsky Valse" is played for these.

Now note the way that this high class music is carried through even to the third number for this is Sadcha Fidelman, violinist, playing Tschaikowsky's "Canzonetta" with the lights of the house all blue.

Production Manager Joseph LaRose must have been a very busy man picking the subjects for the Rialto and Rivoli magazines this week, for he has a wide variety of them. At the Rialto it starts with Kinogram pictures of the welcome of the Old Hickory Division at Columbia, S. C., which are similar to those at the Strand. They are followed by the Pathe pictures of the boys of the Twenty-seventh being mustered out. The music starts with the first part of "The Last Stand" and then there follows through "Dixie" played twice and then "For the Nation's Honor." Then come the Current Events ostrich pictures, "The Virginia Skedaddle" used. Kinograms gives us pictures of lowering the flag on the battleship Iowa as she goes out of commission and then we have "High School Cadets" and a trumpet call as the flag comes down. Following are Pathe pictures of the flying at Kelly Field, with "Lance and Shield," until the airships are seen flying and then the orchestra fades out for effects.

Then comes some mighty interesting pictures of scenes in Germany after the armistice and there could be nothing more effective in the way of music than "March to the Gallows," which is used. We get a good laugh then with the second of the series of the "Sayings of Moisha Toplitsky" and here "Jewish Melody No. 2" is used. The final punch shows Gen. Allenby reviewing his victorious troops at Alexandria, Egypt, and the Britishers get a great hand as they march to the music of "Queen of Sheba."

Ann Rosner, Martin Brefel and Emanuel List make a wonderful hit with their rendering of the trio from "Faust." There is a special setting used here that adds much to the effect.

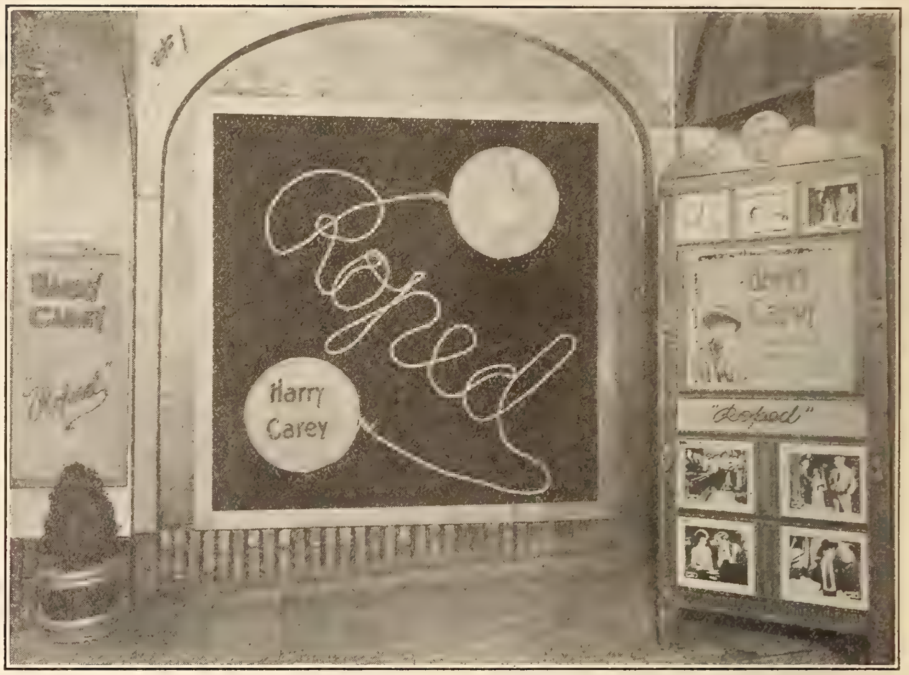
Then comes Dorothy Gish in "Peppy Polly," a picture with lots of laughs in it. Friml's "Adieu" is the theme used to mighty good effect. There is some especially arranged music at the screening and then "Dialogue," and with the title "Born on the Seventeenth" we have "Wearing of the Green" without intro, and then "Come Back to Erin" following through. With the title "In the Next Room" "Melancolie" is used and then at the title "Cheer Up" Friml's "In Love" is introduced.

New York's Way

Then we have another special arrangement, and with the title "Polly Starts Out," "Speed Her Up" is played, changing to "Serenade" with "The Great Connecting Line," followed by a numbered selection with "Yester Thoughts" as the donor draws his own conclusions. "Le Loudon" is used for the self-appointed committee, and then "Valse Triste" with "The Same Old Story," and then the organ takes up the music. Where the doctor is seen entering the girl's cell "Adieu" is played as a cello solo, and when they embrace as a violin solo, a delightful arrangement. As they are surprised by the committee there is an intermezzo, then a numbered selection, and then with her escape from the ice room "Ghost of Saxaphone." The theme is brought in at the end.

Rialto orchestra then plays "The Dollar Princess," and there is riotous Larry Semon comedy, "Well, I'll be——." It opens with a western allegro, then "Polo Rag" and "How I Hate to Get Up in the Morning" as the sheriff wakes, then "Yah de Dah," another western selection, "The Call of the Cozy Little Home," "High Sine" and "He's a Jolly Good Fellow," with the title "Drink Hearty," and when the girl sits down with him, "Yi I Addy I," and then with the reference to prohibition we have Chopin's "Funeral March." Later, with the title "Don't Never Offer Me Any Liquor" we have Tosti's "Goodbye," and after this come "Zephyr," "Sinbad," "Ghost Dance," "Caroline Fox Trot," a mysterioso, "Love Me and the World is Mine," "Saddle Back" and "Go On You're Only Fooling." The comedy gets a great reception.

Francois Dubois "Allegro con Spirito" is the organ number.



Mission theatre, Seattle, Wash., got a wonderfully effective lobby display in a simple manner by outlining the title with a lariat and using the name of Harry Carey and his picture in the two nooses

The Broadway

IN his lobby and through his program this week M. Kashin, managing director of the Broadway is following one of the maxims of Newton: "For every action there is a reaction." This is understood better when it is said that the feature, Monroe Salisbury in "The Blinding Trail" is a very tense picture and the reaction is offered by one of the Charles Chaplin revivals. In the lobby this idea is carried out by displaying the name of the feature on one side and "Chaplin Revival" on the other, with heads of the two stars in the center and the quotation from Newton below.

"Mignon" is the overture and this is played splendidly by the orchestra under the direction of James C. Bradford with the pit flooded with blue and the rest of the house in darkness. Then follows the Broadway Topical Digest opening with pictures of "The Fighting Sixty-Ninth" and here we have "Boys of Tipperary" used as the music. "The Emerald Isle" is played with pictures of the Irish envoys asking for a hearing. Then follow the pictures of the visit of the Roumanian queen to Paris to fight Bolshevism while "Gallant Serbia" is played. "In a Chinese Tearoom" is played for the arrival of the Far Eastern Vrides and then "Buin' the Blues" for "Have you a little gater in your home?" Then there are pictures of Gen. Pershing bidding farewell to the Rainbow division on German soil and here "New Colonial March" is played. "Anchor and Star" march is used for the visit of the Belgian rulers and then at the end for the cartoon pictures "Give Him a Solid Foundation" we have "We Don't Want the Bacon." All these pictures are Universal Current Events or International.

"Topics of the Day" follow and then we have one of the funny Lyons and Moran comedies, "State Room Secrets."

Now the reaction theory stars in on the program. We have Harry Thomas, the Biltmore pianist, rendering "The Old and the New," a clever arrangement of the old and new style of music, a series of contrasts that certainly bears out the theory. The piano is well back of the stage with an amber spot light upon the performer.

Now we get Charlie Chaplin in "The Bank." Here the musical selections used are "Razz Berries," "Harry Fox Trot," "Don't Cry, Frenchy, Don't Cry," "Tombonious," "Rainy Day Blues," "Cheer Up, Father, Cheer Up, Mother," "Belinda," "Everything," "Bengal Days" and "Oh, Susie, Behave."

Now that the contrast may stand out all the greater there is no musical number separating the feature from the comedy, but we jump right from the laughter into the serious drama. It certainly has the effect of making it all the more gripping after one has just laughed one'sself sick.

"Ballet Suite" by Mottl is played at the screening and this is followed by "Under the Stars" with the question about McKenzie. At the scene where he leaves Helen "I Was So Young" is used and then with the title "Inter Sports" we get Orlob's "Waiting." At the scene where Jim is injured the prelude from "Eva" is played and then with the title "The shock" we have "Yesterthoughts" with the theme, Hebert's "Sweethearts" played as the sisters enter the room. Then when the sister reenters the cabin there is "The Baker's Boy" played, followed with "Pizzicato Bluette" as Adele leaves and then with the title "When McKenzie" we have Schuman's "Traumerie."

There is a pretty touch of music brought in with the coming of winter again where "Mighty Lak a Rose" is used, followed by "For You a Rose" with the title "In anticipation." While Jim is seen sitting at the Table "Norwegian Folk Song" is played and with the announcement that it's a boy "In the Village" is used. As we see Adele in bed with the baby "Sing Me To Sleep" gives a beautiful touch. Then with the announcement that the doctors could do nothing "Over the Waters" and with the title "I think I could tell you," Bartlett's "A Love Song." With "Business" we have "Frills and Furbelows" and then as Jim enters the boudoir Baron's "Indian Legend."

The theme comes back again with "You're a wonderful woman" and then as Adele comes down the staircase "Naids Idyll" is played, then with "would you mind" we get Mendelssohn's "Athalia" and then an agitato as the fight starts followed by "Adrienne Lecouver" for "My baby" and then the theme brought in at the end with the title "In Springtime."

Nevin's "The Gondoliers" is the organ solo.

Aid of the Merchants Counts When You Can Offer Something That Will Really Benefit Them

USE of "double trucks" or two pages side by side in a newspaper and getting the cooperation of merchants is not particularly new and if the exhibitor tries to work the plan too often he is likely to get the merchants of the city to thinking that he is trying to get something for nothing.

When you get a picture that has a particular appeal to women or to men, and therefore the chance is presented the merchant to cooperate and get real benefit, the matter should be taken up with the advertiseing department of one of your papers and the plan worked through it. Then you have the benefit of the solicitor going to the merchant to sell a concrete proposition instead of putting yourself in the attitude of asking a favor.

For instance "What a Woman Wants" offered a particular opportunity to appeal to the fair sex and the Washington Theatre, Dallas, Texas, took advantage of that fact and enlisted the assistance of the Times-Star with the result that the double page spread carried the announcement of the picture of twenty-one business firms, the theatre itself not paying for a line of the space, though every one of the displays carried the sentence "What Every Woman Wants."

The entire theme of "What Every Woman Wants" centers about her great love for beautiful clothes. It should not be a difficult matter for any exhibitor showing such pictures to interest his leading dry goods merchant in advertising in connection with this attraction.

Recently, when Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" was exhibited in Kansas City, Wolff's, a clothing house, keenly awake to the interest in the picture, inserted an advertisement which attracted widespread comment. Referring to the lack of outer wear which marked the savages' mode of living, Wolff's called attention to the fact that the Islanders evidently had never heard of Wolff's, or they would have been won over to the American fashions, so clean-cut were the goods he offered for sale.

It was only a two-column ad, about ten inches deep, but the wisdom of its insertion was more than borne out by the many compliments paid Wolff's advertising man for being on the job and taking immediate advantage of one of the biggest amusement attractions ever offered in Kansas City. And it might be added, the advertising did not detract from the attendance at the "Cannibals" show.

IF YOU MISSED IT

IF you missed the announcement appearing on Page 2451, turn back now and read it. It is one of the biggest steps forward that has been taken by the Exhibitors' Service Bureau for the aid of showmen everywhere.

Then when you have finished this turn and read Mr. Bell's article on Page 2455 about his policies of advertising. This is the first of a series and you will get here week by week the views of the leaders of the country. It is a real symposium of the best ideas.

When you have finished there you will note in "Your Ideas and Ours" we have gone still further in our efforts to help you.

If there is anything further we can do, just LET US KNOW.

PROGRAMME

Special Screening of

"Little Women"

A Paramount Artcraft Special

WEDNESDAY MORNING, MARCH 12th
1919

Given in honor of Visiting Delegates to Fourth Annual Convention of WOMEN INSTITUTES OF ALBERTA.

Motion Pictures, Moral Force in the Community

THE progress of the cinemagraphic art during the past ten years has been remarkable. The motion picture theatre of to-day has been handicapped by its ancestry. The dark hole-in-the-wall nickleodean is no more. In its place is the modern motion picture theatre—light, sanitary and wholesome.

But among some people there still remains the ancient prejudice against the "movies." This is due to a misapprehension. The motion picture theatre of to-day has made prohibition practicable. It has provided a place of amusement for the working man—a place where he can afford to take his wife and his kiddies. The well regulated motion picture theatre to-day is one of the big moral forces of the community.

In presenting "Little Women" to the members of the Women's Institutes of Alberta, the writer hopes that some who might otherwise be under a misapprehension will note the wonderful strides made by the cenemagraphic art. Ten years ago to produce "Little Women" on the screen would have been impossible.

And this is merely one example of the "Better Class" of pictures of the present day.

Yours cordially,

Joe F. Price
Manager Allen Theatre.

Canadian Manager Puts Over Real Constructive Plan in Showing Feature to Women of Province

JOE F. PRICE, manager of the Allen theatre, Calgary, Alberta, is a motion picture man who believes that there is something more than today in this business. He has just shown an example of building for the future that is bound to pay any house and to lift pictures to a higher plane and a more general appeal.

In March the Women's Institutes of Alberta held their fifth annual meeting in Calgary. Now Alberta is an immense province and the delegates came from all sections of it, many of them being people who were out of reach of the Allen theatre although there are two other Allen theatres in Edmonton, the same province. But the main object of this was to attract attention to the theatre locally and this was done.

Two months before the convention Mr. Price got in touch with the arrangements committee and invited the convention to attend a special performance of "Little Women." Understand, he did not simply invite them to come around and see the picture but he offered to show it at any hour during the week that the committee should select and to the delegates to the Women's Institutes convention only. This was arranged for 11 a. m. Wednesday and made a part of the printed program of the convention.

For his showing Mr. Price had special programs printed, the front and back covers of which are shown. The inside pages included a scene from the play and the cast. Sharply at eleven o'clock the thousand or more delegates appeared at the theatre where arrangements had been made for their reception. A special musical program was arranged for the occasion. Many of the delegates were unaccustomed to hearing high class music in a motion picture house and this made a great impression.

Now as to the results on this showing on the public: The Thursday business showed an increase of $50 over Wednesday and on the third day, Friday, there was an additional $100 picked up—something almost unheard of in Calgary.

Here is another case where Mr. Price showed his showmanship. Under the heading "Motion Pictures Moral Force in the Community," he devoted the last page of the program to this signed statement:

"The progress of the cinemagraphic art during the past ten years has been remarkable. The motion picture theatre of today has been handicapped by its ancestry. The dark hole-in-the-wall nickleodeon is no more. In its place is the modern motion picture theatre—light, sanitary and wholesome.

"But among some people there still remains the ancient prejudice against the 'movies.' This is due to a misapprehension. The motion picture theatre of today has made prohibition practicable. It has provided a place of amusement for the working man—a place where he can afford to take his wife and his kiddies. The well regulated motion picture theatre today is one of the big moral forces of the community.

"In presenting 'Little Women' to the members of the Women's Institutes of Alberta, the writer hopes that some who might otherwise be under a misapprehension will note the wonderful strides made by the cinemagraphic art. Ten years ago to produce 'Little Women' on the screen would have been impossible."

That this was read by the delegates is shown by the letter from the superintendent of the institutes received by Mr. Price after the showing. After expressing the great pleasure of the delegates the letter said:

"More people have spoken about their enjoyment of this photoplay than any feature of our convention program. I believe that in addition to providing entertainment for the country women who were there you have accomplished an even greater thing—you have placed before the people of Alberta an idea of what 'good pictures' really mean.

"On your program you mentioned something about there being a certain prejudice against motion pictures. Your presentation of 'Little Women' has done more to remove this feeling than anything else that has ever been done."

Let's have some more CONSTRUCTIVE MISSIONARY WORK like that of Mr. Price. It will not only pay the theatre that does it, but it is bound to have its effect on the general public and the whole industry.

DE STAR DO MOVE

Newspaper that Ignored Pictures Now Turns the Other Way

SCORE another one for the exhibitors of Kansas City, Mo., and for the crusade for co-operation between newspapers and exhibitors that originated with and has continued with the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

You will remember that we told you in the review of the situation in Kansas City that the Star, one of the leading papers of the country, had arbitrary rules on how a motion picture house could advertise, and that they gave absolutely no news co-operation.

A few weeks later we printed another story, showing the change that had come about, and the resulting increase in advertising. Then the newspaper was printing some motion picture news matter and short synopses of the features at the first-run houses. That was a mighty big step forward for the Star.

Now comes to us a voluntary two-thirds of a column review of a picture being shown at the Doric theatre. It was unsolicited. It means a lot to Kansas City. You know the old war-time negro story about "De sun do move." Now we beg to substitute the Star.

Saenger Company Adds Two More Theatres to Chain

Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans, which controls forty-five theatres in five states, has just announced the purchase of the Rapids Opera House in Alexandria, La., for $75,000. The corporation already owned the Saenger theatre in that city.

The Amuzu theatre, owned and operated by Suddath and Levy, has also been affiliated with the Saenger Circuit.

Live News from the Producers

Four Directors for Sunshine Comedies

Announcement that Frank Griffin has joined the ranks of directors, making Fox Sunshine Comedies at Hollywood, is regarded as added evidence of the increased production which William Fox has planned for these pictures. The acquisition of Griffin, who is one of the best known comedy directors on the Pacific Coast, makes a total of four directors now at work on the Sunshine lot. The others are Jack Blysone, Fred Fishback and Hampton Del Ruth—all three of whom have established reputations for producing comedies that are crammed with hilarity.

It is stated by the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation that the Fox Sunshine Comedies have a wider distribution than any other two-reel subjects in the industry.

Select Ships Prints of "Bolshevism"

First-run showings of Select Picture's big Special attraction, "Bolshevism on Trial," will now be announced very shortly as shipment of prints is well under way. During the last few days prints of this timely subject have been shipped to Select branches at Boston, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Buffalo and Detroit, and Select officials expect that the end of the current week will have placed every Select branch manager in possession of at least one print of this eagerly awaited big Special.

The photoplay has been somewhat reduced in length and is now presented in six reels. Striking illustrated titles have been incorporated and give an added attraction to the picture.

"Tiger's Trail" Begins

The Pathe Program for April 20 is notable for the beginning of the new Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland with George Larkin; and "The Sawdust Doll," a five part feature starring Baby Marie Osborne.

The first episode of the serial entitled "The Tiger Worshippers" shows the theme of the story—the theft of a mystic tiger idol from a temple of the Tiger Worshippers in India, the wealth it brings to its possessor, the efforts of the Hindus to regain their idol and the fight of the heroine, Belle Boyd, to obtain her rights in the fortune of her guardian.

"The Tiger's Trail" was written by Arthur B. Reeve and Charles A. Logue. The scenario was written by Gilson Willets.

Approves the United Franchise

Exhibitor Frankel Buys Two Additional Shares of Stock After Expressing Satisfaction at Box Office Returns

Kitty Gordon is the Principal Player in "Playthings of Passion," United Picture

A RECENT advertisement of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., carried a statement which, it is said, has proved of interest to all exhibitors, based as it was, United pointed out, upon a concrete example of an exhibitor. The exhibitor is A. Frankel, president of the Hawkeye Amusement Company, owners of the Rialto Theatre at Des Moines, Ia.

Last fall, United reports, Mr. Frankel signed a stock franchise contract with United, calling for two shares of United stock which provided two playing days for each United production, as a percentage classification of 1-20 of 1 per cent of the cost of such production. In actual rentals, this percentage of total production and distribution cost amounted to $42.50 per day for each Dustin Farnum production, $41 per day for each Florence Reed production and $37 per day for each Kitty Gordon production.

The Rialto Theatre, it is said, played Dustin Farnum in the Light of Western Stars to capacity business, as was also the case with Kitty Gordon in Adele—The Nurse's Story. Each of these productions was played for four days. This was not in accordance with the Rialto contract, but was allowed by United in order that the Rialto Theatre might be thoroughly convinced of the drawing power of United productions.

On March 29, United reports, Mr. Frankel called at the home office of United and signed a new stock franchise contract. Mr. Frankel allowed that he was paying United less rental than he was paying other companies, whose productions have not proved as successful financially to him. On behalf of his company, United asserts, Mr. Frankel purchased two additional shares of United stock and under the new contract the Rialto is entitled to play each United production four days. Although Mr. Frankel's classification with United was raised under the new contract from 1-20 to 1-17 of 1 per cent, so well satisfied, it is said, is Mr. Frankel with released United productions and so confident of United's success that on behalf of his company he is stated to have thanked United for the opportunity of securing the two additional shares of United stock.

"I consider this franchise the most valuable one our company has ever obtained," Mr. Frankel is reported to have said upon signing his new contract.

United's classification of rentals, made, it is said, after careful analysis of generally prevailing rentals throughout the country, is based upon the calculation that 2,300 theatres suffice in rentals to pay the total cost of a United production. On March 29 the number of theatres contracted, United asserts, was 2,195.

Announces Mitchell Lewis Feature

Another big seven reel Mitchell Lewis picture for state right buyers has been announced by President W. E. Shallenberger of the Arrow Film Corporation. As yet the title for this picture has not been decided upon. The working title was "Glittering Gold," which title may be retained.

The story deals with two partners who are mining for gold and who, after many years of toil, strike "pay dirt." It is a big story handled in a big way. Laurence Trimble directed and adapted the story from a story by M. A. Miller.

Most of the scene wsere taken in the Cascade Mountains, near Spokane, Washington.

Chester Man in Peru

One of the Outing-Chester cameramen is in South America. W. O. Runcie cabled the home offices in New York that he had arrived in Lima, Peru.

He is headed for new camera country, and carrying film enough to serve him through a long campaign far from transportation connections with New York.

"Elmo, the Mighty," New Serial

Universal Announces Permanent Title of Forthcoming Serial, Starring Elmo Lincoln

THE new Universal serial starring Elmo Lincoln will be released in July to follow the current Marie Walcamp serial, "The Red Glove."

"Elmo, the Mighty," is the permanent title selected for the new serial, and it features not only Elmo Lincoln, but also Grace Cunard.

Mr. Lincoln is well known because of his portrayals of the "Two-Sword Man," in D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "Intolerance," as the blacksmith of Louvain in "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" and as Tarzan in "Tarzan of the Apes" and "The Romance of Tarzan." Mr. Lincoln is often termed the American Maciste, because of his great strength and physique.

In the new Universal serial Mr. Lincoln is said to not only display his great strength to the best advantage, but to do some dramatic acting, the like of which has never been seen on the screen before. He is cast as Capt. Howard Armstrong, a forest ranger.

Miss Cunard has been starred in a number of successful serials and features. She was featured in "The Broken Coin," "Peg o' the Ring," "The Purple Mask," and was recently seen in a Universal Special attraction, "After the War."

In "Elmo, the Mighty," Miss Cunard is cast as Lucile Gray, Capt. Armstrong's sweetheart. Prominent in support of the stars of the serial are such well-known screen players as Ivor McFadden, who is seen as Rawden; Frederick Starr, cast as Steve Blighton; Rex De Roselli, as Granville Sear; Virginia Craft, as Mrs. Armstrong; Chai Hong is seen as Wong, a Chinese servant; W. A. Orlamond, as Richard Gray. Madge Hunt and James Cole also have prominent parts in the production.

Henry McRae, former studios manager at Universal City, has directed the new serial, and the film story has been adapted from an idea developed by Joe Brandt and Julius Stern.

Many of the scenes for the new serial were photographed in the heavily-wooded mountain regions of Northeastern California.

Work of producing a majority of the episodes of the serial has been completed, and Director McRae hopes to have the production entirely finished several weeks prior to release date. To aid in the exploitation of the serial, the Universal publicity and advertising forces are working overtime on a special campaign book and advertising campaign for the benefit of exhibitors, and it is expected that a newspaper publicity campaign will also be launched shortly to acquaint the public with the serial.

More States Sold on "Tempest and Sunshine"

RALPH WETSTEIN, of the Mid-West Features Exchange at Milwaukee, has bought the Wisconsin rights on "Tempest and Sunshine," the J Frank Hatch screen adaption of Mary J. Holmes' novel, in six reels.

Missouri and Kansas rights on the production have just been sold to Richards and Flynn, of Kansas City. It is reported that Rubin and Finkelstein, who own a chain of houses in the Twin Cities, are negotiating for the Minnesota rights.

J. Frank Hatch, with headquarters and theatres in Newark, and operating an exchange there as well as in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cleveland and Cincinnati, is the owner of the negative and World rights on "Tempest and Sunshine," and can be reached in New York City at 912 Longacre Building.

More than half of the territory has now been sold, as it went very quick after many of the big Eastern circuits booked it at first sight. Mr. Hatch states that the Stanley Circuit of Philadelphia took the first hundred days, and that in rapid succession the following circuits booked the production; Chamberlain, Comerford and Jack Meyers.

"Mary J. Holmes is the author of more than twenty novels that have attained a tremendous circulation," declared Mr. Hatch. "I firmly believe that nearly half the population of the United States has either read the book or seen the play.

"The very title, 'Tempest and Sunshine,' is warranted to bring them into the theatre, and the film is truly an excellent production of real merit with a real cast."

For special exploitation, a striking press sheet containing innumerable aids for the exhibitors, has been prepared.

Doo-Lee Film Gets West

All rights in the State of New York north of Albany for the Billy West Comedies have been acquired by the Doo-Lee Film Company, Inc., of Syracuse.

'Modern Husbands' Comes from Exhibitors' Mutual

A social drama with an atmosphere that savors of modernism has been produced by the National Film Corporation with Henry B. Walthall in the leading role, under the title of "Modern Husbands," for release by Robertson-Cole Co. through Exhibitors Mutual.

"Modern Husbands" is said to get far away from the path followed by Walthall's present starring film, "The Long Lane's Turning," being purely a domestic drama in which the lives of two couples are linked by the inconsistencies of the husbands and the "oversights" of the wives.

The lounge lizard, who once more is regaining the lofty position he attained in society before the draft came and carried him off receives a scathing denunciation in "Modern Husbands."

Clare DuBrey and Ethel Fleming have been accorded the roles of the wives.

Metro Feature Will Show "Mother Goose Ball"

What is described as one of the decidedly novel and spectacular incidents in Hale Hamilton's new starring vehicle, "After His Own Heart," now being produced at the Metro studios at Hollywood, is a "Mother Goose Ball," showing society at play.

In staging this big scene, Maxwell Karger, Director General, who is personally supervising the work of Harry L. Franklin, Hamilton's director, enlisted the services of more than three hundred extra people.

Olive Thomas Release

"The Follies Girl" is announced as Triangle's special release for the week of April 27. This is the second of the 1919 series of four special productions of this organization presenting Olive Thomas, the first of the series, "Toton," having been released March 30.

Mae Murray in "What Am I Bid?"

IF you have booked this picture, you want to place your main reliance on the heart appeal and the charm of the role in which Mae Murray appears. The title and the auction block idea supply a good punch to get the eye, but we would go very much further into it than that for the attempted sale of the orphan is only an incident that helps toward the climax.

This is a story of the North Woods, but it is unfortunate that most of the stories which are laid there deal with mining camps, dance halls and bloody fights. This is an impression that is to distinctly be avoided here, for there are just the opposite elements working to make this picture liked by your audiences. True, there is a fight, but this, again, is incidental to the grip on the heart.

There is a strong vein of comedy running through the picture and this should be brought out in your selling talks, while the illustrations should be largely those cf Miss Murray wearing the boyish costume in which she appears throughout the picture. Then proceed to sell the character that she plays, by making it so appealing that all will want to see her. Call Miss Murray:

"The spring violet of the North Woods."

ALL the charm of the story should be carried into the advertising and you should get into the spirit of it before you try to write your displays: Betty Yarnell is known to the people of the village on the Lake of Healing Waters as "that brat of the Yarnells." Her father had been the schoolmaster in the village until drink ruined him and now he has returned to a cabin along the river, no ambition left but to consume liquor. Although he is the father in little more than name his being alive saves her from the queer custom of the country which says that all orphans must be sold on the auction block to prevent them becoming a charge to the community.

So "the brat" is budding into young womanhood as the story opens, a half wild creature but with a strong motherly instinct as the care of her sodden father whom she rescues from the village saloon time and again and another incident shows. On one of her trips through the woods she encounters a shepherder who is about to kill a lamb that has been injured. She begs for it and then flags the "Betsy Ann" an old-fashioned lumber train, taking a seat on the cowcatcher with her lamb in her arms. "My lamb is sick and I gotta git it home or it'll die," she tells the astonished engineer.

ABNER GRIMP runs the village store and sells liquor there which he obtains through unlawful training and it is there that the brat goes to bring her father home. Grimp looks with covetous eyes on the girl who is beautiful in her ragged garb, but she repulses him and drags her father to the boat to row him home.

But here we see Gimp laying the plot to obtain possession of the girl by getting her father further in debt to him for liquor and then forcing him to sign a paper turning the girl over to the whiskey dealer's guardianship. In the meantime, once more at home the old man, in order to be able to get liquor pretends to have a fit and the girl consults the handy almanac which prescribes liquor as a cure in such cases. So she gets the jug and hastens to Grimp for liquor.

In the meantime The Stranger has arrived in the little community and when Grimp demands a kiss for the liquor and is repulsed the stranger interferes and pays for the liquor and then starts to escort her home. As he stands with his hat in his hand, she asks:

"What d'ye hold your hat fer. This ain't no church."

They become friends and gradually The Stranger teaches her that young ladies don't swear. "I ain't no lady—I'm a scum" she says at first, but she begins to learn.

GRIMP finally induces the old man by tempting him with liquor to sign the guardianship of the girl to him and then one day while the old man is drunk in his cabin the whiskey seller and his Indian whiskey runner come to claim the girl. But The Stranger appears and there is a terrible fight in which The Stranger is badly hurt, though the girl drives the pair away with a rifle, but not before Grimp has discovered a badge which proclaims that The Stranger is a revenue agent seeking the illicit whiskey sellers. Yarnell accompanies the pair in their flight and later dies as the result of his drinking.

Day after day "that brat of the Yarnells" watches over The Stranger, but he is growing weaker all the time until she discovers in the almanac that lamb broth

At the left, "That Brat of the Yarnells" in the grip of Grimp, the liquor dealer, in the center, a convincing pose of Miss Murray. and at left she and her sweetheart confront his father and former fiance is the most nourishing thing for invalids. Until The Stranger came the lamb had been the only thing she had really loved, but now she does not hesitate to make the sacrifice. From that time he begins to gain strength.

At the left, scene after the girl had buried the wool of the lamb, and in the center the girl and the young revenue agent. Either of these will make good displays for advertisement or use in the news columns. At the right, scene when she finds her father in the saloon.

But in the meantime the father of Ralph McGibbon (The Stranger) has become alarmed because of failure to hear from him and with Ralph's fiancee comes to seek him. On the same train arrive two other men. Presence of Ralph at the home of the girl has become a scandal in the little village and there the elder McGibbon is told of the case, but in far from truthful words.

CONFRONTED with his father and his fiancee, Ralph refuses to give up the brat, and even when the fiance turns to the girl with "Do you realize that he and I are to be married?" she answers with "Aw, you're foolin' me." Ralph declares that at last he has learned the meaning of true love, but he does consent to go with the father and former fiance to their hotel and it is while they are gone that the villagers sieze the brat, now an orphan and take her to the auction block.

The sheriff is asking for bids when Grimp reaches the scene and producing the paper signed by old Yarnell claims that the girl is already his property. This the sheriff is forced to admit and Grimp is about to carry her off when Ralph appears. There follows a fight, with the companions of Grimp taking a hand, but the two strangers who had come on the same train with the elder McGibbon turn up just in time. They are deputies sent to aid Ralph in rounding up the gang and then and there they make their prisoners.

Ralph turns to the girl and tells her that they are going to be married.

"Your wife? Well, I be —— I mean durned," she replies and that's the end.

HERE is a case where a large and striking cut of the star or a scene from the picture will count for a lot. There is one scene that shows the girl on the auction block and this will get attention though as a general rule it is better not to have too many figures in an advertising cut, especially if a halftone is being used.

There is one that shows the girl beside the grave where she has buried the lamb's wool and a little further on we are giving you a selling talk that will go well with this one. There is another that shows the figure of Miss Murray as if in prayer, another of her with her sweetheart and a third in the grasp of Grimp. These carry the simplicity of the story and the heart interest in Miss Murray's expressions and they are bound to get attention.

Now in preparing the advertising keep the title of this picture the most prominent thing aside from the cut. It is worth featuring even above the name of the star, but we would advise against simply making this a mystery story with the old question mark idea carried out in the newspapers. That is all right for your lobby or stunt displays, but not where you are actually talking to the public. And this is a case where you can talk with good effect.

Let's get right into the heart of it:

"'Brat of the Yarnells' they called her. Shunned by every one except a drunken father, she had never known love for any living thing except a pet lamb that she had cured. Then there came the Stranger into her life and she was called upon to make her supreme sacrifice—to kill the lamb that The Stranger might live. Love has rarely known a greater sacrifice than that of this little girl of the North Woods. We know you'll love her just as much as the stranger to.

"'I ain't no lady,' exclaimed That Brat of the Yarnells, 'I'm a scum.' And she had been told that so often she believed it. There was none to love her and so she lavished her affections on her pet lamb until there came a man into her life. He was the first human being who has ever spoken kindly to her.

"To her drunken father she was only a convenience to carry him home and prepare his meals. But the trader in illicit liquor looked upon her with eyes of desire. He drugged the father with liquor until he bonded the girl to him. But The Stranger was yet to be counted on, and though the whiskey traders left him for dead they fled in fear—they had learned his secret.

"Then the father died and by custom of the country the orphan was put upon the block. The liquor trader claimed her and his claim was held good—until—but that is something you should find out for yourself."

OF course the auction idea ought to be brought into the story, but not to the sational point. Here are some that touch more on that angle:

"A month before she wouldn't have cared, for there was no one to love her. Now her father was dead and, according to the custom of the country, orphans were placed on the auction block and bonded to the highest bidder. So this beautiful little girl in her tattered male attire heard the sheriff cry, 'What am I bid?'

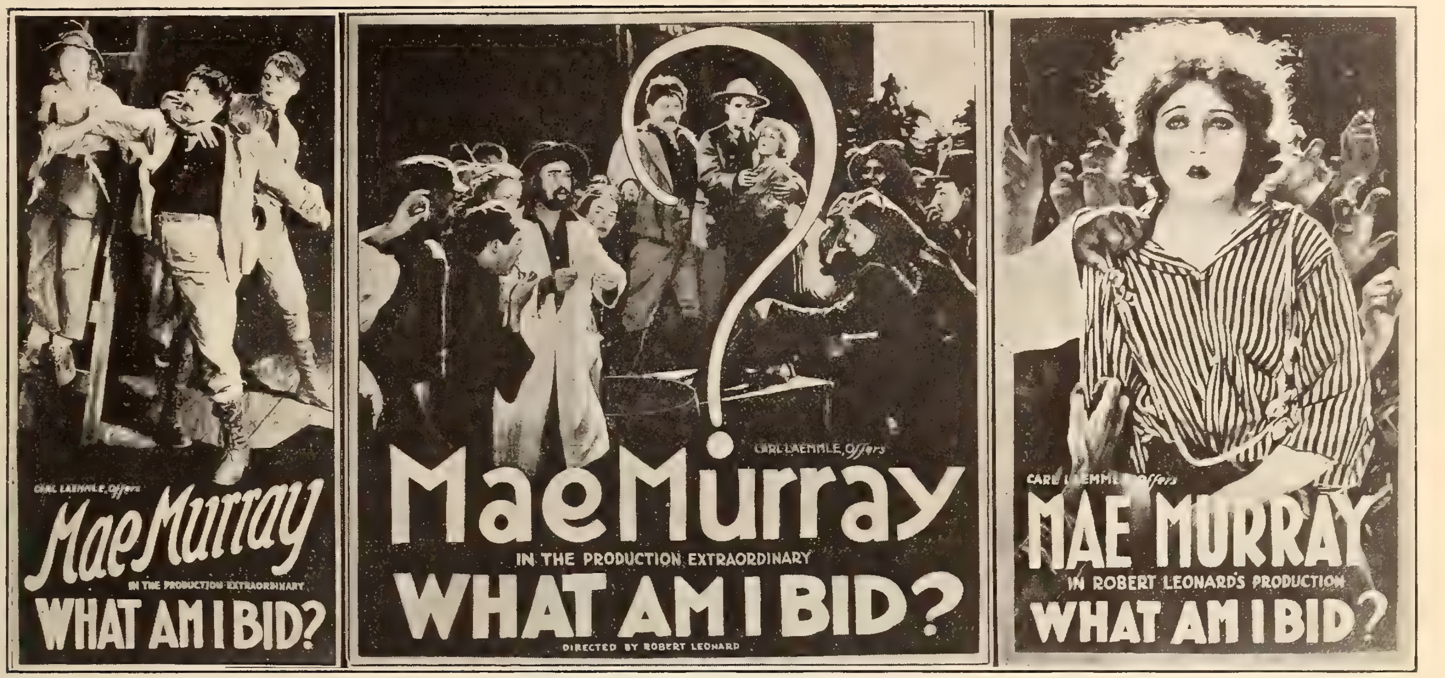
"Here and there men and women made offers, but suddenly the sale halted, for the saloon keeper appeared with a paper to show that he had bought the girl from her father—for liquor. Under the law he had a right to her. But there was another law and it was invoked—and there was love—but you ought to see it for yourself.

"She was an orphan. And the law of the North Woods compelled that she be placed on the auction block to be sold to the highest bidder. Calmly she faced the villagers who had scorned her and heard their bids.

"Then appeared the villain, the illicit liquor dealer, and he had a paper that showed her father had sold her to this man that he might satisfy his craving. It was the law that she belonged to him—she shrank as she thought of her fate.

"But she had not sacrificed in vain the life of her pet lamb to save a stranger. Who he proved to be and how he saved her add the mystery to this beautiful love story of the great outdoors."

For your cuts it would be a good idea, where such will fit, to use expressions like "The Brat" uses in her conversation—the language of an ignorant little girl of the mountains, not really bad, but simply ignorant. That will give something of a humorous touch to the display, though these captions should be in small type and not conflict with the remainder of the display.



Mystery idea is kept dominant in these three, six and one sheets. Elsewhere we have made suggestions for cut-outs for the lobby displays

Auction Played in Lobbies on the Crowded Streets

WHILE the attractive title offers an opportunity for a teaser campaign by simply printing the question, "What Am I Bid?" in small space in the newspapers, we would much prefer to conserve those expenditures and put the money in larger and more striking advertising along the lines that we have suggested.

But you can work some stunts in the lobby that will attract attention. There is a figure of Miss Murray on one of the three sheets and then a huge question mark encircling her. Similarly a six sheet sheet shows the full auction block scheme. We would suggest that in advance of the showing you use cut-outs of the smaller paper, with simply the title of the picture on it. They will arouse curiosity, and although of course many will recognize the picture of Miss Murray, there will be many questions as to who she is.

These should be retained through the display on the showing of the picture. If you have been preserving your pictures of this star, you have a fine chance to make some attractive panels by mounting those pictures and then adding the title of the picture. Never fail to use the face of a beautiful star to the greatest extent possible, and here you have a big opportunity.

IF you are located in a section where there is a large passing population, you can stop the people in front of your theatre by hanging out an auctioneer's flag. You know that this is a red flag, and because red flags are not popular these days, you should be sure that there is worked in on it in white letters "Auction Sale Today." Then place your figures of Miss Murray with the title out where they will catch the eye of the people when they stop. You can go still further and have the old time bell ringer in front of your place, and this will certainly give the atmosphere.

MAE MURRAY
"WHAT AM I BID."

Striking pose of the star for use in advertising

But we would confine the advertising of this "auction" strictly to the front of the theatre. It is all legitimate enough to pull a thing like that when the public "gets next" right away, but we wouldn't advise bringing them from all parts of the city with fake handbills advertising such a stunt.

IF you are showing a full program, we would advise you to omit a scene with this one, for practically all the views are out of doors and the photography is particularly beautiful. Other out-door stuff on the same bill will only result in the audience failing to get the full appreciation of this picture.

There are laughs in "What Am I Bid?" but there should be comedy to give balance to the bill, and a lively one at that.

Here is another picture that should be presented with a song preceding it, and if you can put on a special stage setting, so much the better. A scene showing a garden or roses is always appropriate, and it is one that you can use over and over again. But it would be very effective here to use a scene with the woodland in the distance and a flowing river at the right of the stage with the light of the moon on it.

If you are using a man singer, "Girl O'Mine" would be an excellent selection, and in that case it might be carried into the picture as the theme. If you have a woman singer, and we believe that we would prefer one here, "Kiss Me Again," from "Mlle. Modiste"; "I Love You," from "Gloriana"; or "Love Here is My Heart."

In preparing the musical cue for this picture, James C. Bradford, musical dircetor of the Broadway theatre, used "Underneath the Skies" as the theme, with a second repeated air for the girl with Borch's "Caprice Annette." If "Kiss Me Again" is used as the song, it might take the plac of the caprice, or either of the other songs would substitute for the theme.

IT is getting to be the time of the year that flowers around your theatre add a dainty and appreciated touch, and it will help the people to start talking about your house to use them in connection with this picture, which has the elements of love and girlish purity so strongly emphasized

You should make an especial appeal to your women patrons for matinee business here. You can count on the title to arouse the curiosity of the men, but if you send out a special mailing list, address the letter to the women of the household. Play the love element strong.

This is the season for it.

Billy Parsons Announces Big Plans

"Smiling Bill" Parsons

THE cut to the right is a character photo of "Smiling Billy" Parsons, but it is also a true-to-life photograph of the Billy Parsons who has closed numerous big contracts for National Film Company in the two weeks he has been in New York.

The contracts call for a strenuous producing campaign on the part of National during the coming year. It would also appear that the National trade-mark would be seen in the output of many different distributing organizations for Parsons has not limited his plans in any degree.

Four big specials of a class to compare in box-office value with the production that marked National's debut in film ranks, "Tarzan of the Apes," will be produced under the terms of a contract with the Pioneer Film Corporation.

That is one contract big enough for almost any film organization. But it is only part of the National plan. Another item on the schedule is the production of not less than four nor more than six big productions featuring Billy Rhodes, the comedienne, who stepped from one-reel comedies to featured stardom.

Definite release plans for these productions have been formed, but will not be ready for annouuncement for a few weeks. It can be said, however, that they will be released in conjunction with some of the most important product of the coming year and under the banner of a releasing organization that is stepping forward at a lively pace.

As previously announced, Mr. Parsons has also renewed his contract with the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation for the handling of another year's output of the Capitol Comedies. But in addition to Billy Parsons these releases will also bring to the Goldwyn exchanges the former vaudeville light, Carter De Haven. It is expected that the individual value of this next year's outpuut will be greatly increased through the fact that Billy Parsons will have to supply only thirteen of the twenty-six Capitols planned, Carter De Haven being featured in the other thirteen. The proper time and facilities will, therefore, be available to each of the comedians on these productions.

Prominent in the Parsons comedy plans is another promising box-office proposition, The Hallroom Boys' Series, for the newspaper comics of that name. Mr. Parsons closed contracts for the rights to this feature soon after his arrival in New York.

The Billy Rhodes company is now on the way East to make two of the scheduled productions in this section. Billy Parsons will also star the new Capitols here, with the intention of adding new settings and atmosphere to the releases. Coney Island, Atlantic City, Washington and such locations will be the background for many of the coming comedies.

W. H. Productions Present Series of Reissues

THE great demand in the state right market for reissues of famous stars and stories and the brilliant prospects this field of the motion picture industry offers, is reflected in a statement issued this week by the W. H. Productions Co. This concern entered the state rights field with one object—to offer the best reissues obtainable that carried the favorite stars, and by carrying out this purpose it has popularized itself in its chosen field.

The W. H. Productions Co. has practically made the "reissue" what it is through its discrimination in selecting the most suitable material for disposal. It has concentrated upon short subjects—one, two, and three reelers, with comedies taking their place with dramatic pieces.

"Mickey," starring Mabel Normand, is one of the concern's feature length pictures and is said to have broken records and established a precedent for box-office receipts in the state rights territory. From a popular viewpoint, "Mickey" is one of Miss Normand's best offerings as it presents her in a sympathetic role. It is a heart interest story.

The W. H. Productions Co. announce this week that its present exploitation plan involves the presentation of a new series of reissues. In the list are two William S. Hart pictures of two reels each, "His Hour of Manhood," and "Jim Cameron's Wife"; the Thomas H. Ince three reel drama, "Custer's Last Fight," considered by many the best picture of that length ever made. A new series of Fatty Arbuckle reissues will also be offered, of which the first is a two-reeler and the succeeding subjects, one-reelers. These pictures are to be presented under their original titles.

Gets Big Campaign

Vitagraph's next Anita Stewart production, "Two Women," is being made the subject of an intensive campaign to exhibitors by Vitagraph's Sales Promotion Department.

The first Anita Stewart production, "From Headquarters," is said to be scoring all over the country and the Anita Stewart productions being put out by Vitagraph loom up as of prime importance in Vitagraph's plans.

Work Starts on Hale-Caprice Story

Work has been started at the Capellani Studio in Fort Lee on the second of the Creighton Hale-June Caprice series of features being produced by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., for release through the Pathe Exchange, Inc. "Oh Boy," the first of the series, has been completed under the personal direction of Albert Capellani. In line with the previously announced arrangements whereby Mr. Capellani and George Archainbaud will alternate in the direction of the Caprice-Hale and Dolores Cassinelli Productions, Mr. Archainbaud, long identified with the World program, will direct the feature just started.

The picture is adapted from a French stage play, the name of which is being withheld for the present. Comedy is the predominant note in the new Capellani Production.

Pathe Has Trailer for "The Tiger's Trail"

Exhibitors showing "The Tiger's Trail," Pathe's new serial in which Ruth Roland is starred and which is released April 20, Pathe Exchange, Inc., will be aided by a 250-foot trailer for insertion at any point in a house program where it can be brought before the eyes of the greatest number of fans.

In preparing the trailer every effort was made to include in it scenes from the big, smashing moments of the serial. Scenes were selected with special attention to depicting the atmosphere of mystery and danger with which Gilson Willets has surrounded his thrilling story.

Gale Henry at Loew's

"Stung" is the title of Gale Henry's latest two-reel comedy, and it is declared that the audiences at Loew's New York theatre were completely captivated, and that this stamped Miss Henry's return to film comedies as one of the most welcome innovations of 1919.

Marcus Loew and his staff have praised the new Bull's-Eye releases, featuring Gale Henry on other occasions also, it is stated.

Smith Names Plans for Big Expansion

President of Vitagraph Visits West Coast and Tells How His Organization Grew Into the Industry—Only Pioneer to Survive the Struggle

ALBERT E. SMITH, President of the Vitagraph Company, the only pioneer motion picture company still extant, arrived in Los Angeles recently, but his coming was so quietly accomplished that his presence remained a secret for a number of days, when representatives of the press discovered him at the Vitagraph studio on Talmadge street.

Of the small group that originated the motion picture industry and developed the art of subtle, eloquent pantomine, Albert E. Smith and the Vitagraph Company alone have remained continuously in the business; and as the head of the only company that has been through twenty-two years of evolution, his summary of the past and predictions for the future hold particular interest and significance.

The Vitagraph Company was organized in March, 1897, just twenty-two years ago, and "Never in all that time has the outlook been brighter than it is today," said Mr. Smith.

Possibilities Unlimited

"The 'revolution' that has occurred in the industry within the past few months has removed the limit from the possibilities of the picture theatres—the faulty system of using a strong star to support weaker associates has been changed, and with the theatres free to book such pictures as they want without the necessity of taking pictures they don't want, patrons will be given constant satisfaction and with the public satisfied, the production of motion picture plays will rise to undreamed of artistic heights."

Speaking of the history of the motion picture business, Mr. Smith told how that the first companies to make motion pictures started business, not as producers of plays in picture form, but as manufacturers of machines that projected pictures of moving objects. The pictures that were first shown were of such simple things as a horse moving its head; a train in motion, a man swinging Indian clubs and a sensation was created when the first picture was exhibited by the Vitagraph Company, showing a house actually on fire.

"The Vitagraph Company," said Mr. Smith, "was incorporated to manufacture a machine that I invented called the 'Vitagraph' and as there was no market for a motion picture projecting machine at that time, we made the necessary films and gave exhibitions wherever we could get an audience. We made the cameras to take the pictures, the machines to project them, we acted the parts ourselves and were our own exhibitors.

"It was all hard work for a long time, principally because there were no regular places in which to show the 'novelty' but there was never any doubt of the ultimate success of the new form of amusement we were offering.

"The first big step forward was made when the vaudeville theatres gave the motion picture machine a place on their programs as a regular attraction and advertised the number according to the machine they installed such as, 'The Vitagraph,' 'The Biograph,' etc.

"This was a great victory for the pioneers and realizing the important bearing it would have on the future of our business, we exerted every effort to keep these theatres supplied with interesting film. That was the most important factor in the business then, just as it is the supreme requisite of the business today, and it required so much attention that finally the manufacture of machines was abandoned and we devoted our entire attention to advancing the art of the pictures themselves.

Stars Vitagraph Pupils

"From that time on, Vitagraph directed its energies to perfecting the motion picture play. We secured the services of experienced actors and actresses and taught new talent the technique of the silent drama and it is an interesting fact that four-fifths of the purely screen stars of today, received their first training in the Vitagraph studio. Among the most promising of the present day screen stars, Norma Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Mabel Normand, Edith Storey and Anita Stewart were first introduced on the screen by the Vitagraph.

"In addition to perfecting the plays we turned our attention to the matter of presenting features in more attractive style and long before the Strand theatre, the first great edifice dedicated to the presentation of picture plays, was opened in New York City, we engaged the Criterion Theatre on Broadway, New York, and changing its name to the Vitagraph Theatre, presented our features ourselves thus introducing the showing of motion pictures in appropriate artistic stage settings.

Director Tom Terris, Showing Alice Joyce About a Scene in the Vitagraph Picture, "The Cambric Mask"

"The innovation created a furore and capitalists from all sections of the United States made propositions for the establishment of a chain of Vitagraph theatres. The exhibitors of New York City, fearing that we were about to trespass on their field, held a meeting and waited upon me in a body. They advanced the argument that, having been our patrons for many years, they felt it would be unfair for Vitagraph to enter the exhibiting field and as we realized the justice of their claim, we rejected the chain of theatres proposition. The Vitagraph theatre was continued in operation for some time however, as a model for the American exhibitor to copy.

Cooperation Necessary

"It was the struggle in the early days of the industry that taught me the value of studying the public wants and cooperating with the exhibitor," continued Mr. Smith. "This cooperation must be of the practical kind. It should start at the box office and take the basic form of giving the exhibitor only such pictures as the public will patronize in full strength. No other consideration should be allowed to interfere with this rule, the soundness of which has been again proved by recent experiments.

"These experiments have now come to an end and pictures will hereafter be shown on the 'booking by merit' policy. This change had to come, else the entire industry, producers and exhibitors alike, would have gone down in ruin. To one who has studied the business since its inception, the ultimate result of the recent experiment was always plain: the answer was to be found with the public. The public will readily buy what it wants and will pay well for it, but you cannot force upon the public anything it doesn't want without courting ruin.

"The motion picture business was born of public favor. It has been nurtured by the nickles and dimes and quarters of the public and it can continue to exist only by public approval. The thousands of dollars that have been turned from the doors of the motion picture theatres through dissatisfaction, never have been and never could be made up on 'the big nights' when 'strong' attractions have been shown, and all of us have suffered as a result.

"The public has suffered because the class of pictures it wanted and was willing to patronize was not presented. The exhibitor has suffered because his house was not large enough on the big nights, to make up the loss of his weak nights and the producer of meritorious features has suffered because the exhibitors average profits were small and booking conditions prevented the presentation of other strong features.

Foremost Industry Predicted

"In the readjustment of conditions I expect to see motion pictures take first place among American industries," continued Mr. Smith, "and anticipating this, we have been steadily increasing our plan and strengthening our organization. At the present time we have more of our old players with us than at any time since the days of the Vitagraph Stock Company in 1915. Among the well known players that are again appearing in Vitagraph productions are: Gladden James, Anders Randolf, Maurice Costello, J. Rogers Lytton, Kate Price and Antonio Moreno who was absent from our forces for a short time. Among the noted directors who have rejoined our organization may be mentioned James Young and Ralph Ince, two men whose mastery of art has raised them to places of distinction."

Indications of oil have been discovered on the property occupied by the Vitagraph studio and a big offer made for the land has been refused by Mr. Smith. "I consider the making and distribution of pictures along the lines we have pursued, more important than production of oil," said Mr. Smith, "and instead of oil wells you will soon see many additional buildings on our property devoted to the making of Vitagraph productions."

In speaking of the producing plans of his company, Mr. Smith stated that a vase store of material was being accumulated, and as an illustration of the big stories that will be picturized during the year he mentioned Charles Klein's wonderful play, "The Third Degree," Robert W. Chambers' story, "The Cambric Mask," "The Wolf," "The Climbers," "The Sporting Duchess," "The Gamblers," "The Great Divide," and a score of other famous stories, stage plays and original scripts.

Mr. Smith's visit to Los Angeles is a combination of business and pleasure, and his plans call for the starting of vast improvements and additions in the company's studio here. New outdoor stages will be built and the enclosed studio space will be increased to double the present area. Additional dressing rooms will be added to increase the present accommodations and the laboratories enlarged to twice their present capacity.

Carey Postpones Work to Visit Fans

Universal Film Manufacturing Company this week announced that Harry Carey's activities on his next Universal production will be set back one week because of a change in the itinerary of the star's tour around the country which is now in progress. Carey's original tour did not include Detroit and Cleveland, but the route was changed to include them. Immediately after the Cleveland appearance, Mr. Carey started for Universal City.

Immediately upon arrival at the Pacific Coast producing center he will begin work on a new story adapted from a magazine story by Jackson Gregory entitled "A Man of Peace" put into scenario form by H. Tipton Peck. Mr. Peck provided Mr. Carey with his last subject, "The Outcast of Poker Flat," making the screen adaptation from several O. Henry stories.

Twelve Hundred with Nazimova

"The Red Lantern," Not Only Has Tremendous Cast, But Cost $250,000 to Produce, Declare Metro Officials

A QUARTER of a million dollars expenditure, costumes worth a king's ransom and the services of 1,200 persons, from director, scenario writers and art designers to an ensemble that embodied a small army in size is said to represent but a part of the tremendous outlay in money, time and effort given by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger to the production of "The Red Lantern," in which they present the incomparable Nazimova.

This Nazimova superfeature in seven parts, which Mr. Rowland has announced will be released during the present month, is to be distributed exclusively by Metro Pictures Corporation. Its sponsors, in the confident belief that it is a work of art destined to advance the standards of motion picture making by twenty-five years, have launched a nation-wide advertising and publicity campaign to insure exhibitors of "The Red Lantern" the ultimate in box-office returns.

"The Red Lantern" is described as truly colossal when it is judged by the combination of the supreme artistry of its brilliant star and by the sumptuous environment provided for her and her supporting cast.

It is declared to have the added value of being based upon one of the most talked of novels of the decade, "The Red Lantern," a romance of the ancient city of Pekin, from the pen of Edith Wherry, and published by the Bodley Head.

According to announcement, it was her admiration for the art of Nazimova that caused Miss Wherry (in private life the wife of Dr. Harold S. Muckleston, a Montreal physician) to offer her novel to the great Russian actress for use on the screen.

Here Nazimova is seen before a special set in "The Red Lantern," her masterpiece production

Prior to its acceptance by Nazimova, Miss Wherry had refused to permit the use of "The Red Lantern" as material for the silent drama, although approached on the subject a number of times by various picture producers.

Miss Wherry, the daughter of a Presbyterian missionary, spent her girlhood in Pekin, and was present during the enactment of many of the stirring scenes she depicted in her novel.

The total cost of producing "The Red Lantern" was declared to be in round figures, $250,000. The time required to make it was three months; eight weeks in actual production and four weeks devoted to elaborate research work carried out by June Mathis and Albert Capellani, who made the screen adaptation and scenario.

Singer in Two-Reel Special Picture

The Stage Women's War Relief this week announced that Mme. Amelite Galli-Curci, the singer, will be presented in a special two-reel picture being produced for distribution through Universal exchanges in the near future.

It is made known that Mme. Galli-Curci is to appear in several scenes from a play written especially for the Stage Women's series and given the working title of "Littlest Reason." She plays the part of an opera singer and according to Director Terwilliger who is producing the Bonstelle story, Mme. Galli-Curci photographs remarkably well and proved to be one of the most enthusiastic film actresses he has ever directed. The Bonstelle subject, it is expected, will be given its first public presentation within a few weeks at a benefit performance given by the Stage Women's War Relief.

Zion Makes Plans for Future

So much interest has centered in the initial Sholom Aleichem production, "Khavah," which is now being cut and assembled for an early showing by Charles E. Davenport, the director, that the Zion Films, Inc., are making pretentious plans for the future. This will include a series of Jewish and Russian pictures written by some of the biggest writers in the land once controlled by the Czars.

Some of the stories have already been selected and it is predicted by those who have seen these narratives in scenario form that they will create quite a sensation in the film world. Most of the stories are elaborate and deal with historical events and backed by tense dramatic moments will set a newer and higher standard for popular production companies to aim at.

Louis Bennison Climbs in Exhibitor Favor

REPORTS on advance trade showings for exhibitors and unusually commendatory trade journal and newspaper reviews point to marked success, Goldwyn believes, for Louis Bennison's third star series picture, "Speedy Meade," written and directed by Ira M. Lowry and produced by the Betzwood Film Company in its big plant near Philadelphia. Trade paper and newspaper reviewers are unanimous in declaring that in this newest production the young and smiling cowboy star has the best opportunity of his screen career—and that he takes full advantage of them.

A few months ago, Louis Bennison, then fresh from the stage, made his first appearance before the camera in "Oh, Johnny." He has since been seen in only one picture, "Sandy Burke of the U-Bar-U," but in that brief period he has been placed on the books of the exhibitors of the nation not only as a money maker who can always be counted on to draw heavy patronage, but as a star who never disappoints.

Despite an unconscious camera shyness which afflicts all screen newcomers and which was apparent in spots in Bennison's work in his earlier pictures, he immediately won his way into the hearts of the motion picture public. Now, to use his own expression, the star has "broke and rode" the camera and has come to play master to it rather than slave.

Says Picture Was Well Received by Trade

Jacques Tyrol, secretary-treasurer of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., declares that, "The reception the critics and the trade in general accorded 'Your Wife and Mine' at the private showing in New York last week proves to my partner, Matthias Radin, and me that in this feature we have something of worth to state right buyers and exhibitors.

"We believe so strongly in 'Your Wife and Mine' that we have made it our policy to insist before selling it or booking it that the buyer or exhibitor see it first. We have no pig in a poke to sell; we have a real money-making feature, and we'll sell it on its merits or not at all."

3 Boxes 3 Varieties
Sent Parcels Post for $1.00

The burning of fragrant incense is an ancient Oriental custom which has become very popular in America.

In the home its fragrance suggests purity and luxury. In the apartment it dispels the odor of cooking. In the sick room it refreshens and soothes. People who travel find it delightful for creating a fragrant atmosphere in the strange room.

Its charm is fascinating. A stick a day keeps the blues away.

Its subtle, delicate aroma soothes and charms the senses.

Just clip out this advertisement and pin a dollar bill to it, or send only your name and address with $1.00 enclosed. We will send you by Parcel Post 3 Boxes; 3 Varieties—Egyptian Lotus, Arabian Spice, and Orange Flower. Do it now.

Arvid Gilstrom

Gillstrom Scheduled for Early Announcement

Rumor has it that Arvid E. Gillstrom will have important announcements to make within the next few weeks. It is known that the prominent director has been in numerous conferences during the past few weeks both with American producers and foreign film men with ambitious and unusual plans.

Arvid Gillstrom's screen career dates back to the early days, when he was associated with Kalem, Ford Sterling and then with the Mack Sennett Keystone forces. He earned his right to "sure-fire" honors in the Keystone school, associated with the directors who have made the history of screen comedy.

Later Gillstrom took up the task of producing Billy West comedies and is credited with the productions that brought that comedian to the forefront. His most recent work has been under the Fox banner producing the recent popular series of pictures featuring the Lee kids.

Among the Keystone productions credited to Gillstrom are "Hearts and Swords," "Their Social Splash" and "The Snow Cure." The Billy West's included "The Villain," "The Star Boarder" and "The Fly Cop." The Fox-Lee Kids features included "Smiles," "Swat the Spy" and "Tell It to the Marines."

Billy Burke Signs New Famous Players Contract

Billy Burke has signed a contract that will assure her continuance in Paramount Pictures, "by arrangement with F. Ziegfeld, Jr." Present plans are for her to start work on the new contract within a few weeks, two new screen vehicles adapted from popular Broadway hits being planned.

Miss Burke, who returned this week from Palm Beach vacation, will not be hindered in her stage appearances under the new contract. Her intentions are for an appearance in an all-star revival this Spring and in a new play this Fall under the Ziegfeld management.

"Unpardonable Sin" on Broadway

Garson and Neilan Production, Starring Blanche Sweet, Secures Big Broadway Theatre for New York Premiere

AFTER smashing all precedents by having its national premiere at Detroit, where more than twenty-five thousand dollars gross was taken in the first week, "The Unpardonable Sin" will start an all summer run in New York City beginning Friday night, May 2.

The sponsors fear no jinx because of selecting Friday as an opening day. They point out that this production proved that it was immune from jinx when it dared to open in any other city outside of New York or Los Angeles.

B. S. Moss, who has a string of theatres around New York, secured the Broadway theatre and states that he will have it repainted thoroughly both outside and inside and entirely redecorated. The ushers will be in uniform and a large symphony orchestra installed.

"The Unpardonable Sin" will be shown at advanced prices all season and on the opening night a gala occasion will be enlivened by the presence of prominent state and city officials, it is said. Blanche Sweet will be present the first night and is making the long trip from the West Coast for that purpose.

W. H. Rudolph, eastern representative for Harry Garson, has left for Chicago, where he will assist in the exploitation of the production, which opens at the Randolph there on Easter Sunday.

From Eugene Roth, of the big California theatre in San Francisco, a wire announces that his theatre was packed to capacity ever since the opening day, and after eulogizing Messrs. Garson and Neilan and Blanche Sweet, he pronounces "The Unpardonable Sin" a one hundred per cent. production.

Sol Lesser wires that with 2,700 capacity the big California theatre did not have a single seat to spare at any of the performances to date.

The production opened at the Kinema in Los Angeles April 13 for an extended run at $1.50 top. Cleveland, Boston and Pittsburgh will soon follow, it is reported. The Broad Street theatre at Newark schedules its opening on "The Unpardonable Sin" May 26.

Louis Mayer, of Boston, has purchased the New England rights for the picture, and it is stated that the entire world has all been sold within the few short weeks since its Detroit premiere, with the exception of the Southern and Mountain States, the Eastern Pennsylvania-Maryland-Delaware-D. C. district, and the Missouri-Kansas-Nebraska territory.

A record is claimed for this production in the rapid selling of territories for big specials.

Benjamin Friedman, of Minneapolis, who controls "The Whip," "The Spoilers" and other productions of like calibre, and who purchased "The Unpardonable Sin" for Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and the two Dakotas, declares that the advanced bookings of this production has outclassed all his past records, and that it will open in Minneapolis May 4 for a run at Finklestein and Rubin's New Lyric theatre and it will start another run in St. Paul at the New Liberty theatre on May 11.

Stuart Wants a Kick in His Electric Signs

LLOYD STUART, manager of the Old Mill Theatre, owned by E. H. Hulsey who controls the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Texas, wants a "kick" in his signs He thinks a good sign is just like a good newspaper headline. He thinks it should influence the theatregoer or the person who reads the sign to investigate further into the matter and, in other words, encourage him or her to buy a ticket and go inside.

"When I've got Mary Pickford or Charlie Chaplin on the inside of the house I don't hesitate to tell the folks outside just what a big feature I've got," said Mr. Stuart. "Mary Pickford, when she gets here in 'Daddy Longlegs' is going to be some attraction and it won't surprise me a bit to play Mary bigger than she's ever been played before. I'm not only going to proclaim her as the greatest motion picture actress in the world and as America's sweetheart, but I'm going to exploit 'Daddy Longlegs' just as much as I can. When Charlie Chaplin played here in 'Shoulder Arms' I billed him on the sign as the greatest comedian in the world. Also I had a line in the lights stating that it was his latest picture. I'm not exactly in favor of 'jazzing' signs but I am in favor of putting all the life they will stand in them. And this isn't any too much. Any time I can put a smile on the face of a theatre goer when he reads my sign I have half way sold him a ticket to the show. At least I've got him in a pleasant frame of mind, especially towards the theatre that made him smile and even if he hasn't got time at the moment he reads the sign to see the picture, he will at some other time drop around. And if a sign made him smile he'll probably tell some one else about the sign in order to make them laugh. We used to put the names of prominent people on our signs. This brought us into favor with the right class of people. We like this system."

Prince of Wales in Photoplay

The Weekly Dispatch, published in London, Eng., carries the information in a recent issue that the Prince of Wales spent more than an hour before the camera for scenes in "The Warrior Strain" and "The Power of the Right," which Harma and Company, Ltd., a British firm, is producing.

The newspaper makes it plain that the films are with a motive and that the motive is "patriotism." "Five years ago," said the paper, "even for patriotism, such a departure would have been unthinkable."

To Release "Topics" Each Week

Pathe Gets Behind Big Campaign to Boost Short Feature—Brunet Impressed with Its Originality

PATHE EXCHANGE, INC., announces that, beginning Sunday, May 4, it will release weekly the famous "Topics of the Day," selected from the press of the world by the Literary Digest. Negotiations have been in progress for several weeks and upon their completion was perfected what is estimated to be the broadest, biggest and one of the most minutely worked out campaigns of promotion and publicity ever shaped in the history of the motion picture industry. Mr. Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., considers it an epochal announcement in that it marks a great step forward in the achievement of the inspired vision of Mr. Charles Pathe, founder of the organization whose activities cover the entire earth.

"I am especially happy in making the announcement of Pathe releasing 'Topics of the Day'," says Mr. Brunet. "Impressed with the originality of the feature and the strength of its popular appeal, we have carefully watched the growth of it, its bookings in first run houses, the nature of its reception and the manner in which it 'went over.' These brightest shortsayings from newspapers of the world, selected by the editors of the Literary Digest and transcribed to the screen, immediately took a strong hold on public appreciation. Audiences were quick in their responses to the lively humor, keen satire and trenchant criticisms on the social, political and other foibles of the day. As an addition to our list of short subject releases, I believe this to be the very best that could be secured. The weekly release is of 350 feet length and I am of the firm opinion that 'Topics of the Day,' in conjunction with our serials, Pathe News, Pathe Review and the Lloyd comedies, gives us the most perfect short subject program on the screen today.

"Some of the big facts attending this feature in its weekly selection and its exploitation are as unusual as they are impressive. The best and brightest minds of the entire world contribute to it."

Easter Walters, in Pathe's New Serial, "The Tiger's Trail," Starring Ruth Roland

"Virtuous Men" Trade Show Well Attended

"VIRTUOUS MEN" was presented for the first time at the Fulton theatre on Sunday evening, April 6. This production, which stars E. K. Lincoln and was directed by Ralph Ince, is the initial feature bearing the brand name of S-L Pictures. The audience which witnessed the premiere of "Virtuous Men" consisted of the leading distributors, exchange men, stage right buyers and representatives of the daily press and motion picture trade papers. The Fulton Theatre was taxed to its capacity by the crowd which attended the trade showing. A twenty-piece orchestra under the direction of Carl Edouarde, leader of the Strand Symphony Orchestra, provided the musical setting for the presentation. Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin utilized the lobby of the Fulton Theatre for a display of the advertising matter which will accompany "Virtuous Men." The original poster sketches, as well as paintings of E. K. Lincoln by Clarence Underwood and R. G. Morgan attracted considerable attention. "The Picture Plus—," an original exploitation guide of sixteen pages containing an elaborate campaign for the use of the exhibitor in connection with his presentation of "Virtuous Men," was also favorably commented upon. Among the guests present at the premiere were the following:

J. D. Williams, General Manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Robert H. Libber, President of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Harry Schwalbe of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Louis J. Selznick, M. H. Hoffman, Frank Hall, Al Lichtman, Walter Green, Herman Jans, Harry Cohn, Irene Bordoni, Irving Berlin, Joseph Skirboll, J. Leonard Mason, James R. Pew, Mrs. E. K. Lincoln, Ralph Ince, Lucille Lee Stewart, Frank Gerston and many other figures well known in the theatrical profession and motion picture industry.

How We Advance!

It is reported that when an argument arose in the advertising department of W. W. Hodkinson recently over the proper use of a word to be incorporated in advertising copy, the argument was referred to Columbia University for settlement.

The decision was that both sides of the argument were right. The word could be used correctly as either side contended.

Thus do we advance!

"Tiger's Trail" Completed

The completion is announced for the fifteenth and final episode of the new Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, and the production is scheduled for release April 20.

Miss Roland is supported by George Larkin. The story is by Arthur B. Reeve, creator of the "Craig Kennedy" detective stories.

Avoids Sex Problem and Unreal Drama

In selecting the story for "The Turn in the Road," the Brentwood Feature, which is now being released by Robertson-Cole Co. through Exhibitors Mutual, the Brentwood officials reasoned that the public demand in pictures had undergone a very marked change during recent months. In place of unreal sex problems, sensationalism or spectacular effects, the Brentwood authorities felt there was a steadily increasing call for the real and true, both in comedy and in drama.

This reasoning seems borne out, it is announced, by the success which is greeting "The Turn in the Road" in every section of the United States. Though lacking in sensationalism, "The Turn in the Road" is a photoplay of bright humor, deep heart interest and realism, and no audience could fail to grasp the story which this drama teaches.

Berst Comments on Farnum Picture

Rarely does J. A. Berst comment in advance on a scenario, but when he read the original plot and the continuity of the "Harvest of Shame," latest vehicle in the course of production with Dustin Farnum as the star, Mr. Berst is reported to have said, "This scenario has everything that goes into the making of a big motion picture drama. The opening is exciting and the play unfolds right along with climax following climax. I consider it a wonderful play for Mr. Farnum."

Mr. Farnum is also reported to be as enthusiastic over the merits of the play as is Mr. Berst, while Thomas N. Heffron, the director adds his tribute to the excellence of Mr. Geraghty's play when he says, "The piece is full of action and gives Mr. Farnum many opportunities for versatile work."

Says "Redhead" Pleases Miss Brady

According to an announcement from the publicity sanctum of Select Pictures, Alice Brady's forthcoming "Redhead" will present a new Alice Brady because in the production the star has a role which delights her more than anything she has ever done.

"In 'Redhead,'" says the Select press sheet, "Miss Brady has the role of a shocking cabaret entertainer and she delights in the moments when the script allows her to go to extremes in all the tricks that are employed in this trade."

"The Pest" Is Completed

Samuel Goldwyn announces that Mabel Normand's return to broad comedy has been made safe for all time by her success in "Sis Hopkins," and that she will soon be seen in a new vehicle just completed.

"The Pest" is the title of the forthcoming production, and it was directed by W. Christy Cabanne. Miss Normand portrays the role of a rural mischief maker.

Jackson Gregory Goes to West Coast

In order to watch the filming of the screen version of his novel, "Six Feet Four," now going forward at the American studios, Jackson Gregory has taken up his quarters in Santa Barbara. He co-operated closely with Stephen Fox in adapting the story fir William Russell's purposes, and declares himself more than satisfied with the way in which the scenario follows the original tale.

Russell, of course, is Buck Thornton, alias "Six Feet Four," the virile Westerner for whom all doors but his own are too low. How he outwits an unscrupulous sheriff and his chief deputy when they seek to make him the scapegoat for their highway robberies, forms the plot of the narrative. Vola Vale has been secured for the part of the heroine.

Reunited to Work on Select Production

Once more what Select terms its happy triumvirate, consisting of Constance Talmadge, Harrison Ford and Walter Edwards. is reported to be in good working order. This time the trio is reunited to work on a new Select picture which carries the working title of "The Veiled Adventure." For this picture Walter Edwards makes his return as Miss Constance Talmadge's director.

"The Veiled Adventure" is a story by Julia Ivers, written especially for Miss Talmadge. Miss Talmadge has the part of Geraldine Barker, who is engaged to marry Reggie Crocker.

Robinson with Gray Seal Productions

President George Julian Houtain announces that Samuel L. Robinson has accepted the vice-presidency of Gray Seal Productions.

While the Brooklyn office at 44 Court Street will continue in charge of Mr. Houtain, the New York office at 665 Fifth Avenue will be under the control of Mr. Robinson.

The Production Department, under the management of John L. McCutcheon, will also make its headquarters at the New York office.

Meyer Plans Original Exploitation

Louis Meyer, president of the Virginia Pearson Photoplay Company, announces that in connection with Miss Pearson's first picture, "The Bishop's Emeralds," to be released by Pathe, he will inaugurate in co-operation and in addition to their methods of exploitation, some original ideas of his own. The nation-wide publicity by the Virginia Pearson Photoplay Company, sent out will be handled by "Monty" Fleishman and John Wilstach.

Mr. Wilstach formerly exploited Kitty Gordon and Fritzi Sheff.

Cites Possibilities in "Checkers"

William Fox Production Helps Exhibitor Advertise It—Was Directed by Richard Stanton from Stage Play

Madlaine Traverse is starred by Wm. Fox in "The Love That Dares"

A PLAY that gives the exhibitor chances for unusual and effective advertising, points out the Exhibitors Service Bureau of Fox Film Corporation, is "Checkers," the special production which Richard Stanton is making from the famous stage play of the name written by the late Henry M Kloosom, Jr.

In the first place, "Checkers" in its stage form was one of the most spectacular successes in the history of American drama. With Thomas W. Ross in the title role, this play ran for fifteen years, playing in practically every city and town in the country. Not only did an unusually large number of road companies take the play all over the country, but every city that boasted a stock company has seen it and thrilled to its exciting scenes

Therefore, according to the Fox officials, this play has the advantage of going to the exhibitor with a nation-wide following already established. The people who saw it in its original form will want to see it again, because "Checkers" it is said, is one of those plays that have fixed themselves in the affection of the American people.

In the elaborate exploitation campaign which the Fox Exhibitors' Bureau is mapping out for exhibitors great emphasis is laid on the importance of exhibitors realizing the opportunities which this play possesses for spectacular advertising. The Fox office points out that exhibitors can find an almost limitless number of points on which advertising and publicity may be planned.

"The racing scenes in 'Checkers'," says the Fox statement, "provide material for the circus type of advertising. Striking posters, conveying the atmosphere of excitement and thrills in which 'Checkers' abounds, will cover these racing scenes—which, by the way, are to be taken at the famous Churchill Downs race track, in Kentucky, on the day of the historic American Derby. Horse lovers the country over will have an opportunity to witness in these scenes the actual running of one of the world's most famous races. Thousands of people will be seen on the screen, and the audience watching the picture will get all the thrills of the spectators watching the race.

"Then there are the scenes showing Chinatown. Directon Stanton has staged these with a fidelity to detail that will make them live in motion picture art."

Big Game Feature Claims Many Surprises

IT is declared that something new in the Outing-Chester series will be presented in releases 9 and 10, a picture of African natives and big game, being released as "Cameraing Through Africa," Thrill One and Thrill Two.

These are the pictorial records of the adventures of Charles Cottar, the famous big game hunter, who has spent the last 12 years in British East and other parts of Central Africa. The first reel, which climaxes with a sensational lion hunt, in which three of the big cats participate, will be regular Outing-Chester Picture No. 9, and the second reel, in which several rhinoceroses charging the camera and the scene, will be release No. 10. It is expected that many exhibitors, after seeing the releases, will feature them rather than their longer subject for those two weeks, for so many thrills have never before been crowded, C. L. Chester states, in so few feet of film.

"Nothing approaching these pictures has ever come out of Africa," Chester says. "No cameraman ever before has taken his stand, and maintained it, so close to the most savage animals the world knows, and filmed them as they actually sprang at the camera. Cottar stood by always as a guarantee that the beasts, though they might launch themselves at the camera, would never quite reach it—and the cameraman, having seen Cottar in action, relied on him.

"The closing scene of the second reel shows a rhinoceros charging across a gully and right up to the tripod, head on. That is the only time Cottar wasn't right on the job. He was off a short distance after other rhinos but the cameraman had such implicit faith that he kept cranking up to the last, and then gathered up his machine and dodged behind a tree. For ten minutes he and the rhino played tag around the trunk, the cameraman losing portions of his shirt and a valuable expanse of his trousers as the rhino charged him again and again, with lightning quickness jabbing his horn at our fleeing operator. Finally Cottar came back and finished the pursuit, but both the camera and the cameraman needed extensive repairs.

Through the press sheet exhibitors will be aided in making a feature of the two.

"Ad Campaign Helped Pictures"

So Says Walter Greene in Summing Up Results of Paramount's Million a Year National Campaign

"THE Paramount and Artcraft million-dollar advertising campaign has been one of the biggest factors in bringing the motion picture theatre—every theatre of the better class, whether it shows Paramount and Artcraft pictures or not—into better repute, and in bringing more of the better class of people to see motion pictures."

That is the summary made by Walter E. Greene, vice-president of the Famous Players Lasky Corporation and managing director in charge of distribution, of the results accomplished by the national advertising campaign. Coincident with his statement Mr. Greene announced that the corporation's advertising policy would be continued indefinitely.

"We have sold the public a desire for motion pictures and BETTER motion pictures," continued Mr. Greene. "We believe that to this campaign may be credited much of the benefit accruing to the industry through the falling by the wayside of so many of the fly-by-night producers who were active a few years ago.

"The advertising pages of the trade papers are indispensable in the sale of pictures to the exhibitor, just as newspaper advertising by the exhibitor, with the producer co-operating as far as practicable, is indispensable in the sale of individual pictures to the exhibitors public. But we maintain that we owe it to our salesmen, to our exhibitors and to ourselves, to say nothing of our responsibility to the public, to carry our propaganda for better pictures direct to the firesides of the American people so long as our producing department continues to back us up with the kind of product we are educating the public to demand.

"Supplementing this advertising we are distributing to our exhibitors free of charge thousands of postcards carrying reproductions of the Post advertisements, with space for an announcement of the current Paramount or Artcraft picture showing at the theatre. We are also incorporating small reproductions of these advertisements in special exhibitor advertising mats and lay-outs for newspaper use, thereby linking the theatre showing Paramount and Artcraft productions with the national advertising campaign for better pictures. In response to a suggestion from one of our most prominent exhibitors, we have made a broadside reproduction of one of the most recent Post advertisements, titled "This Is No Night to Stay at Home," and have sent a copy to every exhibitor in the United States for use as a lobby display, and if the experiment proves successful and the demand is sufficient, we will do the same with all future advertisements of the series.

"In all this advertising there are two definite objects in view. One is the education of the public to the best in pictures. The other is the creation of a public desire to see Paramount and Artcraft pictures. Each idea automatically sells the other."

Shirley Mason, in Paramount's "The Rescuing Angel"

Select Starts "Hell on Earth" with Empey

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION announces that the actual filming of the big production, "Hell on Earth," which it is planning with Guy Empey as its star, will be started Monday, April 14, with Wilfrid North as director in command. "Hell on Earth" will be made at the Biograph Studios—or at least all interior work will be done there. In the picture as planned will be many large and effective exterior scenes, locations for which will have to be found later.

"Hell on Earth" is not to be a war play, nor a play in any way dealing with scenes or incidents of the great war. However, the problem of the returned soldier looms large in the story, and other current conditions which have followed as a by-product of the war and economical changes which it has wrought.

"Hell on Earth" is an original story written by Sergeant Guy Empey, the continuity of which has been prepared by William Addison Lathrop. Associated with Sergeant Empey in the production are many persons who were likewise associated with his successful photoplay, "Over the Top," the screen presentation of his phenomenally popular book of the same name. Among these are Director Wilfrid North, who directed "The Battle Cry of Peace" and "Over the Top"; Phil Quinn, assistant director, who served in a similar capacity in both of the other productions; Betty Blythe, who made quite a hit as the "Mme. Arnott" of "Over the Top," and Arthur Donaldson, who played the heavy role in that production.

Goes to Join Golden

A. Alperstein, treasurer and general manager of the Western Photoplays, Inc., left April 8 to join Joseph A. Golden, and the members of "The Great Gamble" Company who have been in the South for nearly two months doing exterior work. He remained about a week.

Pegler Gets Welcome at Atlanta

"Jack A. Pegler, well-known newspaper man of New York, has arrived in Atlanta to aid in the management of the Pathe Exchange, Inc.", announces the Atlanta Constitution.

'Mr. Pegler was formerly with the New York and World syndicate, and is an enthusiastic, wide-awake young man who promises to be of real help to the exhibitors with his wide knowledge of newspaper business.

"He served in the navy during the war period and managed a lecture tour of Floyd Gibbons, the famous Chicago Tribune war correspondent, who was severely wounded at Chateau-Thierry last June with the marines, on orders of military officials."

Latest Clark Picturizes Fred Jackson Play

"LET'S ELOPE," the Paramount production featuring Marguerite Clark and set for release on April 13 is an adaptation from Fred Jackson's stage play, "The Naughty Wife."

John S. Robertson directed, while the scenario was the work of Katherine Reed. One of the strongest casts yet to appear in Miss The supporting cast includes, Frank Mills, Gaston Glass, Helen Green, Blanche Standing, George Stevens and Albert Busby.

The plot deals with the young wife of an author who believes herself neglected and plans to elope with a romantic but shallow-brained youth. Swift comedy results when her husband takes a hand in the subsequent proceedings.

"Admirable Crichton" Is Next Cecil De Mille

Cecil De Mille will start work soon on a screen production of "The Admirable Crichton," the J. M. Barrie play recently purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Announcement of the cast will be made later.

Production work has been completed on "For Better, For Worse," the next De Mille special. Edgar Selwyn wrote the story, which Jeanie MacPherson scenarioized. Gloria Swanson is seen as the heroine.

"Custer's Last Fight"

"Custer's Last Fight," which the Tower Film Corporation is preparing for the state rights market, is said to be among the best three-reel features made for the screen. It is the first spectacle Tower has handled.

The advertising matter of this feature will consist of extraordinary posters of two styles of one's, three's and six's, a lobby display of attractive photographs, a press sheet, newspaper cuts, etc. It will be possible for every state right buyer who secures the rights of this super-production, to book it to the leading theatres in their territory.

Beall Takes Up Coast Publicity

Harry Hammond Beall has severed his connection with the Broadway Theater Company, Los Angeles, as general manager, in order to devote his energies exclusively to his work as director of publicity of the Universal studios at Universal City. W. Ivan St. Johns, assistant publicity director at Universal City, has resigned to head a local news and publicity bureau. He has been replaced by Arthur Wenzel, formerly associated with the Morosco enterprises and more recently with the Turner and Dahnken theatres in San Francisco and Oakland. Siegfried Schlager has been made director of serial publicity at Universal City and will concentrate on exploiting James J. Corbett, Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo.

"Mules and Mortgages" Special Comedy

"Mules and Mortgages" is announced as the title of the next Vitagraph Big "V" Special Comedy in which James Aubrey is featured. It was screened recently at the Vitagraph home office and is said to be a laugh maker of the highest quality.

Maude Emory and Babe Hardy are seen in support of James Aubrey and the comedy was written and directed by Jay A. Howe.

One of the big features of the picture is the introduction of "Snookums," a performing Chimpanzee, who is the offspring of "Napoleon" and "Sally," who will be remembered as the stars in the "Chimp Comedies," released some time ago.

Double Standard in Hodkinson Film

The double standard of morality, which excuses in man that which it condemns in woman, is the theme of the new photoplay based on Augustus Thomas' drama, "As a Man Thinks," produced by Harry Raver for Four Star Pictures, with George Irving as director and Leah Baird as star. It is the first of a new series of Thomas dramas in pictures to be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and put in being under the eye of Mr. Thomas himself. The author personally superintended the filming of "As a Man Thinks."

"The Westerners" Is Nearing Completion

Stewart Edward White's famous novel, "The Westerners," adapted for the screen, and which is to be the first production of Great Authors Pictures, Inc., is rapidly nearing completion.

This picture is a concrete manifestation, it is declared, of the firm belief of the men behind it that the public wants, and will liberally support, big virile stories by authors nationally known, presented by the most capable players obtainable to take the characters involved.

"The Westerners" is a story of the opening of the Black Hills to civilization.

De Haven-Parker Join Parsons

Thirteen Capitol Comedies Will Be Made by Former Musical Comedy and Vaudeville Team for Goldwyn Distribution

"SMILING BILL" PARSONS, star and creator of Capitol Comedies and president of the National Film Corporation of America, announces that he has engaged Carter De Haven and Flora Parker, former musical comedy and vaudeville favorites and now firmly established as motion picture players of the first rank, to make thirteen Capitol Comedies during the coming year at Parsons' Hollywood studios.

The De Haven-Parker productions, like all other Capitol Comedies, are to be released exclusively through Goldwyn.

Carter De Haven won stellar Broadway fame while still in his teens. So pronounced was De Haven's success as a singer, dancer and comedian in several prominent musical comedies that at the age of nineteen, with beautiful Flora Parker, he headed the Carter De Haven Vaudeville and Farce Comedy Company, an organization that for three years toured America and Australia with a success exceeded only by Harry Lauder's touring company.

The triumphant vaudeville expedition ended, and De Haven and Parker signed a long-term contract with Weber and Fields, with whom, along with many other stage notables, they appeared in "Hanky Panky" and several other noteworthy productions staged by the famous comedians in their historic music hall at Broadway and Twenty-ninth street. Later De Haven and Parker contributed much to the success of three Raymond Hitchcock musical comedies.

Another highly profitable vaudeville tour followed, and at its conclusion the talented pair hearkened to the call of motion picture producers, who long had sought to lure them before the camera. Their success on the screen is described as immediate, and it is declared that De Haven's original style of funmaking and Miss Parker's beauty and natural talents have won the approbation of the press and picture public everywhere.

Prominent among their cinema successes are "A Gentleman of Nerve," "His Little Room Mate," "Kicked Out," "Where Are My Trousers?" and "The Losing Winner."

"Smiling Bill" has already obtained six suitable stories for the talented pair and is now engaged in assembling a cast of popular comedy players for their support. Work on the first De Haven-Parker Capitol Comedy will be started early in May.

Hall Buys Rights to "A House Divided'

FRANK G. HALL, president of Independent Sales Corporation, announces that he has bought the United States and Canadian rights to J. Stuart Blackton's special production, "A House Divided," adapted from Ruth Holt Boucicault's novel, "The Substance of His House," by Anthony Paul Kelly, and produced under the personal direction and supervision of Commodore Blackton, assisted by Jack Martin. Robert W. Priest acted for Commodore Blackton in closing the deal. Mr. Hall will release this production as a special. The bookings will be handled by the Independent Sales Corporation and the physical distribution will be made by the Film Clearing House, Inc. The picture is in six reels and is said to present a subject that promises immediate favor with the public. A feature of the production are the elaborate settings to have been specially constructed from designs furnished by architects familiar with the English locale in which the action of the story is laid.

Sylvia Breamer and Herbert Rawlinson, who were seen in the featured roles of Commodore Blackton's production of "The Common Cause," are the featured members of the cast interpreting the principal roles of "A House Divided." In support of Miss Breamer and Mr. Rawlinson are seen some of the leading artists of the screen, including Sally Crute, favorably known for leads in Edison, Metro and Independent productions; Lieut. Lawrence Grossmith, whose work in a comedy role in Commodore Blackton's "The Common Cause," was one of the features of the picture; William Humphreys, one of the screen's best known character men, and known especially for his impersonation of the character Bonaparte; Eric Mayne, Marie Burke, Shirley Huxley and Charles and Violet Blackton.

"A House Divided" will be released by Mr. Hall through Independent Sales and the Film Clearing House in the United States and Canada, exclusively. The foreign rights are controlled by Bech Van Siclen and Company, Exporters.

New York Theatres Book "Tiger's Trail"

In a single day, Pathe's New York exchange report that forty New York theatres contracted for "The Tiger's Trail," a new serial starring Ruth Roland.

April 20 is the release date of the first episode, and Pathe officials declare that it will undoubtedly be one of the most widely shown productions that they have ever distributed.

The William Fox circuit of theatres was one of the first of the larger bookings reported.

Signs Long Contract

Harvey Clark, familiar as a screen character man, has signed a long-term contract, it was announced this week, to appear exclusively in support of the American stars in forthcoming "Flying A" subjects. For two years Clark played roles in the Russell, Minter and Fisher productions, but left six months ago to be featured in a big spectacle picture soon to be released. He is now playing the part of "Two-Hand Billy Comstock" in the current William Russell production, a Stephen Fox adaptation of Jackson Gregory's novel, "Six Feet Four."

Electrics Will Blaze for Selznick

National Campaign of Electric Lights and Billboards for Olive Thomas Film—To Make Public Take Notice

THE vast exploitation plan referred to by Myron Selznick, President of Selznick Pitcures Corporation, is declared to embrace a nation wide electric sign campaign linked up with local newspapers, billboards and national magazines.

"Upstairs and Down," the first of the Olive Thomas productions, has been completed it is announced, but Mr. Selznick declares he wants to first launch the biggest advertising campaign ever inaugurated upon any motion picture.

"We have just closed contracts calling for the erection of electric signs advertising Selznick Pictures and theatres playing them, in every important city in the United States," said Mr. Selznick. "These signs will be 40x50 feet and contain 2,500 electric lights in four colors. They will all be the same design as one being built for Jules Mastbaum's Stanley Theatre in Philadelphia, a reproduction of which in its actual colors appears in the advertising pages of this issue.

"Theatres playing Selznick Pictures will be advertized in this way 365 days in a year. The best locations are being leased, regardless of expense. In addition to the electric signs we will make wholesale use of billboards. The most attractive posters ever made to exploit a picture have been created for 'Upstairs and Down,' and notwithstanding their cost will be supplied to exhibitors at commercial rates, the difference being charged to advertising.

"We will cooperate in extra local newspaper advertising as well as using magazines of national circulation. This latter campaign has been launched already in the fan magazines. We believe this cooperation offers live exhibitors the opportunity of a life-time.

"Needless to say, we would not be investing this vast sum of money in advertising unless we were ourselves convinced that in Olive Thomas we have a star of the first magnitude and that we are going to be able to maintain the very highest standard in all the Selznick Pictures productions."

Increase Bookings on the United Pictures

"I HAVE done what I fear many exhibitors fail to do—namely, advertise to the limit. Because of this I have extracted the last possible cent of profit from my pictures," writes Herman J. Brown of Boise, Idaho. Mr. Brown, who is manifestly a believer in the efficacy of advertising, and who puts his ideas into effect by means of frequent full page ads in the Boise newspapers, referred in particular to United Picture Theatre releases, but his policy is not limited to the advertising of the United features only. Mr. Brown, however, has this further to say: "The exhibitor-member of United can afford to spend twice as much on advertising as another exhibitor, because he gets his pictures at a price that gives him a chance to advertise. I have already played three United attractions and my total profit is greater than on any five films combined of any kind with any stars."

Among exhibitors who have increased their number of "days" for United attractions during the past week, purchasing additional shares of stock, corresponding to this increase of days, United lists the following: The Hawkeye Amusement Company, Des Moines, Rialto theatre; B. Burnett, Chicago, Bowen theatre; West Penna. Photoplay Co., New Castle, Ind. Regent theatre; F. W. Bill, Stillwater, Minn., Majestic; J. I. Pittman, Port Arthur, Texas, Pittman; Rainbow theatre, Chicago; Fox theatre, Aurora, Ill.; Gem theatre, Gary, Ill.; Leida theatre, Chicago; Princess theatre, Woodstock, Ill.; New Home theatre, Indian Harbor, Ind.; Crown theatre, Crown Point, Ind. In addition United announces thirty-five new member theatres.

Jack Levy, United Division manager, who recently went to Detroit to select a new manager for that office, has upon the approval of J. A. Berst appointed John E. Ryder to that post.

Appeal to Women in "The Love That Dares"

AN extravagant woman's sacrifice to save her husband's honor forms the underlying theme of "The Love that Dares," the next Madlaine Travers picture to be released as a William Fox Excel Picture. "The Love that Dares," it is stated by the Exhibitors' Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation, has a powerful appeal to women and is one of the strongest yet enacted by Miss Travers.

In the supporting cast the leading man is Thomas Santschi, who plays the part of the husband; Frank Elliott is the heavy and other members are Mae Gaston, Thomas Guise and George B. Williams. The picture was directed by Harry Millarde and the scenario was written by Denison Clift

In "The Love that Dares" Miss Traverse plays the role of Olive Risdon, who refuses to marry Ned Beckwith, a gay millionaire, because she loves Perry Risdon. The young wife's extravagance, however, soon brings her husband near financial ruin. Ignorant of this, the wife goes to a fashionable summer resort, and while she is there her husband's bank calls in his note for $80,000. This is the secret work of Beckwith, who is still pressing his attention to the verge of ruin. Mrs. Risdon goes to Beckwith and asks him for a loan of $50,000. Beckwith promises it to her, but for a shameful consideration.

While Mrs. Risdon is with Beckwith, a jilted mistress of the latter telephones the fact to Risdon. Risdon hastens to Beckwith's house and a terrific struggle between the two men ensues. Meanwhile Mrs. Risdon has hidden in another room. During the fight the former comes in. Beckwith says it is she who has been at his house. Risdon departs, and soon afterward his wife returns to her home with Beckwith's $50,000 check. Risdon accuses her of accepting the money from Beckwith in a shameful bargain, but while they are quarreling, the other woman calls up and says she has just killed Beckwith. Risdon then realizes the terrible sacrifice which his wife was about to make for him, and he and his wife are reconciled.

"Gulf Between" Makes Progress in West

With the snow-capped heights of Mount Shasta for a background and the frozen stretches of Shasta County for his location, Mitchell Lewis, Select Pictures star, is in the midst of his third production for this company, it is announced this week.

The working title of the story is "The Gulf Between," the original work of the co-authors Robert North Bradbury and Frank Howard Clark. It will follow in succession Mr. Lewis' recent Select attractions, "Children of Banishment," his current production, and the previous picture, "Code of Yukon," in which the star made his initial appearance under the Select banner.

In "The Gulf Between" Mr. Lewis is being directed by Norval MacGregor, who also directed "Children of Banishment."

Next Billie Rhodes Is "The Love Call"

National Film Corporation has selected "The Love Call," writen by Margery Benton Cooke, as the feature starring Billie Rhodes to succeed "The Lamb and the Lion" in the list of Rhodes productions on the Robertson-Cole chart for Exhibitors Mutual distribution. E. Magnus Ingleton, author of "The Lamb and the Lion," adapted "The Love Call" for the screen.

The enchanting outdoors of the great West, furnishes the settings for "The Love Call," which because of its humaness—its laughs and its pathos—is expected to prove a fitting addition to the three productions which little Billie has already contributed to the silent art since becoming a star in five-reel attractions.

Irene Castle and Her Company in Florida

Famous Players-Lasky announces that Irene Castle, with her director, Charles Maigne, and a large number of players engaged to support her in "The Firing Line," has gone to Miami, Fla., to start work on the film.

The cast is announced as Robert V. Steele, David Powell, J. H. Gilmore, Frank Losee, Rudolph de Cordova, Charles Craig, Philip S. Rice, Robert Schable, Shaw Lovett, Isabel West, May Kitson, Jane Warrington, Anne Cornwall and Gladys Coburn. Ryder to that post.

Ninth War Relief Film

The tentative title of the ninth picture of the series being produced by the Stage Women's War Relief for distribution through Universal exchanges, is "She's Everywhere."

Montagu Love and Enid Markey are co-starred, and Harry Davenport, Fred Nichols and Maud Von Turk are in the supporting cast. George W. Terwilliger is directing the production from the scenario prepared by Calder Johnstone.

The original story was provided by Jack Larric and deals with the activities of a newspaper writer to obtain atmosphere for a series of stories she is writing.

Hadley Gives the Other Fellow Credit

So many compliments have been extended to Samuel L. Rothapfel, and to the Independent Sales Corporation's New York office, for the artistry of the Rothapfel Unit Programme advertising, that Hopp Hadley, advertising manager for these interests, wishes to place the credit where credit is due.

Hopp, as he is familiarly known to the trade, says that he belongs to that class of people who are a bit hazy on the subject of Bolshevism but who strongly suspects it is inspired by hatred of those who never do worthwhile things, for those who do. And as an avowed opponent of the "red" cause and a strong exponent of what he terms "Hopphadleyism," or giving the other fellow credit, he refuses to accept all the credit for the Rothapfel Unit Programme advertising.

Hopp refuses to allow the chairman of any committee or the head of any department, to pose as the sum-total of his associates' brains. With this explanation, he tells just where credit should be given for the Rothapfel Unit Programme insert.

Buffalo Theatre's First Serial Is Houdini's

Up to the present time one Buffalo theatre had never shown a serial, but it will now show each episode three days, first run.

Carey Wilson, manager of the Effano Film Exchange, booking Houdini in B. A. Rolfe's super serial, "The Master Mystery," in New York State, announces that he has just signed contracts whereby the Houdini serial will be shown in the Strand theatre, Buffalo.

The Strand at Buffalo is owned and operated by the Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation, which conducts the Strand theatre, New York City; Strand theatre, Syracuse, and other big houses of a chain in the east. It is one of the finest motion picture theatres in the country.

"Eyes of the Soul" Released April 20

John Flinn, head of the publicity department of Famous Players-Lasky, wired Elsie Ferguson that "Eyes of the Soul" was the best picture he had ever witnessed, bar none.

The photoplay is founded on "Salt of the Earth," a George Weston story published some time ago in the Saturday Evening Post. It is scheduled for release on April 20 and great things are expected of "Eyes of the Soul."

Drews Win the Laughs

"Once a Mason," a Paramount-Drew comedy, was features on the programs of Marcus Loew's theatres in New York and Brooklyn during the week of March 30, and the laughter and applause that greeted the efforts of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew attested to the managerial wisdom in booking this series of two-reelers for the circuit.

"Oh, You Women!" Made Available for All

REGARDLESS of whether an exhibitor is regularly booking Paramount-Artcraft service he has the privilege of booking by itself the John Emerson-Anita Loos Paramount production, "Oh, You Women!" featuring Ernest Truex and Louise Huff. It will be released May 4.

"The latest John Emerson-Anita Loos production, 'Oh, You Women!' is a winner, judged from any angle," said Walter E. Greene vice-president and managing director in charge of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, after seeing the picture in the company's private projection room the other day. "Mr. Emerson and Miss Loos gave of their best in the preparation of the story. They have tapped the hidden springs of mirth in a most affecting way, and have produced as delicious a bit of satiric comedy as have ever been projected on a screen.

"Mr. Emerson, as director, of course knew his subject thoroughly and he got the ultimate out of the lines he and his clever collaborator had written. Ernest Truex and Louise Huff prove splendidly adapted to the parts they play and in this picture they make their positions in the front rank of motion picture comedians absolutely secure.

"Among the spectators who were present at the advance screening of the picture were men and women from every department of the home office, most of whom have seen every picture produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation during their connection with it. Through my long association with them I have come to regard them as the most painstaking, yes, even the most severe critics I know of.

"They go into the projection room to find the flaws in the pictures and report on them. But that crowd found no flaws in 'Oh, You Women!' Instead the laughter and applause that sounded through the room was a spontaneous tribute to the merit of the picture as a gloom-killer and joy-producer."

Tom Moore Puts Hayakawa Film into Rialto

TOM MOORE, the exhibitor of Washington, D. C., has accorded a most unusual honor to Sessue Hayakawa, the Japanese star whose Haworth features are released by Robertson-Cole Company through Exhibitors' Mutual. Moore had booked the entire Hayakawa series for his Garden theatre in Washington and met with such success with each feature that he decided to shift the series to the Rialto, his leading house in the National capital.

The Washington showman inaugurated his new policy with "The Courageous Coward," which played the Rialto last week. The picture met with instantaneous success, and Mr. Moore congratulated himself as well as the Exhibitors' Mutual officials in Washington on the happy move he had made, and the high type of picture which Exhibitors' Mutual had furnished him.

Hayakawa's popularity grows apace. Beyond question, he is one of the most popular players on the screen today, and a glance at the Exhibitors' Mutual booking records is sufficient to prove this assertion.

The wonderful notices which have greeted "The Turn in the Road," the Brentwood special which Exhibitors' Mutual is releasing, has led to remarkable bookings. An instance of this is the Boston district. The Boston theatre played it this week, with greater box office returns than any picture this year has obtained. On the strength of the showing at the Boston theatre, the Hub exchange of Exhibitors' Mutual has booked "The Turn in the Road" for sixty of the next seventy-four playing days, which is a record for any picture to be proud of.

Every week brings an additional number of first run houses into the Exhibitors' Mutual fold. Keith's Providence, with a twice weekly change policy, has played seven Exhibitors' Mutual first run features in the past month.

Universal Presents Miss Phillips in "Destiny"

SUPPORTED by one of the strongest casts that ever has appeared in a Universal production, Dorothy Phillips will shortly be seen in a Jewel production entitled "Destiny." This film play has been adapted from an original story by Charles N. Buck by Elliot J. Clawson and has been produced by Rollin Sturgeon, who produced "God's Country and the Woman" and other big Vitagraph productions.

The story brings out the ultimate result of greed and deals a hefty blow to selfishness and despotism, in business. The film play is related as a vision of what might have been had young Hamilton Burton followed out his boyhood ideas and desires.

As a boy Hamilton Burton had always hoped for power. His greatest desire was to dominate. In business his desire was later only partly satisfied. He became a prominent broker and made a fortune on the stock market. However, he was not satisfied. He established his brother and sister in his home, but in giving them social position, he demanded that they do as he chose. When he found a business rival paying court to his sister, Hamilton demanded that she refuse to have anything to do with him. Mary refuses and when the rival, Edwards, is found in Hamilton's home a fight follows. Edwards is wounded trying to wrest a gun from Hamilton's hands. When Hamilton finds his brother in love with Mrs. Haswell he promises to get that lady a divorce so that she can marry Paul. However, when the despotic money king sought to fight against love he met defeat. His power gradually slipping and his fortune dwindling because of investments brought about more by maniacal dictates than by business judgment, Hamilton finally admits his defeat.

Gentlemen:

It is with pleasure that I commend your picture CANNIBALS OF THE SOUTH SEAS, which is playing to the biggest business at our Randolph Theatre of which that house may boast since it's erection. Our first week will total far in excess of $14,000 gross, which is a marvelous business when you consider that our admission prices are only 25 and 50¢.

The picture is so good that I have viewed it twice myself and expect to look at it again today.

Yours very truly,

Modern Husbands

Produced by National Film Corporation of America

The virile acting of this dramatic star was never more compelling. By many it is considered his greatest work since "The Birth of a Nation."

As Duane, a man of high standing, he is the victim of a love pirate who wrecks his home and business. The odd twist the story takes whereby everything is restored to him coupled with his exceptional work, makes this a most unusual picture.

Dear Mr McShane

In connection with the week's engagement of "THE TURN IN THE ROAD" we exhibited week of March 15th, we are inspired to address a recommendation of this picture, which, as you know, we have booked for a return week at our Strand, and feel that in so doing other exhibitors in this field may be assured in booking same of not only a sure winner but one of those rare subjects obtainable very seldom -- in that it has a story that is different, strikes home, and holds an audience from start to finish, combining a sentiment that is beautiful and pleasing to all. We cannot recommend this picture too highly as a production that will please the entire family We hope for more of these pictures and that you will realise extensive bookings, and congratulate you in your selection of this picture for distribution in this field. Incidentally, it has established a new record as a production without a well known star at the Rialto

Again thanking you for the premiere showing in Washington, we beg to remain

Cordially yours,

Dear Friend;

It affords me great pleasure to be able to recommend very highly your recent release entitled "The Turn in the Road". I first saw a part of this picture while in Los Angeles last Winter and was greatly interested in it; in fact I tried to find how to get it for Detroit, and as soon as I found out that your company had purchased the rights, I immediately arranged for a week's showing at my Madison Theatre, and am satisfied that everyone who sees the picture will be delighted with it.

I am taking some extra space in the local papers, as I think the picture warrants additional advertising.

If you have any more pictures as pleasing as this, I would greatly appreciate it if you will give me the first opportunity to contract for Detroit showing.

Yours very truly.

Polo in Eight Short Westerns

Universal Sets May 12 as Release Date for First Two-Reel Western, Starring Eddie Polo

THE policy Universal has adopted for releasing the eighth special Western stories in two reels, featuring Eddie Polo the serial star, is to distribute the first subject May 12 and then one a week for eight succeeding weeks.

Each picture will be complete in itself and the series will bear the title of "Cyclone Smith Adventure Stories." Polo will be cast as Cyclone Smith in each production and will have in his supporting casts such well known players as Eileen Sedgwick, Bob Anderson, Tex Marcel, Pat Moore and others.

The pictures are being directed and for the most part written by Jacques Jaccard, who has produced a number of successful serials and features and who has recently been mustered out of army service, following eight months' service in France.

Jaccard is said to be injecting into the productions an unusual amount of spirit and the four finished productions viewed by the Universal reviewing committee have been pronounced extraordinary in theme and construction.

Universal is planning on making the series a big thing for exhibitors and some very attractive advertising is now being prepared for use in boosting business on the productions. To date no definite individual titles have been given the releases comprising the series but it is expected that among the first of the series will be playlets dealing with Cyclone Smith's return from war, another bearing the tentative title "A Prisoner for Life" and another temporarily called "Cyclone Smith Rides Alone."

Vera Stedman, Former Sennett Girl, In the Universal Comedy, "Alimony"

The first of the above mentioned films deals with the efforts of Cyclone Smith to restore order in a small Western village when he returns from war to find an Eastern capitalist has, by illegal methods, forced old land owners off their property and who practically holds the destinies of the town in his power, because of his wealth.

Smith brings into play some unusual ideas to get the capitalist out of town and to return property seized by him to its rightful owners.

World to Distribute Five Chaplin Pictures

GEORGE KLEINE and officials of the World Film Corporation have made arrangements whereby the World exchanges take over the distributing of five Charlie Chaplin pictures.

"Triple Trouble" is the more recent picture of the five and the other four Chaplin pictures ready for distribution are "Night at the Show," "Police," "The Bank," and "Shanghaied."

The World Corporation in distributing these pictures submits to the exhibitors throughout the United States that there is only one Charlie Chaplin and that unlike any other picture star, his vehicles are capable of being revived from time to time with the maximum box office returns.

They declare that it has been proven, even by blase Broadway that Charlie Chaplin pictures can be called upon at any time to meet the crying demand for an attraction that will alleviate the distress of a depleted bank account. Mr. Chaplin is heralded as the biggest box office bet in the world today because he projects entertainment pure and simple to all classes and conditions of audiences.

On April 3rd the salesmen of the World Film Corporation throughout the United States were notified by wire that this company was to distribute these five pictures of Chaplin and within 72 hours telegraphic returns are said to have indicated a complete wiping out of all existing records for fast selling and results obtained in distributing pictures.

The branch offices of The General Film Company have received instructions from the home office and George Kleine to turn over to the branch offices of the World Film Corporation all prints, advertising matter and accessories of these five Chaplin pictures. The General Film has turned over to the World Pictures and its branch offices a complete statement of all contracts taken, pending and in prospect and all data as regards the sales campaign since its inception for these other pictures so that branch managers and salesmen for the World are in a position to pick up the reins exactly where they left off without loss of time.

Her First Role as a Film Comedienne

The role which Marion Davies has in "Getting Married Married," Select Picture, is said to be her first as a comedienne. "Getting Mary Married" is Allan Dwan's first picture with Miss Davies. The story is by Anita Loos and John Emerson. The picture has been very highly commended.

Court Upholds Goldwyn Against Censors

The Common Pleas Court at Philadelphia reversed the adverse findings of the Pennsylvania State Board of Censors on the Rex Beach production, "The Brand," distributed by Goldwyn. The plea was taken to the Court by Gabriel D. Hess, General Counsel for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation.

The decision is viewed as important by film men, assuming a large place in the growing record of litigation in which censors have been described by courts as oppressive in their procedure. It also contributes an interesting amount of information to the increasing literature on censorship.

Judge Rogers completely vindicates the author and the producers.

Morey Works on New Picture

Harry T. Morey, under the direction of Paul Scardon, is well along with the production of his next Vitagraph feature release. This forthcoming picture is adapted from a novel. It is said to be pure romance, swift moving and with a powerful mystery element, says the announcement.

The statement adds that Morey will be seen in the type of role that has shown him to such advantage in releases of the calibre of "Silent Strength" and "Fighting Destiny."

"Getting Mary Married"

Marion Davies' first Allan Dwan production, "Getting Mary Married," which constitutes her Select attraction for April, has been released for general distribution. This is one of three Star Series attractions which Select will release this month. The others are Constance Talmadge in "The Veiled Adventure," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and Alice Brady's "Readhead."

Evelyn Greeley, World Film star, who will next be seen in "Relations"

Hutchinson Returns from Trip Abroad

Reached Chicago Following Three Months' Sojourn in England—Thompson Distributes American Productions for United Kingdom—Deals Made for Other Countries

SAMUEL S. HUTCHINSON, president of the American Film Company, Inc., returned to Chicago last week after spending nearly three months abroad. He left America on December 21, arrived in London on December 30, and aside from a single week spent in Paris was busily engaged at his London offices during the entire period of his visit. On his return he sailed from Liverpool on March 8 aboard the "Carmania," which landed at Halifax on March 17, and from there President Hutchinson returned to New York, via rail.

While abroad he not only inspected his extensive laboratories and offices in Great Britain, but also closed contracts for the distribution of his product abroad in a far bigger, better way than it has ever been done before. American Pictures are known as "Flying A" productions on the other side, and Mr. Hutchinson reports he was delighted to find them in high favor wherever he went, and received many testimonials as to their worth as box office attractions.

Pleased with Results

Interviewed by a representative of Motion Picture News upon his return to Chicago, Mr. Hutchinson, looking the picture of health and as though the trip had done him a world of good, said: "Yes indeed I am glad to be back at home and mightily pleased over the results attained by my trip. Things here in America have been moving steadily along since I left, and though I haven't yet been able to see them on the screen myself, I am told that several of our latest feature releases are receiving such favorable comment on the part of exhibitors.

"In the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland 'Flying A' Pictures, as they are called over there, are to be distributed by H. W. Thompson, of Leeds, one of England's foremost film distributors and a man whose interests reach into every nook and corner of the British Isles. As usual, all the printing and developing will be handled at the 'Flying A' laboratories in England, but the films are placed on a royalty basis with Mr. Thompson for distribution to the exhibitors. Mr. Thompson is held in high regard and trust by the English exhibitors and was a member of the English film committee that cooperated with the government all through the war, which gives one a faint idea at least of the esteem in which he is held by his fellow Britishers.

"John Olsen & Company, of Copenhagen, entered into a contract with me for the distribution of 'Flying A' Pictures in Scandinavia and Finland. This concern also is known to its customers as one of the foremost distributors in the territory it undertakes to cover and stands equally high with the governments of the allied nations, who imposed many restrictions on such film organizations as they deemed unworthy of trust. 'Flying A' Pictures have of course been shown for years in the Scandinavian countries, but I know that in future we shall do even more business there.

For Other Countries

"Not one but several contracts were entered into with Cinematograph Harry of Paris for distributing 'Flying A' Pictures in France, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Greece and Egypt. The above mentioned countries are included in one contract, while other and distinctly separate contracts provide for the same firm handling of our product in Spain, Portugal and Italy, and still others for other and more distant portions of the globe. I was delighted to find all 'Flying A' Pictures popular with the exhibitors of Europe and to see them shown in the finest theatres on the Continent as well as in England. For example, I discovered with pleasure that the London Opera House, the famous theatre erected by Oscar Hammerstein some years ago, is now showing pictures and that among the prominent features advertised were the Mary Miles Minter, William Russell and Margarita Fisher subjects, released in the United States some three months ago, but only now being offered for the first time in Great Britain."

"About what percentage of the foreign theatres are showing American made pictures, would you estimate?" queried the interviewer.

"I should say fully 85 per cent of all the films exhibited abroad are of American manufacture," replied Mr. Hutchinson. "By that I mean, of course, are subjects made by film manufacturers of the United States, the word American not referring specifically to the product of the American Film Company. I am proud to know, though, that our own particular brand is ranked among the very top notchers by all the foreign exhibitors, and I was told time and again that 'Flying A' Pictures were so popular because all of the stories have a touch of real heart interest in them, are interpreted by well balanced casts and photographed with unusual clearness. I was told in England and France that our brand name 'Flying A' is a houshold word. You would scarcely wonder at the popularity of American made pictures if you could see some of the photography in some of the English and French films. They don't seem as yet able to anywhere near equal the mediocre stuff shown on this side."

Book Three-Day Runs

Mr. Hutchinson explained that practically all British houses book on a three day run basis, there being two changes weekly, one feature running Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and a new attraction offered on Thursday, Friday and Saturday. Very few houses run Sunday shows and all of the speaking stage theatres are closed on Sunday throughout the entire British Isles. The patronage at both speaking stage theatres and those showing films is exceptionally good. Long lines stand patiently in front of the box offices waiting their turn to witness the performance, and the admission prices are considerably higher than those in the United States.

Speaking on the labor unrest concerning which so much has been printed in American newspapers, Mr. Hutchinson said it seems to be the general opinion that the British laboring men are undergoing a period of readjustment fear. They know employers are compelled to reduce wages in many industries and are protesting in the hope that the cut in their own wages may be as slight as possible. It is looked upon as quite the natural thing for them to do and not as an indication that they are inclined to accept the doctrines of Bolshevism, as all British laborers are far too intelligent and possessed of too much sound sense to wish to see their country ridden by an outbreak of riots and property destruction such as Berlin and Budapest have been undergoing.

Women are still employed, said Mr. Hutchinson, in the majority of the transportation systems, acting as conductors and collectors on trains, trolleys, subways, busses, and even as porters in the railway stations. He mentioned that his own offices in London had been managed for some months by Mrs. W. C. Scott, wife of the manager, who was called to the colors and who was but recently furloughed from army service only to be immediately confined to his bed by tuberculosis. Since Mr. Hutchinson sailed from Liverpool he

Will Now Screen "Josselyn's Wife"

B. B. Features Will Produce the Picture Starring Bessie Barriscale for Exhibitors Mutual Distribution

ROBERTSON-COLE COMPANY announces that the first of a series of pretentious photoplays to be produced by B. B. Features from famous novels, with Bessie Barriscale as the featured player, and released through Exhibitors' Mutual, will be "Josselyn's Wife," a story of the east which met with widespread favor.

"Josselyn's Wife" is now in the course of completion at the Brunton Studios in Los Angeles, and will be Miss Barriscale's next release, following "Hearts Asleep," her current vehicle.

It is said that "Josselyn's Wife" was added to the B. B. Features library only after spirited bidding against a number of other organizations, who saw in the story by Kathleen Norris an unusually good motion picture medium.

B. B. Features is going about the production of "Josselyn's Wife" in big fashion. Howard Hickman, who is directing the drama, says he is expending every effort to make the offering the peer of any Miss Barriscole has tendered in her long and successful screen career.

What is described as a remarkable cast was selected to support the star. Playing opposite Miss Barriscale is Nigel Barrie, who only recently completed an engagement with Alma Rubens in "Diane of the Green Van," also an Exhibitors' Mutual release. Barrie is cast as Gibbs Josselyn, a role in which he will have every opportunity to show at his best before the camera.

Other members of the "Josselyn" family will be Kathleen Kirkham, as Lillian Josselyn; little Ben Alexander, the loving boy of "Hearts of the World" and "Turn in the Road," as Tommy Josselyn; and Tom Guise as Thomas Josselyn. In addition there will be the venerable Joe Dowling in a favorite role as Grandpa Latimer; Leslie Stewart as Lindsay Popper, Marguerite DeLamott as Lizzie, Josephine Crowell as Aunt Elsie, George Hackathorne as Joe Latimer, and Helen Dunbar as Mrs. Rose.

Bessie Barriscale, in her own productions through Exhibitors Mutual

This is declared to be one of the best casts chosen for any motion picture production this year, and is said to be significant of the type of photoplay which B. B. Features intends producing from the several "best sellers" recently purchased for Miss Barriscale.

"Josselyn's Wife," which was published by Doubleday-Page Company, was listed among the best sellers, and is the best known literary effort of Kathleen Norris, whose pen has held a spell over lovers of popular fictions for a number of years.

Fred Myton, of the B. B. Features scenario staff, was entrusted with the work of making the continuity, and reports from California indicate that he has contributed another fine piece of work to his many other laurels.

Long Island furnished the locale for Miss Norris's story, and with this country and the people who live on that wonderful stretch of New York, Miss Barriscale is very familiar.

Parsons to Make Comedies While on Tour

AFTER renewing his contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for the distribution of his Capitol Comedies, "Smiling Bill" Parsons declared that the locale of many of the forthcoming comedies will be in Mexico, Honolulu, Cuba, Alaska, the Philippines and Porto Rico.

It is stated that Mr. Parsons has always been a tourist and traveler and that the jovial comedian has long nursed a plan to produce his comedies in Mexico or in many of the United States possessions.

The idea of using the scenes of other lands as a background for his adventures on the screen came to the rotund actor last year, but the unsettled state of the world forced him to put it out of his mind. Shortly after the armistice was signed, he began negotiations with the State Department, preliminary to outlining a plan of travel which would allow him to produce pictures in all of the principal romantic lands of the world. At Washington, after many conversations, he was told that his venture would be best served by postponement until the process of settlement, beginning with the Peace Conference, had been given time to crystalize.

"Smiling Bill" found it hard to give up his long-nursed plan, and the result is that he will shortly begin to make Capitol Comedies in Mexico, Alaska, Honolulu, Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines. This series of productions will keep him busied until the affairs of the wider world have swung back into their accustomed rhythm.

Parsons is said to have had a more romantic career than almost any star figure in the films today. Before his entry into the pictures he was known as a million-dollar-a-year writer of life insurance.

Vitagraph Films for President's Voyage

When President Wilson returns from France, he will find relaxation from his labors abroad in the motion picture entertainment provided aboard the "George Washington." A number of Vitagraph releases have been booked for use on the return trip of the steamer and in mid-Atlantic, the President and his party will be carried via. the screen to the deserts and mountains of the West which happen to be the settings of the majority of the subjects selected.

Philip White Joins Stone

Philip H. White, one of the most versatile men in the motion picture industry, has been especially engaged for the important position of film editor for the Lewis S. Stone productions. Mr. White has had extensive experience with the George Kleine, Thomas H. Ince, Universal and Triangle organizations prior to his present affiliation.

has received a cable saying that Mr. Scott passed away. Mr. Scott is another prominent film man who gave up his life for his country.

Spends Week in Paris

One week of Mr. Hutchinson's sojourn abroad was spent in Paris, whither Mr. Hutchinson went to see his son Hobart, who is connected with Headquarters Regiment and attached to the staff of General Pershing. Hobart described to his father many thrilling experiences that befell him during the war, and though he believes he played in great luck and escaped many of the hardships experienced by many other boys in the service, his father still shudders when he recalls that Hobart was driving an automobile through a shell torn area under heavy fire, running at nearly 60 miles an hour over roads that would be considered decidedly bad in this country when an enemy shell burst behind the car, blew the tonneau completely off the body, smashed the windshield to bits and yet never even scratched young Mr. Hutchinson. "I guess Hobart must bear a charmed life," commented his father, "for it doesn't seem human possible to have been through such an incident and escape alive." Hobart was the first American driver to enter the city of Metz after the signing of the armistice, and had extreme difficulty in getting in with his officer passengers, for the Germans had mined the roadway and the car was halted by a cavity in the road fully 75 feet deep, which had been deliberately blown open by the Germans to delay pursuit. Hobart found a way around the hole, though he nearly capsized the car in getting it back into the road on the other side, but at last he reached Metz and was hailed as "the first car in."

Mr. Hutchinson is already busy with new plans for the advancement of American productions, but announcements concerning them will be made later on.

Special Service Section on

Wallace Reid in "The Roaring Road"

EXHIBITORS who are going to play "The Roaring Road" should base the greater portion of the exploitation on two points: On Wallace Reid and his popularity with the women by pointing out the love interest in the story. For the men there should be the emphasis of the thrills of the auto races and especially the one in the latter part of the picture where he literally makes the road roar to beat the train on which his sweetheart is riding.

These two elements should be played equally strong, for the auto race scenes are probably the ones that you will use in your advertising, and you don't want to leave the impression with the women folk that there is nothing else to the story. In most cases we advise against telling the public how the picture turns out, but it won't hurt here because the main thing that you are depending upon are the various turnings of the plot and the satisfaction that everyone will have that all is well in the end.

With the apparently increasing interest in pictures made from stories that the patrons have read, we would not fail to call attention to the fact that this has been made from a series of stories by Byron Morgan which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post.

J. D. Ward, millionaire owner of the Darco auto company, is known among his employes as "The Bear," because of his disposition, and carrying out the idea his daughter, Dorothy, has been nicknamed "The Cub." We are introduced to The Bear with the announcement that his Darco machines have already won the Santa Monica road race twice and that his great desire is to make the third win. Then we meet "Toodles" Waldron, who has two ambitions, one to drive in this race and the other to marry "The Cub." "Toodles" is Ward's best salesman and a speed maniac combined, but he can't get the consent to drive in the race. And he is equally unsuccessful in marrying The Cub, for, as he tells it, "Every time I ask your father to marry you he bawls out, 'Why?'"

Just at that moment Wheeler, Ward's general manager, resigns to go with Rexton, a rival company, and recommends "Toodles" for his old job. "The Bear" declares that he wants a man who will stand up on his hind legs and holler and so decides to give Waldron a fake "baling out." Not only does Waldron act up, but he quits the works cold.

AND to make it all the harder, Ward then gets the news that the train bearing his three new racers from the east has been wrecked and the cars ruined. "Toodles" cannot resist the temptation to go to inspect them, and with his friend Tom Darby, star mechanic, he decides that they can get enough material out of the three to make one, and they set to work secretly with the approval of "The Cub."

Then comes the race, and Ward is indignant to see No. 11 entered as a Darco car. He believes "Toodles" is framing it up on him to make a Darco entry look foolish, but as lap after lap is reeled off and the No. 11 crawls up and up and into first place he takes on wild enthusiasm, which is quenched with a note from Waldron saying that he will stop at the pit at the fortieth lap, and that if Ward does not sign the agreement to make him manager he will throw the race. Ward declares it is a trap and refuses, but the sporting blood of the young man is up and he goes back into the race and wins. Then Ward hands him the signed contract and agrees that he may marry "The Cub"—but not until five years have passed.

Days pass and just as the couple decide that they will marry anyway, Wheeler comes across an item in a newspaper saying that Waldron is practicing at night to go after the Rexton record from San Bernardino to San Francisco, a record for stock cars that Ward has never sought. He is angered at this secret plan and again "bawls out" Waldron, this time there being no sham, and again the youth quits, declaring he will never come back.

BUT thinking it over, Ward decides to go after that record and wires for his racing drivers, but with that decision he gets the news that speeding is to be prohibited by the state after three days, and since it is impossible for the racers to arrive in that time Ward begs Waldron to try again. Waldron refuses and at the same time declares that he is going to marry "The Cub" whether the father consents or not.

Again "The Bear" banks on the sporting blood of the youth and trickery. He announces to the girl that they start that evening at eight by way of San Francisco for a year in the east, and a little later Ward calls in "Toodles'" mechanic friend and puts him next to the trick. Darby is to have one of the stock models stripped and ready and Waldron is not to be told until ten minutes after the train has left that "the Bear" is taking the girl away for a year. He counts on "Toodles" trying to beat them to San Francisco by auto and thus breaking the record.

But "Toodles" has gotten into jail for speeding, and "The Bear" frames it for Darby to free him by sawing the bars. This he does, but they are a half hour late getting started.

THEN follow the scenes of the night race between the train and the auto. We have a number of contrasting pictures and titles now with "the speeding train on a clear track" and "the motor car where a bobble may spell death." There are some thrilling scenes, one where the machine crosses the track directly in front of the engine. Here is where the greater part of the thrills come in, but all ends happily in the end, for the Rexton record is broken by an hour.

"Darn your old record," says the youth; "What I want to know is where Dorothy and I are to be married to-night."

WALLACE REID should be played stronger than anything in this offering, and as the type of the virile, romantic young American. Don't be afraid to put the breeziness in the copy that you write and suggest that there is action in the picture. This is the time of year when there is the most appeal to that sort of stuff, and it will strike an especially welcome chord with the returning soldier boys.

Close up under the name of the star we would certainly mention Anna Little and Theodore Roberts, who are in the cast. Miss Little has had a big following ever since the days when she appeared in the westerns, and she is a splendid type of the American girl. Theodore Roberts, of course, has appeared with a great number of stars, in many all-star casts and as the featured player himself.

Unless you use one of the cuts showing Reid in the garb of a race driver or explain the title, it may be uncertain. It is for that reason that we would include a few lines of selling talk and link in the romantic portion so as to get the full benefit of the interest of the women.

This is done effectively in one of the ready prepared advertisements, which carries this selling talk:

AN ADDED LAUGH

JUST little touches of music in the score often count a lot in putting a picture over. There is an incident in this one where Toodles, after the old man tells him he must wait five years to marry, asks, "Why should we play 'Silver Threads Among the Gold' at our wedding?" If you will use that song there with the burlesque touch it will give an added laugh.

There is another chance for a laugh when the Bear is framing up the game on Toodles and talking to the mechanician, and here a touch of "Everybody Works But Father" will please.

Effects can be easily overdone here if they are worked through all of the automobile scenes, and become very tiresome. We would prefer to carry the auto race itself with light, snappy music and then reserve the effects for the race between the train and the auto, giving the whistle of the locomotive and purring of the auto engine and the hissing of the steam right at the end where the interest is the tensest.

"He didn't know he was going 112 miles an hour. He never thought that he was smashing all records to smithereens.

"All he knew was that she was there. She wanted and needed him. He was going to her—in a car that was more than a brother to him.

"Men who love the touch of the wheel—women who love the throb of a mighty engine—children who coo and shout at the chug-chug of a car—they should see Wallace Reid in this great story of the road that is torn by an inferno of tearing wheels."

HERE are a few others that get still more into the girl side of the picture and which reflect both action and romance:

"They called him 'The Bear' because he was so big and because he growled so when he was crossed. And his pretty little daughter they called 'The Cub.' And the youth who loved her they called 'Toodles.' 'Toodles' wanted to drive a racing car in the Santa Monica and when he appeared in the field 'The Bear' was sure that he was being tricked by the youngster. But he had his great yearning satisfied by seeing his make of car cross the line the winner. That was one record.

"So one of 'Toodles' ambitions was satisfied, but he wanted 'The Cub' more than anything else. He was done with gasoline row, but 'The Bear' tricked him again and the boy had to race a limited train a hundred miles through the night to win the girl. Of course he did, and you'll get a lot of thrills while he is doing it and share his happiness in the end. And laugh?—you bet

"'Toodles' believed in speed on the race track and in love. He showed it when he won the Santa Monica auto race in one of 'The Bear's' cars, but 'The Bear' didn't believe in speed when it came to 'Toodles' marrying his daughter.

"But 'The Bear' had always had his own way and he thought he could have it now, so when he found out that 'Toodles' was a different sort of fellow he thought that he might as well hang up a new record for his cars, and so he kidnapped his own daughter, had the jail jimmied to free 'Toodles,' and then started on a limited train with 'Toodles' left to pursue in an auto. Did 'Toodles' win? He did. And 'The Bear'—he chuckled, and so will you—lots of times."

HERE are some that are shorter:

"Do you think that the sort of a fellow who goes out and wins an auto race in a makeshift car is the sort that is willing to wait five years for the girl he loves? He determined that he wouldn't, but he didn't know that he was going to have to drive a hundred miles an hour down the roaring road to win her clever father's consent.

"Here's a story without a villain, but a mighty handy hero, a pretty girl, a lot of speed, a spice of humor and bing-bang action from start to finish. If you are looking for pure amusement here it is."

"He had to go some to win the auto race, and he did. But that was nothing like how he had to go—a hundred miles an hour to beat a speeding train to win the girl he loved. And of course he did, and he's the sort of a fellow that you'll like, and the girl—well, she's just one of the 'sweetest ever.'"

At left Toodles and his friend prepared to make a racer out of wrecked cars, center, Toodles is in jail, but he gets out in time for the thrilling dash before the train shown at right

Auto Idea Offers Chance for Much Free Advertising

THERE should be one special appeal made in exploiting this picture—to every person within easy riding distance of your theatre who owns an automobile. It will serve the purpose of not only getting them to come to see this particular offering, but it is likely to win new popularity for your theatre.

If you own a theatre in a city you know what it means to have a line of cars lined up in front of your theatre—the advertising of "class" that is given your house. If you have a neighborhood theatre or are located in a smaller city with an appeal to a considerable outlying population, and you have not taken advantage of the automobile trade, here is a chance to make up for those mistakes.

Do not take any chances about making the appeal. Get from the state authorities—in many cases you can get the information from the county or city records—the name of every man and woman who owns a machine and sit down and write them a special letter, something on this order:

"For a long time we have been looking for a first class motion picture in which the real star is an automobile. We have found it in 'Roaring Road,' and Wallace Reid is the handsome young actor who gives you thrill after thrill and in the end shatters all the records and wins the girl he loves.

"It is not simply a case of where the auto is an incident. At times it comes mighty near being the whole thing. You'll quiver as you imagine you hear the roar of the speeding motors, as you witness the perils of the night race against the limited, but all that time you'll have enough faith to know that the gasoline boy is going to win out in the end—and it's no secret violated to tell you that he does.

"Yes, Wallace Reid is the hero, and there's Ann Little, the girl, and Theodore Roberts, the cause of it all.

"Load your car up with your less fortunate friends, and all of you enjoy a ride down 'The Roaring Road' to happiness."

THESE Special Service Section are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictpres that he has booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture of any others?

F you are in a city of course the auto dealers will all co-operate with you in every way. As a matter of fact, it's mighty hard to find a city now that hasn't auto dealers. Most of these people have large show windows, and there will be little trouble in getting their co-operation.

Be sure to get enough of the scenes from the production to furnish a series of attractive layouts. These should be mounted on cardboard and different lines supplied for the different dealers. For instance:

"If it hadn't been for an automobile Wallace Reid would never have won happiness and the girl he loved in 'The Roaring Road.' See the picture at the Empire theatre and then come and let us show you how you can win a lot of happiness by owning a Marmon car."

Through the city and along the main roads we would recommend the use of the paper in the neighborhood of gasoline supply stations.

IF you have the sort of theatre where you want to get attention from the street, you can do this very easily by either reproducing the noise of the motor or by using a real motor or by having an actually operating machine. This can be suspended from the ceiling by means of heavy chains and with the power on so that the wheels will revolve rapidly. Still better would be the arrangement of a dummy machine with the motor hidden away and then by the use of a treadmill effect you can have the machine apparently dashing down a descending road. In any case this should be so arranged that the noise will not interfere with the enjoyment of the spectators already inside your theatre.

This can be further worked out for night effects by building over the front of your theatre a dummy automobile with a double searchlight both up and down the street. These should be strong enough to carry a considerable distance and kept sufficiently high so that they will not interfere with traffic. You can add to the ballyhoo by a flashing effect and the honk of a horn with it.

With any displays of this sort you should devote enough of the rest of the lobby display to scenes from the picture, so that the public will not get the idea that this is a news picture of an auto race.

IF stunt ideas work well in your city you can get further advertising by rigging up a real automobile like a racing car, painting it white and then striping it with the number "11." This will attract a lot of attention after it has been around for a few times. You can further arouse the curiosity by having the driver's companion armed with circulars reading:

"I challenge any driver for a race down 'The Roaring Road' (and then give the date on which you are to show the picture). Sign it 'Toodles Waldron.'"

Banking on the well-known curiosity, you can always attract crowds by stopping the machine and opening the hood and speeding the engine while you pretend that something is the matter.

Another splendid way to distribute these would be by handing them to the occupants of all cars passed.

If you can get a newspaper to co-operate with articles about the mysterious car, so much the better.

Hampton Says Readjustment Due

President of Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., Discusses Screen's Future, and Advocates Higher Plane of Productions

BENJAMIN B. HAMPTON declared in Los Angeles last week that the exhibitor is being taxed constantly increasing rentals for the service of popular stars, and that these stars do not produce a corresponding increase in returns to the exhibitor.

The President of Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., believes that the screen's future rests not so much upon holding the millions who are already picture "fans" but in reaching the many more millions who, notwithstanding the tremendous advances made by moving pictures, still remain indifferent to their appeal.

These millions for the most part, he contends, are the book lovers of the country who find their principal entertainment between the covers of the books of their favorite authors and who, when they do attend moving picture theatres to see these works screened, come away disappointed because of the liberties taken with the story to adapt it to the needs of the particular star featured in it.

The real solution of getting new picture audiences into the theatres, according to Mr. Hampton, is the production of the works of front rank authors in a manner that will bring their books to life. This can only be done, he insists, by placing all the emphasis upon a faithful picturization of the story, as a story, rather than upon the personality of the star.

This is the policy back of Mr. Hampton's new company, the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., and one which, in his opinion, marks a new era in the moving picture industry that will not only add a multitude of new converts to the screen, but will ultimately eliminate the much discussed "star salary evil."

"I think we have come into the market with a great big idea at the psychological moment," said Mr. Hampton. "This belief is confirmed by the flood of letters and telegrams which we have received from exhibitors, asking for release dates on our Zane Grey pictures. Undoubtedly the intelligent exhibitors of this country are worried by the ever-increasing cost of the 'star system' without any increase in their income to offset the higher rental charges for 'star system' pictures. One thoughtful exhibitor recently stated his case thus:

"'Three years ago I paid $35 a day for Mary Blank's pictures. I did good business on them and made some money. Then Mary Blank made a shift to another company—or at least to a company with another name—and I was notified that her price was raised to $65 a day. I wanted her pictures, but that jump in price would take all my profit. I kicked, and was promptly told to take it or leave it, because my competitor was willing to pay the higher price. Well, I had gotten my patrons educated to seeing Mary's picture and I did not want them to get into the habit of going to the other fellow's house. So I paid the $65. Now this year a new producer has Mary, and he wants to charge me $100 a day.

"'Not Mary alone, but every star who's worth anything, is being changed around, so that I am paying out-of-sight prices on every picture that has a big name. I used to make money when I had margin enough to leave something after paying film bills, operating expenses and interest or my investment, but there is very little left over now. These famous stars don't pull any more business now than they did when I got them at one-third or one-quarter their present prices.'

"Isn't that just about the nub of the present situation? The exhibitor is paying increases of three hundred to five hundred per cent and he is not increasing his audiences three to five per cent, because of the higher prices he is paying for the star's pictures.

"It is undoubtedly true that the audience of a given star reaches a certain point and does not get beyond that point. For example, let us take a city of one hundred thousand population. We find that in this city an exhibitor played to about 5,000 admissions on pictures of a leading star in 1917. The exhibitor had to pay an increase of one hundred per cent, or more, for the same star's pictures in 1918, but the size of his audience at these pictures remained at 5,000. In 1918 he is asked to again stand for a large increase, and he knows that he will not get any more than 5,000 people to come to see these pictures. His costs increase, but his attendance does not increase.

"The reason for this is easily found. A picture star builds up a following of 'Fans' and 'near-fans.' After a year or two of boosting about all the regular theatre-goers have seen the star in several pictures, and a process of sifting has taken place in the minds of the audience. Some people become 'fans' of this star, and some of another, but almost no new converts are made. No 'new blood' is added to the stream. This is one of the natural results of the so-called 'star system.' No matter how hard a star tried to vary his pictures, all his productions bear a marked family resemblance to each other. His personality—or her personality—dominates each picture. If it does not, his fans object, because they are drawn to the performance by the charm of that personality.

"Stage stars have no such handicaps. The stage star creates a part, and plays it for a year, or ten years. The picture star must appear half a dozen times a year, and in a year's time must draw more audiences than the stage star needs in several lifetimes. We must acknowledge the power of the screen star to accomplish such marvels of magnetism, but wonder-as they are, they do not help the exhibitor, who must have new audiences passing through his doors constantly.

"The exhibitor's problem is not alone to reach the 5,000 people who come to see pictures of Mary Blank or William Jones, or any other great star—the exhibitor must go deeper into his community and tap new sources of supply. He must get into his house five thousand or ten thousand new people—people who are not now in the habit of going to the 'movies.'

"We know these people exist. In our hypothetical town of one hundred thousand population there are probably ten thousand or fifteen thousand highly desirable folks who almost never go to pictures. Then there are more than this number of women and children who go to 'movies' once or twice a month, but could easily afford to go twice a week. (Some day producers will make their pictures so good that they cannot afford not to go twice a week.)

"Publishers have to dig into all these facts about the number of people who read newspapers, or magazines, or books, or go to theatres and motion picture shows. Publishers have to get these statistics in order to manage their circulation departments and also for the purpose of advising advertisers how to reach various classes of people. 'Social surveys' are almost unknown in the picture industry, and I am certain that the exhibitors need to know more about the facts that make up their communities.

"The Zane Grey Pictures Company was brought into existence to create new picture audiences.

"I wonder how many people realize the enormous public of this great author? The mere statistics concerning him are startling. I have recently obtained the figures from his American publishers, Harper & Bros., and Grosset & Dunlap. His books are now selling at the rate of more than two million copies a year. Grosset & Dunlap say that last year they were unable to get enough paper to fill their orders on Zane Grey novels. The demand is increasing so rapidly that I believe that a sale of three million copies per year will be reached before the end of this year.

"No man can state accurately the number of Americans who read the two million copies of Zane Grey books that are bought annually. The most conservative calculation places the number of readers at twenty-five million. It is from this vast body of intelligent active Americans that we propose to draw new picture audiences.

"More than half these people are not regular patrons of the movies. They prefer to stay at home and read. Why is it? I am afraid that here we have to lodge an indictment against the 'star system.' So long as stars are stars, then just that long it will be necessary to 'play up all the big stuff' to the star. No matter how much of an artist the author may be—and he must be a great artist to reach sales of two million books a year—his book is twisted and warped to fit the limitations or the vanity of the star."

Simplex Notes

Simplex Runs Nine Shows a Day

Samuel B. Rose, chief radio operator, aboard the Presidential Peace ship, "George Washington," was a visitor at the Simplex factory this week.

It will be remembered that there are three Simplex machines installed on this ship, two of them being used for the entertainment of the guests, and the other is located in the crew's quarters.

The purpose of Mr. Rose's visit was to make tentative arrangements for the purchase of still another Simplex. This will be necessary owing to the fact that arrangements are now being made for increasing the facilities to accommodate 1,700 additional troops on the "George Washington," thereby making her total carrying capacity 8,000 troops.

The program planned for will call for nine complete shows each day and necessitates the services of four projectionists who are members of the ship's crew and who have become thoroughly acquainted and efficient in the art of projection, under the capable guidance of Mr. Rose.

Simplex Now Making All Lens Sizes

From reports received from the Simplex officials, the Simplex lens plant, located at Morris Park, L. I., equipped by the Precision Machine Company during the high tide of war activities, is now manufacturing both projector and achromatic lenses in all commercial sizes.

It will be remembered that during the war, the Government requested all the leading projector manufacturers to eliminate all stereopticon lens other than sixteen, twenty and twenty-four-inch focus and all projector lens other than four, five and six-inch focus from the then outgoing shipments.

At the outset the activities of the Simplex lens plant were confined to the manufacture of the above sizes, but beginning last week all sizes, including fractional are being produced. The numerous Simplex distributors have been notified that from now on every Simplex equipment leaving the factory will include the Simplex-made lenses.

Leland Visits New York

S. B. Leland, the well-known Northern New England distributor for Simplex projectors, spent a very interesting week in this city and included in his itinerary a visit to the Simplex factory, being especially interested in the proposed incandescent lamp equipment, and in the lens factory now operated by the Precision Machine Company.

He reports that in Portland, Me., the Empire, Strand, Keith's, Casco and Elm theatres all use Simplex machines. He reports also that some new developments may be expected in regard to his Portland office, which will be used as a supply base for the State of Maine, leaving him the other to tend to the wants of the exhibitors in New Hampshire and Vermont.

Dalton Picture Opens to Success

Awyon Films Corporation announced this week that "Beyond the Law," the Emmett Dalton picture which was booked through the Awyon Film Corporation for the Academy of Music, Fox house in New York City, opened on Sunday and went over to one of the biggest hits in the history of the theatre.

There was a continuous line in front of the theatre all day and evening. The picture not only played to capacity, but business had to be turned away, and some hundred dollars or more refunded to those who had purchased tickets but were unable to get into the theatre.

During the day the feature played to at least ten thousand people, who were delighted not only with the fine drama, but were highly entertained by the personal appearance of Emmett Dalton.

The business done with "Beyond the Law" was even greater than the officials of the Aywon Film Corporation had hoped for. The picture is to be shown on the entire Fox Circuit.

Maxwell Joins Independent Sales Corporation

M. E. Maxwell, until recently connected with the sales and exploitation forces of United Picture Theatres, Inc., has joined the Independent Sales and Rothapfel forces as special representative for the Rothapfel Unit Programme. Mr. Maxwell left the New York office of Independent Sales, Monday for Denver, his first stop from here to the Coast. He will visit every important city from Denver to the Coast and will visit the Independent exchanges in this territory as special representative for Lynn S. Card, general sales manager.

The middle West is being covered by Leon J. Rubenstein and the Eastern territory by Charles F. Schwerin. Both of these representatives for the Rothapfel Programme have been out for two weeks, and reports coming from them to Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales, indicate a promising debut for the first Unit Program.

R. C. Bruce Strikes Out for Canada

Route Kept Secret by Educational to Forestall Competition — Sixth Annual Trip for Well Known "Explorer"

ROBERT C. BRUCE, scenic director of the Educational Films Corporation, leaves next Saturday for Quebec, to begin his annual trip to secure scenic material for future releases. Mr. Bruce's route is kept a trade secret at Educational headquarters, owing to the fact that on one of his previous expeditions, when various places he intended visiting were announced in the press, three or four other cameramen suddenly decided to visit the same vicinity. During the months that he is away, Mr. Bruce will journey into little frequented corners of the western hemisphere, and he has no desire to encounter any rival cameramen during the course of the trip.

This is Mr. Bruce's sixth annual trip and he plans to be away at least ten months. It is interesting to note that he has already evolved the scenarios for the scenics he will return with. Not only has he a definite idea just what he is going after, but the titles and even some of the subtitles for the releases are already written. For several weeks past Mr. Bruce has had recourse to various books dealing with outdoor life, and it is from these that he has formulated his campaign of action. This early preparation creates a new order in the producing of scenic subjects, as the majority of the men engaged in their manufacture merely go out and shoot the first fairly attractive scene.

Considerable interest is attached to Mr. Bruce's trip owing to its very secrecy. He plans to cover thirty-five thousand miles between now and next December, at least fifteen thousand of which will be journeyed over water. Members of the party besides himself, the cameraman and cook, will include an engineer, a captain, a boat and an automobile, and last but not least in any sense of the word, the Great Dane, the dog that has been a principal figure in many of the Bruce scenics. Over twenty-five pictures are planned.

Educational officials look forward to an unusual supply of scenics during the months to come, when Mr. Bruce ships his exposed strips of celluloid back to headquarters. In view of the fact that the trip has been so carefully planned, and that it is to take in out of the way places, their expectations may well be considered already realized.

Tells of Short Subjects Success

Capital Film Company Aims to Please the "Show Me" Exhibitors and Audiences—Declares One Run Brings Another

"THE public is made up of ninety parts of willingness and ten parts of Missouri—'show me.' And our success," states Clarence W. Phillips, manager of the Chicago branch of the Capital Film Company, "is due to our capability in satisfying the ten per cent."

"There is no use dancing a jig around the mulberry bush," says Mr. Phillips. "The exhibitors and fans alike are willing enough to sit through it, but they have witnessed so much of distributors jigging they are about ready to strike, if they are not soon shown something different and new."

"The real function of satisfaction is being different. Those of us who have been in the rut of believing that long-drawn-out features were essential to pleasing the theatre patron have had our sense of foresight sharpened by the advent of Capital short features, and their passing of the acid test."

"The acid test is screen test. It is not always easy to convince an exhibitor that the public does want short features—does want their entertainment served to them in snappy, concise stories full of pep and punch. But, one 'wild cat' booking of a Capital picture invariably means a steady contract for all of the Capital program. This is why we have adopted the slogan, 'once you run one—you wil lrun 'em all.'" East shortly.

Mr. Phillips, like all of the other managers of the Capital exchanges, is of the opinion that the new policy of "foremost stars in short features" is so much the trend of the times that there is no stopping Capital on its march to success. The enthusiasm of the exhibitors themselves has imbued the various branch managers with a spirit that nothing can stop them now.

It is rumored that the next few weeks will disclose some Capital announcements to the exhibitors that will prove both startling and sensational.

"The exhibitors have been mighty good to us—the trade has been good to us," states Ike Schlank, president of the Capital Film Company, "and just as quickly as all of our present arrangements are put in concrete form, we shall be able to announce with sincere pleasure and gratitude how we are going to be able to reciprocate.

Schlesinger Joins Oriental Company

Leon Schlesinger has severed his connections with the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation to represent the Oriental Trading Company, as American buyer. The Oriental Trading Company operates in the Dutch East Indies and the Strait Settlements.

Karel Hymans, an executive of the Oriental Trading Company, came to New York in February to select an American representative and met Mr. Schlesinger while negotiating pictures at Inter-Ocean, while negotiating pictures at Inter-Ocean, of which firm Mr. Hymans has long been a customer.

Director Miller Joins Frank Hall

Is to Produce Series of Special Productions Beginning Immediately —Six to Be Made During the Year

CHARLES MILLER, who first came into prominence as a director with the Ince forces during the Fine Arts days and who since that time has given to the screen some of its best dramatic features, has been signed by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, to produce a series of special productions under the corporate name, Charles Miller Productions, Inc. Mr. Miller is president and Mr. Hall is vice-president and general manager as well as one of the directors of the corporation. Work will be started next week on the first of this series of Miller productions, at the Bacon-Backer studio which has been engaged by Mr. Hall for the Miller company. The Miller productions will be distributed by Independent Sales Corporation through its Film Clearing House exchanges. Mr. Miller plans to produce six specials during the current year. The first of the series will be a screen version of a popular novel by one of our best contemporary writers, and will present an all-star cast.

Charles Miller, directing Norma Talmadge in pictures for Select release

Since the days when the five-reel productions were the exception and not the rule, Mr. Miller has held the megaphone over the silent drama in its creation. And during the time intervening since the days when only a Griffith would attempt a longer feature than two and three reels, Mr. Miller has been in the studio, rising with the rapid strides taken by the silent art and gaining by experience all the finesse that is reflected in such examples of perfect artistry in production and direction as "The Ghosts of Yesterday," conceded by the press and public to be the most popular and finished picture in which Norma Talmadge has ever appeared. His ability to bring out and place in prominence the simplicity and homely character of star and story has never been more convincingly impressed than by his production of "The Sawdust Ring," starring Bessie Love, which picture is said to have played to one of the biggest weeks the Rialto ever recorded. His production of "The Flame of the Yukon," starring Dorothy Dalton, was one of the biggest successes of its time, and is reported to have had extended runs in nearly every instance owing to the public demand.

Mr. Miller, in making the announcement of this independent venture, said:

"What has been done toward advancing the silent drama as an art, everyone knows. I hope I have contributed something to this advancement. I have tried during the course of my direction to bring out the worthwhile phases of the drama that has become the biggest individual entertainment medium of the time, and now that I have free rein and can put into actual practice my ideas of production, I feel that my venture will be a success.

William A. Brady Invades South America

IN connection with the announcement by William A. Brady of the sale of "Stolen Orders" and "Bought and Paid For" for Brazil to Morris Winik of Rio de Janeiro, comes some interesting information with regard to the present condition of the South American market.

Due to the war and the inability to secure transportation to South America for foreign-made film, and the resulting opening of a rich market for American pictures, prompted Mr. Brady to send to South America J. Parker Reed, who has an experience extending over many years in that field. Mr. Reed is now in Buenos Aires placing the Brady pictures, among them "Stolen Orders," "The Whip," and "Bought and Paid For."

Now that the influenza epidemic, which it is understood was far more prevalent and disastrous in Brazil and Argentina than here, is past and conditions are again normal, it is possible to sell American film to South American exhibitors at substantial figures. The prices received by Mr. Brady for "Stolen Orders" and "Bought and Paid For," for example, are said to be clearly indicative of that fact.

There the exhibitor collects not once but several times during the course of his show. Instead of one flat admission charge, the South American exhibitor runs his business on a time basis. At stated intervals ushers pass through the audience taking toll, and there is no waiting over to see the second show without payment in advance.

Signs for Educationals

Manager F. J. Fegan, of the Standard Film Corporation, St. Louis' representative of the Educational Films Corporation, in a recent letter advises the New York headquarters that the West End Lyric Theatre has signed for all the Educational releases, and that they are booked solid to the end of June. The Down Town Lyric Theatre, under the same management, is also playing Educational subjects. In addition to these two houses, Mr. Fegan reports that the Fox Liberty Theatre, the Grand Opera House, the Empress Theatre, the Pageant Theatre, the Shaw Theatre, the New Delmar Theatre, and other representative houses are using Educational service.

Four Thousand Programs Mailed by Exhibitor

As manager of the Paradise theatre, Bronx, New York, J. Silverman is a firm believer in program advertising. He is also manager of the Reeland Publishing Company, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, printers of picture theatre programs, and was always a great enthusiast over his product.

When he assumed the management of the Paradise theatre in February, he immediately set out to see what the program could do for his theatre.

A mailing list was secured covering 4,000 names of possible patrons in the neighborhood of the Paradise theatre, and a twenty-page program mailed to each person every week. In addition to this method of advertising, throw-aways and window display cards are used to attract the passers-by. In result of the advertising, it enabled him to increase his admission price from eleven to seventeen cents.

This is Mr. Silverman's first experience as an exhibitor, and in less than two months under his management it is declared that he has increased the box-office receipts two hundred and thirty per cent.

Gets Scenes at Bottom of Ocean

Maurice Tourneur's newest production, "The White Heather," which will have its national premiere at a big New York theater within a few weeks, presents what are said to be the first motion picture scenes actually directed by a producer at the bottom of the sea.

The big punch of "The White Heather" is a fight between the hero and the villain in their deep sea diving suits on the ocean floor. The fight to the death occurs upon the hulk of a sunken yacht while sharks and weird sub-sea animal life dart back and forth in front of the camera. The struggle ends when one of the men cuts his own air hose by mistake.

The staging of these scenes was made possible by the unusual invention of the Williamson Brothers, a device first employed in making "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea" and "The Submarine Eye." The perfected invention was operated by the Williamsons off San Pedro Harbor in the Pacific at unusual expense for Mr. Tourneur.

Capacity Business for "Once to Every Man"

According to Sidney B. Lust of Super Film Attractions, Inc., at Washington, D. C., the Frohman production of "Once to Every Man" has gone over big in that territory.

Mr. Lust wires that it played the entire week at the Leader theatre in Washington to capacity business in spite of many days of bad weather. He states that "Once to Every Man" was highly endorsed by every newspaper in Washington and that bookings are coming in fast from exhibitors in that territory.

It is described as truly a red-blooded American production which should obtain wonderful results in any theatre anywhere.

Outing-Chester pictures are bringing on the animals in the most interesting and entertaining manner. On the left we see Jumbo flapping an ear, and we don't blame him when we see the rare African materialized myth pictured in the center panel. It is called the "Greater Kudu," but is quick to respond to any name. The two African buffalo on the extreme right seem to be getting up their temper for the daily rage against the fearless cameraman

Yokel Joins Briggs Pictures, Incorporated

Alex Yokel, a well-known figure in the picture industry has been elected vice-president and secretary of Briggs Pictures, Inc. This company is manufacturing one-reel comedies based on the cartoons of Briggs appearing in the New York Tribune and 125 leading American newspapers. Mr. Yokel will also act as general manager of the company. Headquarters have been opened at 30 East Forty-second street and production is going on at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle. The first comedy released by this company, "A S'prise Party 'n Ever'thing," is finishing a successful week at the Strand theatre. Managing Director Plunkett of this big Broadway house has arranged to show one of these comedies every other week for the next year.

Arrow Buys Thanhouser Studio

The Thanhouser property at New Rochelle, New York, was sold at public auction Thursday, and was bought by W. E. Shellenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation and Crawford Livingston, a banker at 51 Exchange Place.

The Thanhouser Company was one of the first independent producing companies organized after the split up of the "trust." The heads of the Thanhouser Company were the organizers and stockholders of the Mutual Film Company.

At the offices of the Arrow Film Corporation W. E. Shellenberger stated that as yet he had not formed any plans for the operating of the plants at New Rochelle, but that an announcement would be made shortly. No price was mentioned.

Sells Rights to Security Pictures

The Aywon Film Corporation, through Nathan Hirsh, its president, announces that they have sold the territorial rights to their Security series of pictures for the states of West Virginia, Pennsylvania, District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia.

State right buyers have shown a live interest in these pictures and as a result territory is being disposed of rapidly.

Inter-Ocean Film Records Its Busiest Week

PEACE is reflecting itself on the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, 218 West Forty-second street, New York, who have just had the busiest week, in point of contracts in the company's existence.

Gus S. Schlesinger placed the output of World Pictures in South Africa, Dutch East Indies, and Strait Settlements. The Graphic feature, "Echo of Youth," was sold for Argentine, Paraguay and Uruguay.

This feature together with "When Men Betray" and "Ashes of Love," additional Graphic productions, was placed by Mr. Schlesinger for Brazil. The special feature, "Trilby," was placed in Belgium and the Belgian colonies. On the comedy side, Black Diamonds, Vims and the "Charlie" Cartoons, were negotiated for Argentine, Paraguay and Uruguay, by Mr. Schlesinger.

Ricardo Castro, of the Inter-Ocean sales department, negotiated the Florence Reed feature, "Wives of Men," for Brazil, Spain and Portugal. He also placed the Selexart subject "Blue Blood," and some comedies in Spain and Portugal.

The three Graphic features, "Echo of Youth," Ashes of Love," and "When Men Betray" were placed by Mr. Castro in Chile, Peru, Bolivia and Ecquador. The special feature, "The Transgressor," made by the producers of "The Victim," also was sold by him in the last-named territories also.

Accessories Manager Eugene H. Kaufman has returned from a trip to San Francisco, where he terminated several contracts for Speer carbons.

Louis Brock also returned from a tour of Central America and Cuba, in the course of which he visited leading exhibitors as well as exchanges handling the Inter-Ocean product.

President Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean, announces the acquisition of Edwin Hayden Hibben, as technical director, in charge of the film and title department of that organization. Mr. Hibben comes from the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company in Chicago, where he spent three years as a technical specialist.

President Cromelin announces that the new projection room at Inter-Ocean Building is now running regularly and that I. Penzer and D. B. Shepard have been placed in charge of showings to foreign buyers. It is believed to be the largest projection room in New York devoted exclusively to showings for field export.

"Birth of Race" Gets Many Territory Offers

THE RENCO FILM COMPANY, of Chicago, has announced to exhibitors throughout the country and to state rights buyers the new photoplay, "The Birth of a Race."

In an announcement the company states that before the picture was even properly assembled the State of Pennsylvania was sold to a Pittsburgh company which in turn, after showings in Chicago and Pittsburgh, re-sold it. The profit said to have been realized when the picture was re-sold was reported as $45,000.

As soon as state rights were available, Michigan was sold for $32,000, Iowa was sold for $27,500, and a half of Ohio for $30,000, it is announced.

Several big deals are now said to be pending, and numerous offers have been made on practically every state in the Union.

"The Birth of a Race" was first presented in the Blackstone theatre, Chicago, and the Chicago engagement ran into three months, followed by engagements in a few cities at the legitimate theatres.

Joseph Carl Breil, who composed the music for other film productions is the composer of the score for "The Birth of a Race."

The scenes were taken in Florida, New York and New Jersey under the direction of John W. Noble. The photography is by Herbert O. Carleton. Art titles are from the studio of Ferdinand Pinney Earle.

Among the many who contributed important characterizations to this production are: Jane Grey, Anna Lehr, Anita Cortez, George Le Guerre, Philip Van Loan, Charles Graham, Ben Hendricks, Alice Gale, Doris Doscher, Dick Lee, Edwin Boring, David Wall and Belle Seacomb.

The theme of this drama is the story of peace, of democracy, of brotherhood. It traces the history of world-advancement from the Garden of Eden to the dawn of a Peace,

"Yankee Doodle" in Los Angeles

Mack Sennett-Hiram Abrams Picture Blocks Traffic in West Coast Town—Said to Be Sennett's Biggest Laugh

MACK SENNETT'S war time farcical satire, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," recently purchased for America by Sol L. Lesser, was the attraction the week of April 5 at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles. It blocked traffic, kept almost a continual line to the box office, filled the streets on either side for blocks with automobiles, and played to capacity from the opening performance, Sunday, March 30, until the latter part of the week (the time the story is written).

There never has been a film come out of the Mack Sennett fun plant on Allesandro street that contains so many laughs and thrills per reel as does this five-reeler starring Bothwell Brown, the female impersonator from the vaudeville stage. The supporting cast has many of the Sennett celebrities doing either a bit in their inimitable way, or carrying one of the main roles. The array of talent in this picture can best be judged by the fact that Charley Murray does a bit, appearing as the Irish prisoner in the Hun camp who said "the Irish gave the Germans hell at the Somme." He is threatened with death unless he takes the German oath, and after this is administered comes back with "didn't them Irish give us Germans hell at the Somme." Old stuff it may be said but put in a new way. Chester Conklin is to be seen as one of the unimportant guards, and Ben Turpin does double duty as sentry and official taster for the Kaiser.

Bothwell Brown, in the play, is an American aviator who goes to the Kaiser's headquarters in an airplane to secure information for the U. S. Government. He resorts to practices of his college days when he impersonated women in plays. In his disguise he flirts with the Crown Prince, Von Hindenberg, then infatuates the Kaiser, steals plans of the war and escapes to the roof of the palace, from which point he sends report signals, using the semaphore code, to a scarecrow in a cornfield nearby. The wireless is put into action, and the scene shifts to the American lines where things begin to happen. An airplane goes to the rescue of the American aviator, who is still on the top of the castle. He is carried away by holding to a rope suspended from the machine, but not until after the war plane had dropped bombs through the palace roof, destroying the Kaiser's bathtub, which flooded the conference room at the moment occupied by the Kaiser, Von Hindenberg and his entire staff of advisors.

Ford Sterling wore the silver helmet of the Kaiser throughout the subject, and this is certainly the greatest piece of characterization this well known actor has brought to the screen. Mal St. John, who tips the beam at 120 pounds and is six feet three in height, was everything that the cartoonists have pictured the Crown Prince to be. Bert Roach appears as the war dog, Von Hindenberg, who gives a most desirable presentation of this undesirable role. The important part of the Kaiserina was well entrusted to Eva Thatcher, and Marie Prevost is seen as a Belgian girl retained in Hunland to perform the work of men who are at war. The star, Bothwell Brown, gave a most worthy and fascinating impersonation of an oriental dancer, and vamps right into the front line of screen vamps in his debut on the screen.

Mack Sennett, Who Made "Yankee Doodle In Berlin"

Richard Jones, who directed the making of this film, has added another masterpiece to his credit that will no doubt live as long as his previous release, "Mickey." He has crowded the subject full of stunts and gags that do not interfere with the speed of the continuity nor cause a noticeable breach. He has made a ery pleasing composite of satire, melodrama and slapstick with a love interest for the poor Belgian girl that gives the screen a new and refreshing quality in production.

Much is to be said of the presentation given by Sol L. Lesser which he plants to use in all parts of the country. By arrangement with Mack Sennett, Mr. Lesser has engaged all diving girls used in Sennett Comedies, and will organize a number of choruses of six or eight, each to appear wherever the film is presented. The Los Angeles chorus was made up of Marvel Rae, Alice Mason, Molly McGowan, Roxie McGowan, Alice Hansen and Elsie Warham, and after a week of one night stands in small towns of Southern California, came to their home town and performed like professionals, giving a song act with dance numbers that proved highly pleasing. One of the unique features are the tableaus of the diving girls in costume. A motion picture lens is reproduced for the setting, and through the aperture of this the girls are seen. This setting was made by the Edwin H. Flagg Scenic studios at Los Angeles. As a special attraction for the program Mr. Lesser was successful in securing Bothwell Brown and his troupe of dancers for an oriental scene which closes the program.

"Colonel Bridau" to Have N. Y. Trade Showing

The Entente Film Corporation of Philadelphia announces that in the very near future "Colonel Bridau," their special six-reel production, will be shown to the trade in New York City.

As the exact dates will soon be announced broadcast it is expected that many state rights buyers as well as leading exhibitors will be present. A great many buyers who are interested in the picture have asked to see it, and because a number of these buyers are in the east, the company has decided to show at a Broadway theatre.

"Colonel Bridau" is the first of a series of foreign-made pictures to be distributed in this country on a state rights basis. Another picture of the big type will be offered the trade after the sale of "Colonel Bridau" has been completed. The management is confident that the balance of territory still open will be sold with rapidity because of their attractive offer to the state rights buyer.

This picture was made in Italy and is said to be enacted by some of Europe's most famous actors and actresses, many of whom have been long identified with Madame Sarah Bernhardt. The acting is said to be excellent and many scenes of historical value have been portrayed at an enormous cost to the producers.

The story was taken from one of Balzac's most famous novels, "La Rabouilleuse," and over a million copies of the story are said to be in circulation in this country.

Jury Gets British Rights to "White Heather"

As American representatives of Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., distributors of film in the British Isles, Robertson-Cole Company announces that it has just secured for the British distributors the rights to "The White Heather," famous Drury Lane melodrama, and the first picture produced by Maurice Tourneur since he directed "Sporting Life."

The sum paid for "The White Heather" is said to be one of the largest ever expended for the British rights to any motion pictures, and it is asserted that the purchase of this feature for the account of Jury's shows the earnestness of the intention of this firm to acquire the most pretentious specials produced on this side of the Atlantic.

I. Cobe Joins Hirsh

I. Cobe, formerly with the Pioneer Film Corporation, announces that he is now connected with Nathan Hirsh, of the Aywon Film Corporation.

Mr. Cobe is now touring New York State with a big line of feature attractions.

Equipment Service

BUY ADVERTISED EQUIPMENT

When you buy goods buy advertised goods.

It is easy to say "Just as good as," but they are not.

Remember a manufacturer who advertises has a reputation to keep up.

His goods must be the "BEST POSSIBLE."

"Just as good as"

means there must be something "phoney" somewhere—

Something which evidently will not stand

SPEED
WHEN YOU NEED IT

Accuracy Efficiency

YOUR rush hours are your money makers! Cash in on them! Keep that line at the ticket office moving and let your patrons in.

A Lightning Changer will put SPEED into your service. It will pay out change so fast that no patron need even pause—he just slaps down his money, takes his change, and moves on. There'll be no blockade at your doors, no people kept out in the cold or perhaps impatiently deciding to go to the show around the corner instead.

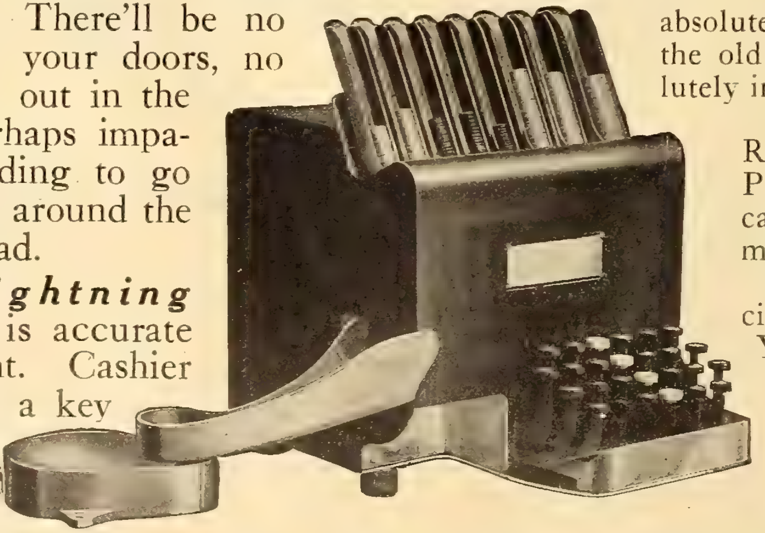
The Lightning Changer is accurate and efficient. Cashier just presses a key and change jingles out into a metal cup, where it's easy to pick it up even with gloves on. No counting of change; no money slipping between the cashier's fingers; no annoying and delaying mistakes.

The Palace Theatre, Milwaukee, writes: "The Changers are in constant use from 1 p.m. till 10 p.m. . . . we handle an average of 50,000 people weekly—the changer enables us to handle crowds with a speed absolutely impossible under the old method—it is absolutely indispensable."

Two are in use at the Riviera and two in the Pantheon, two of Chicago's largest and finest moving picture houses.

Write for descriptive circular to Dept. 25.

You need the Lightning Changer in your business TO-DAY, if you want to give UP-TO-DATE service.



LIGHTNING COIN CHANGER CO., 34-36 W. Lake Street, CHICAGO

Advertised Goods vs. Unadvertised Goods

ONE of the prominent national advertisers says, "You can teach a parrot to say 'Just as good.'" You can, and like the parrot the salesman has adopted the same slogan—"Just as good."

The customer comes into the supply house and asks for a certain kind of equipment. He is told "We do not carry that line but here is something which accomplishes the same end—It is just as good."

Is it? Perhaps; but the odds are about ninety-nine to one that it is inferior in efficiency—wearing power—construction and in every other way. The purchaser has the odds against him to such an extent that he can be almost positive before he makes the purchase that he will be stung and that his money has been thrown away.

Exceptions? Yes, they prove the rule. You may hit the one shot out of the hundred—but the odds are so big against you that the wise man never falls.

Why are advertised goods better?

The fundamental reason is that they are exposed to view and thrown into the face of the individual before he is really in the market. They start the man thinking who may become the purchaser. They give him time to make inquiries into the efficiency of the product he has seen advertised. He asks users all about it. He tests it himself. He makes sure of its reliability and the reliability of the manufacturer. He studies the possibilities of the added results which its purchase will mean to him. If these prove up he is ready to buy.

The advertised goods started him thinking and the investigation made him a purchaser. He then goes to the dealer—his dealer—and asks for the equipment in question.

"No, we don't carry that line, but here is something just as good."

"Is it advertised?"

"No."

The firm making the substitute does not want to be exposed to a too close-up scrutiny. They want to make a quick sale. The company's reputation may not warrant investigating. It may be put out as a substitute with a cut price.

Remember when a thing is cut beyond reason, or is pushed out without the right backing there must be something wrong somewhere.

The manufacturer who advertises stands behind his goods—he gives a guarantee which is more than a scrap of paper. His word, which is his advertisement, is as good as his bond. He makes good. He cannot afford to do otherwise. Should he fall down, his reputation goes with him and his goods are put on the black list. His good will and friends are gone and he goes out of business.

The need of a good business reputation to any manufacturer is evident. It is his first and only real asset. It means success or failure. The wise company comes out to the trade and states its platform. It makes its statements to the trade where they cannot be overlooked and stakes their reputation and future on these statements.

The company which advertises is the one which starts the trade thinking in terms of its product and keeps it thinking along the same line. When the purchase is to be made, this product at once becomes the standard of excellence and nothing else should do.

"Buy advertised goods," is the correct slogan.

First—Because they are backed by a firm which is not afraid of publicity.

Second—Because the guarantee of this firm means something.

Third—Because these goods have become the standard of excellence through their publicity and use.

Fourth—Because the goods advertised must have made good; otherwise they would have been taken off the market and thrown into the discard for only goods which make good and stand up can afford to be advertised continually.

Equipment Operating — Projection — Questions Answered

Results of the Prize Contest

THE readers of the Equipment section of the Motion Picture News will remember the prize contest started October, 1918. There were four classes under which projectionists could compete, viz:

(1) On the design, location and equipment of the Modern Projection Room.

(2) The operation, maintenance and efficiency of portable generating outfits including a description of the outfit or outfits considered.

(3) Wiring Plans and Specifications for a Two Motion Projection Room Installation including any other projection apparatus or complementary electrical appliances found desirable.

(4) Special devices used in the Projection room.

For the best article on each of the above subjects the authors were to be paid $10 in cash. For the second best $5 was to be awarded, and the authors of any other articles published were to receive $3.00 for their contributions.

The scarcity of manuscripts proved what we already knew, that projectionists were handier with the intermittent and arc than with the pen and pencil. Nevertheless several creditable articles came to the Technical Editor's desk, articles which we are sure will be appreciated by other projectionists everywhere. We take a great amount of pleasure, therefore, in awarding the following prizes, there being no "ties" in any of the classes.

Class No. 1. First prize—A. D. Hotaling, De Land, Florida. Second prize—D. C. Burkholder, O'Yen, Alta., Canada.

Class No. 2. No articles received.

Class No. 3. No articles received.

Class No. 4. First prize—I. C. Mazuise, Macomb, Ill.

Mr. Hotaling's article which won the first prize under Class 1, will be published in next week's issue. Following that, the remaining manuscripts will appear weekly until the prize winners have all been printed.

After publication, the editors want to receive letters criticizing the methods and plans written up by the authors of the various articles. In this way only can the best points of every scheme be emphasized and the worst parts brought to light.

Once Again—The Small Town Operator and the Union

Brooklyn, March 26, 1919.

To the Editor of Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue, New York City, N. Y.
Projection Dept.

My Dear Sir:

In the March issue of the NEWS I had the pleasure of reading an article on "Small Town Operators and the Union"—vs.—Bro. Rosecrans.

I must say that this article was of great interest to me and therefore, take the liberty to answer same, giving both my idea of "Union" and the "Small Town Operators."

First, to begin with the "Union" question: I wish to inform Brother Rosecrans that I am a city operator making a New York City (Union) salary—not wages, and a proud member of an independent organization, incorporated. I will say why I am proud and that is, if it were not for my being a member of this union, I might be making 12 per—plus abuse.

I'm an old timer, having been in the game a good many years and thru my past experience I have been taught the good and welfare of carrying a union card.

It has always done me more good than harm; I've always got what I asked for. But—remember—I had to deliver the goods, and I defy any scab to have the least idea that there is no such thing as benefits in organized labor, or that it is a farce.

Had the "small town operator" a union card in his pocket, perhaps, he'd be getting his rights.

Here's a case of "What good is a Union?"

About seven years ago I was working in Jersey City. There was no union then. I was working a house for $21.00, six days a week, and only 5½ hours daily. Six blocks away was the boundary line between West Hoboken and Jersey City. Of course, in the city one needs to have a card to operate, whereas in the outlying towns no license is required. So, in the outside town, I noticed that the managers employed boys to operate their machines. When I say boys I mean those of fourteen to fifteen years of age. Some were so small they had to stand on soap boxes to look out of the port holes. These soap-box-operators were getting from $8.00 to $9.00 per week, seven days, ten hours a day. Then our organization was formed, known as the I. A. T. S. E. of the U. S. and Canada.

This organization tho still in its infancy has done wonderful work. What I mean by wonderful work is, that the $14.00 man is now making his $30.00 and the soap-box-operator has vanished.

I could write much more "friend brother Rosecrans" but will first look up March 1st issue and see what Mr. Goldie had to say.

But let me say this much, that anyone who would work for $12.00 per week, is worth no more, or else he would not be working for such a small amount.

The man who knows he is worth more won't work for such a small amount.

Demand your price if you know you are good; if not, study until you can deliver the goods, then make your demands.

I've had the pleasure of placing a number of boys in the game, and during my teachings I always tell them to "Use the brains God gave them" and every boy today through following out and abiding by my motto, has proved a success and the can now stand up and make their demands.

I trust, Brother Rosecraus, that what I've had to say will be of interest to our friend (Goldie) and approved by you.

So let me hear from someone if he be a union man and tell us what good his organization has done for him.

Very truly yours,
JAS. ANDREA MERKLEIN.

They Have the Same Troubles in England

(Reprinted from the Kinematograph, of London.)

IF you care to look round and make inquiries, you will find in a great many halls the operator gets the large amount of 35s. to 2 pounds—and not for a week of 22 hours!—but he has to be there at 10 a. m. to clean machines, examine films, clean out his box, and so forth, so that he has to be a tradesman, and work for wages under a tradesman's rates; finishes about 1:30 for dinner, and starts again at 5:30 to get ready for his show; and in a great many cases his box is worse than the nether regions for heat. I should like to see the S. C. E. A. make a move and see that the operator is properly paid for his share of the performance, by making a minimum wage, and not waiting until some agitator comes along to cause trouble in our business, the same as happened in other trades during the last few years.

There are lots of things I think the minimum wage would remedy. It would stop managers employing men for nights who work during the day at other jobs and do not care how they send their films back to the renter—viz., covered with oil, joins made with sticking plaster, safety pins, pins, stamp, paper, etc. It would give the management the perfect right to order his operator to go through his films foot by foot to ensure no breaks at the performance, to see that the operator was not careless with his oil, oiling the films instead of his machine. I honestly believe it would do away with inexperienced people and give encouragement to those who take up the trade to become perfect, thus doing away with fires. I think you will agree with me that it is almost impossible for a fire to take place in a box with so many perfect fire-proof machines on the market, unless it is gross carelessness on the part of the "Man at the Helm."

Springfield, Mass., Local 186, Banquets Returning Service Men

A BANQUET was given by M. P. M. O. Local 186, Springfield, Mass., at the Haynes Hotel March 24th, 1919, in honor of the following members who have been in the service:

Frank E. Fennessy
Frank Walsh
Ben B. Johnson
George Cox
W. E. Cook

When the local sent out the call, 100 per cent of the members came and with them their honorary life member, Charles E. Schneider, who traveled all the way from New York. An elaborate menu was followed by an address by Pres. Louis Lambert, who then turned the rest of the evening over to Bro. John Gatelee as toastmaster. How much decorum the members upheld during the whole evening is proven by the fact that the invited inspectors of the Massachusetts District Police, under whose jurisdiction the boys work, stayed until the last toast, which was delivered by the poet laureate of the local, Bro. Edwin Webber, and which went to the heart of all who were present.

By courtesy of Mr. Gordon Wrighter, the veteran manager of Poli's Palace theatre of Springfield, who enjoyed the evening very much, the boys had the pleasure of listening to some of the most prominent talent in vaudeville, Mr. Green singing "Silver Threads Amongst the Gold," and other proper songs fitting the occasion. Bro. W. A. Lewis looked after the individual wants of all during the entire evening.

Not the least important part of the affair was the printed program. (A copy received by Motion Picture News is hereby acknowledge to be a cleverly made-up article.) Moreover, the spirit present throughout the preparations and participation of banquet was one that can well be imitated by other locals.

Wanted! Comments on This Idea

Motion Picture News.
Gentlemen:

It gives me great pleasure reading the letters of Brother Harry Schlegel and others concerning my punch hole article which appeared the latter part of February in the News. I have considered this matter carefully and I think if we could get the cooperation of, say, one thousand operators (your N. A. M. L.) we will and can remedy our present film condition. Why not furnish your members with blanks something like this:

....................Film Exchange.

Gentlemen:

I was compelled to cut out.................frames

trade number from your print.................on account of punch holes

Misframes..............Condition of film..............

Remarks ....

....

City and Date

and have them send them in, together with the film cut out of the show, to the Exchange Manager. If a manager got a bunch of frames and blanks every day, it wouldn't take him very long to realize that this waste can and must be stopped. But here's another thing which ought to be considered: it's Oil. Experts say "one drop of oil for each bearing." I am sorry to say that eight small town theatres out of ten have more oil on their machines than in their bearings. How can a fellow return a print clean if he projects it in an oil-smeared projector?

Now just look around yourself in the smaller houses in smaller towns where probably a kid in short trousers tries to run the machine, and I know you will agree with me. I am very well acquainted with the smaller houses around my part of the country and if some of these Exchange Managers would visit the booths they would faint.

I think that the majority of the operators are willing to reduce our film waste, but the producers and Exchange Managers have got to give us a helping hand for the good of our own industry. You have read my letter to the Pathe Exchange. I paid three cents out of my own pocket, but I doubt if those people thank me for my suggestion. But I would have been satisfied if the concern had enforced new rules in regard to the murdering of new prints, but they didn't.

I sincerely hope that you may consider this matter and that we all may be able to pull together for prints free of punch holes. It will be a hard fight, but we've got to get exchanges to realize that what we do is in their interest.

Alfred B. Werhan,
I. A. T. S. E, 351.

Society of Motion Picture Engineers

THE coming meeting of the Society to be held at the Hotel Adelphia in Philadelphia on April 14, 15 and 16 promises to be the largest yet held.

Already forty members have signified their intention to be on hand and have made reservations.

The schedule of papers, etc., to be presented promises to be most instructive and the discussion which will ensue should be of added interest and will repay those who are planning to attend.

The Entertainment Committee report a most interesting schedule for the amusement of those present, when not otherwise engaged with more serious matters.

It is hoped that those who have not already made reservations will do so direct with the hotel as the committee in charge of the meeting want as near a one hundred per cent attendance as possible.

New Projection Room for Private Exhibitors

THE INTER OCEAN FILM CO. recently opened an excellently equipped and finely furnished exhibition room at their New York office, 216 West 42nd street, to be used solely for the showing of films to export buyers.

The room which is about 20 x 60 feet is equipped with a Gardner Velvet Gold Fibre screen on which a 7½ x 10 picture is thrown. A pair of purple velvet curtains passing in front of the screen are motor-controlled from the operator's booth by a single pole, double throw switch.

Two Type S Simplex machines in the projecting room, equipped with several small devices, allow the operator to obtain excellent change-over effects with a minimum of trouble. Rewinding is taken care of in a separate but adjacent compartment. Ample space has been provided in the projection room to permit easy access between and around machines. In order to prevent operating noise from disturbing the quiet of the exhibition hall, the ports are covered with a good quality of plate glass.

Whenever it becomes desirable to have the projection altered in any way, use is made of a phone connecting the exhibition room with a head-set worn by the operator. In this way, instructions may be issued without disturbing the remainder of the audience.

The installation of this exhibition room was carried out by Mr. I. Penser, assisted by Mr. Shepherd, both of whom are experienced projectionists and capable of securing the best possible effects from every film.

PHILIP FRAHM, of Storm Lake, Ia., says:

I read in the issue of February 15, 1919, MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the letter in regard to film written by A. B. Werlan. Enclosed you will find a few punch holes taken from a new print of Vitagraph, also a loose splice. Who is to blame for this? Who else would be but the exchange?

Here is another incident. I ran a Pathe feature which had loose splices. I fixed up at least ten of them that pulled loose while inspecting film before running. Even then I had five stops on poor splices, some of them two sprocket holes wide.

I have written to some exchanges, but they do not even answer my letters. They must think we know nothing. There is scarcely an operator in the small towns receiving less than $25.00 per week. The smaller towns demand projection as well as the larger ones. They must give the people comfort and a picture that is steady and easy on the eyes.

There was a film salesman here recently and saw a punch in the operating room. He asked me what I used it for. I told him it was one the operator before me had for some use or other; I suppose to use as a change-over signal. He thought that was a good idea.

I only said, "What do you mean? Does your company want their film punched full of holes. I just removed ninety-six punch holes from a six reeler here last summer"

Reply: Mr. Frahm's note needs little comment. There are operators—no, they can't be projectionists—who use a punch without a thought of what they are doing. Bpt, the exchanges are making no effort to catch the guilty ones There is an old saying that "A salesman typifies the house he works for." If the salesman mentioned by Mr. Frahm is of this style, all of us can understand why film is too often received in unworkable condition.

Dear Sirs:

In reading the Motion Picture News I came across your advertisement therein concerning film damaging, as that is a common practice here in South Africa. I am asking you to supply me with a membership card that I may set an example to some of these operators in this town and be able to stop this evil practice. It is shameful the way in which we receive films here.

Making Advertising Slides

It is often required to reproduce both reading matter and a photograph on the same slide, as in slide announcements for motion picture theatres. It is unsatisfactory to copy direct without any modification, the result being either weak lettering with good reproduction on the photograph, or strong lettering and a contrasty photograph with clogged up shadows.

In order to obtain accurate tone rendering in the photograph and at the same time get good contrast in the line portions, proceed in either of the following ways:

1. Assuming that the photograph and reading matter are arranged on the same card, when copying, use a Seed 23 plate or Eastman Commercial film, and adjust the exposure and developer to obtain good tone reproduction of the photograph, ignoring for the time being the line work. When dry, block out the photograph portion of the negative with Eastman Transparent Lantern Slide Varnish, and when dry, "cut" or slightly reduce with a mixture of potassium ferricyanide and hypo or with the Eastman Reducer, wash thoroughly, and then intensify.

If the slide is now printed on a Seed Lantern or Standard Regular plate, the shadow detail in the photograph will be retained providing the negative in the first place was given a full exposure.

2. Instead of proceeding as above, the photograph and reading matter may be copied separately, using a process plate for the line work and Commercial film for the photograph, adjusting the size of the latter so that it just fits into the space allotted for it on the glass negative. After making a positive from the negative of the reading matter so as to obtain white lettering on a black ground, affix film to the negative and use this as the master negative in the usual way.

A suitable adhesive for affixing film negatives to glass is made by dissolving gelatine in its own weight of glacial acetic acid. Apply a little of the mixture to the corners of the film, press into contact and allow to stand for thirty minutes, when the composite negative will be ready for printing.

3. A third method consists in printing the line work on one slide and the photograph on a second slide, the two being bound together face to face, thus eliminating the necessity of a cover glass.

In this case it is better to print by contact in order to insure accurate register. A master positive is prepared of the reading matter (reversed left to right) and a master negative of the photograph, the size of the latter being such that it just fits within the clear space on the positive.

In case a quantity of slides are to be made of the same subject this method is preferred. (Reprinted from "Lantern Slides," published by Eastman Kodak Co.)

National Anti-Misframe League
Pledge

As a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession a theart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first-class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Some Notes on the Interior Lighting of Theatres

R. P. Burrows

Engineering Department, National Lamp Works of General Electric Co.

IT has been truthfully said that the design of any system of illumination is, in the final analysis, an individual problem. No better field could be selected as proof of this than the interior lighting of motion picture theatres. The results obtained must always be subject to criticism from two widely divergent angles—the esthetic or artistic viewpoint, and the viewpoint of the engineer.

From the esthetic viewpoint, the lighting must harmonize with the scheme of interior decoration, which frequently represents a large investment. It should be designed to emphasize or re-inforce the ideas of the artist and to assist in creating the proper mental attitude of the audience. No engineer can lay down hard and fast rules for the design of a system of illumination which would accomplish this even a small group of theatres. Occasionally, however, the engineer can make suggestions which apply generally—for example warm red and yellow light from colored lamps used in the winter time, may be replaced by green in the summer, to produce psychological effect and imaginary sensation of warmth or cold in the audience. This effect of lighting, in conjunction with the same effect produced by a similar general color scheme may easily be equivalent to an actual rise or fall of temperature of several degrees. The artistic details, however, are largely a matter of personal taste.

No matter what the esthetic demands may be, there are still certain fundamentals of illumination design applicable to any installation which bring the individual problem within the jurisdiction of the illuminating engineer. The most important consideration is that of glare, by which is meant any brightness within the field of vision of such a character as to cause discomfort, annoyance, interference with vision or eye fatigue.

A glance at the sun proves that an extremely bright light source within the field of vision is capable of producing acute discomfort. Light sources of far less brilliancy than the sun, such for example as the filament of a Madza lamp or the incandescent mantle of a gas lamp, are also quite capable of producing discomfort by direct glare, but the annoying effect is not usually so marked. From our present knowledge, it appears that there are at least two distinct brightnesses which are of particular interest in connection with illumination problems. The more definite of these two is the brightness at which a given source looks just uncomfortably bright when viewed casually against a background. The second, and much lower value, is the brightness at which a source proves tiring and causes fatigue when continually within the field of vision for a considerable period of time. The latter value is much more difficult to determine and it apparently varies through wider limits for different individuals. What these values represent may perhaps be more clearly understood by considering the analogous case of looking out of a window which by day is a source of light for a room. Unless the room is very dark or the landscape very brilliant, the effect of looking out of the window for a moment will not be at all unpleasant, but to sit all day facing the window would prove extremely tiring, even if one were sitting at a desk or table and not paying particular attention to the window. This is exactly comparable to the case of a light source which is not bright enough to cause an immediate sensation of glare but too bright to be viewed continually. The problem of determining definite values for these two conditions of glare is rendered extremely difficult because of the fact that the extent to which glare is objectionable is partially dependent upon the contrast in brightness between the light source and the background. This is illustrated by the fact that although automobile headlights as seen at night against a dark background are likely to be so glaring as to be temporarily blinding, the same lights would in the daytime hardly be noticed. The permissible brightness of a light source is greater when the general illumination is of high intensity than when it is of low intensity. That is, for a theatre which has dark walls and furnishings, a unit of lower brightness should be used than would be permissible in a well illuminated theatre in which the decorations are light in color. The permissible ratio between source brightness and background brightness is not, however, constant; the ratio must be smaller at high values of intensity than at low ones.

A further application of these principles introduces the question of orchestra lights, which are sometimes offenders from the standpoint of glare. Good practice requires that these be of low intensity, possibly red or green in color, and so shaded that the illumination is confined to the musical score. Likewise the use of wall-brackets on the side walls very often furnishes a distracting light source of comparatively high intensity, particularly to those patrons seated near the walls, who cannot avoid the glare when they look at the screen.

This brings us to a consideration of a choice of intensity, which must be decided for the screen before any attempt can be made to determine the proper intensity for the house illumination during projection. In many theatres the screen intensity is too high, producing an effect of glare in its most insidious form. A soft-toned picture is preferable to a harsh and contrasty one, both from the esthetic and the engineering viewpoints. During projection, the house intensity should bear a relation to the screen intensity which can be described, even though it cannot at present be expressed as a mathematical ratio. If the house intensity is too low with relation to the screen, the harsh, contrasty picture will probably result. In such a case either the former should be raised, or the latter lowered. If the opposite is true, the projected picture will suffer by loss of detail. In general, the screen intensity should be so regulated that the house intensity may be made high enough to permit the audience to retain sufficient sense of vision to be able to move about the theatre without stumbling. It must always be remembered, however, that no direct light, except that issuing from the lens of the projection machine, should be allowed to reach the screen.

Sharp contrasts in intensity, as in the case of too bright exit illumination, should be carefully avoided. The projection of advertising slides close to the screen during projection not only detracts from the lighting effects of the picture, but often serve as an annoying mental distraction to the audience. The illumination of a clock face placed directly in the field of vision is often to be condemned for similar reasons. The clock should be located as far away from the screen as practicable and the lighting of its face accomplished by the use of a properly mounted and shielded lamp of, say, 10-watts.

Where persons are entering and leaving during projection, the long narrow lobby, so common to many theatres, may be so lighted that patrons will not suffer any annoyance from the change of intensity. This may be accomplished by having the intensity in the lobby gradually decrease from a high intensity at the street end to a relatively low one at the doorway to the theatre proper.

During intermissions and orchestral selections, the intensity of the house should be high enough to enable the patrons to read their programs without undue effort. It is this illumination which is so strongly influenced by the decorative effect, and to which only the most general rules can be made to apply. Eliminate light sources which are too bright in comparison with the background, or have them mounted so high as to be well out of the line of vision. A more pleasant effect than is usually produced in turning the house lights on or off may be obtained by the use of a rheostat. A fade-out of one full minute will thus produce a noticeably agreeable effect, which will be equally true when the process is reversed.

A comprehensive investigation has been proposed not only of ideal conditions in motion picture theatre lighting, but also of actual conditions as they exist in the average theatre. When sufficient data has been compiled, it is hoped that some definite recommendations can be made to guide theatre owners and managers in the lighting of their houses and the operation of their projection machines to obtain a proper screen intensity. It may be that this material will be in shape to publish later in the year.

American Made "Metol"

AMERICAN made Metol, 100 per cent pure and said to be as good in every way as the foreign product is now being sold by Mr. George L. Barrows, of 215 Water street, New York City. Those who require pure Metol and have previously been unable to obtain it should write to the above address. This product has been highly recommended by photographers who have tried it out in practice.

Mr. Barrows is also in a position to furnish film dyes in "Agfa" colors, these colors being the present standard for all film dyes.

A New High Amperage White Flame Arc

A FEW days ago a special demonstration of the new Sun-lite Arc was carried out for the benefit of the Editor No measurements were taken, but the general effects were carefully considered and discussed with the Sun-lite engineers. The demonstration was very impressive, so much so that we believe the development of this new light to be a distinct advance in studio lighting.

The Sun-lite Arc unit, shown in Fig. 1, weighs but 400 pounds complete and is mounted on eight-inch wheels for portability. Through elevating the tripod, the arc may be raised to a point eleven feet from the floor.

Of course, the part in which the studio engineer and director are interested is the actinic properties of the generated light rays. The makers claim that spectrum tests show a most unusual resemblance between light rays from the sun and those from the Sun-lite arc. In fact, the resemblance is so close as to be practically identical for all photographic purposes.

The Arc with its attachments is certainly versatile. Concentrated rays for sharp contrast or widely diffused light for other purpose can be secured instantly. By a solenoid arrangement clever lighting effects are obtained at the whim of the operator. The iris diaphragm can be attached instantly to produce spotlights of any size; the venetian blind attachment renders either vertical or horizontal shaded portions as called for by the nature of the scene being enacted.

Fig 2 illustrates the possibilities in photography made available by the Sun-lite Arc. Here is illustrated the effect of a spot-light with vignetted edge. It is but one of the actual photographs which have been taken to exhibit the variety of uses to which the new light lends itself.

Electrically, the arc is designed for 110 volts, for which the rheostat shown on the base in figure 1 is supplied. The candlepower is claimed to be approximately 100,000, with an amperage of 150.

The feeding of the white flame carbons is done automatically as is also the rotating of the upper carbon. By rotation, the carbon is burned evenly and the crater is maintained centrally, both being wonderful advantages when endeavoring to get a steady light for studio work.

Warning to Motion Picture Organists

It is not an unreasonable statement to make that within a very short time there will not be a motion picture theatre in the country that will lack an organ. We do not intend entering into a controversy as to the merits or de-merits of kinds or makes. Every instrument placed on the market by manufacturers has something in its favor. It is not to the instrument itself that we desire to draw attention, but to the performers.

History tells us that the organ is one of the earliest instruments that man conceived and it has been claimed that Jubal, mentioned in the book of Gen. iv: 21, was the father of the organ, and responsible for originating the idea of the wind instrument by the suggestion of passing breezes as they struck against the open reeds of different lengths, and the fact that reeds of different lengths emitted murmurs varying in pitch may have further suggested placing them in particular order, thus producing an agreeable succession of sounds. As centuries passed, the musical scale was further developed by varying growths or diameters.

The organ which was built and installed in religious institutions from the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Century is in every sense of the word, the father of many instruments in common use in orchestra of today. The whole of the wood-wind section, and the brass are the results of metal pipes being introduced in the organ; the saxaphone family is purely a modern development, and even the string section was invented and brought to what it is today by the original thought of different sizes of pipes which was developed in the string instruments to different sized bodies.

If there is any truth in the foregoing statement and these few words have proved that the organ is father to the orchestra, how little this is borne in mind by musicians manipulating the keyboard. The grave error of these performers is "horrible monotony." The modern instruments are fitted with combinations which frequently are set when the instrument is installed in the theatre, and as far as the performers reach in their variety of coloring is to press a button which changes the combination stop on the organ and use the swell. This instrument is rightly called the King. Any modern organ can reproduce every coloring ever conceived by orchestral intonation, but goodness knows the average performer seldom brings this out. There are exceptions, and it is the exception which conclusively proves the rule.

The ideal instrument for the theatre and doubly so in conjunction with the orchestra is the organ, but unless the performers will strenuously strive to bring out the orchestral coloring as suggested in the music they play, there is a growing danger that the average patron will resent the use of the instrument, if that churchy, stodgy tonation is continued.

The demand of the picture necessitates the use of orchestra music almost exclusively. The percentage of so-called organ music used is very small. The performer in using orchestral music has every notation of coloring cued-in, in the piano conductor parts. It is not asking too much to follow these suggestions, and were this carried out by the majority of performers, the music in the motion picture theatre when depending on the organ would be a delight instead, as in many instances today, a sanctimonious suggestion of religious institutions.—The Editors.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Salvation Rose." Dedicated to Marion Davies, Select Pictures star, playing the stellar role in the feature film, "Belle of New York." The artistic frontispiece shows Miss Davies just as she appears in the moving picture as Salvation Nell. This ballad is replete with tunefulness and has that cute little Hawaiian accompaniment the public delights in. An extensive campaign is now in full swing for the exploitation of this number. With the co-operative efforts of both publisher and film producer, the success of this appealing ballad is surefire. (J. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th St., N. Y.)

2—"I Wonder if the Same Moon Shines in Ireland To-night." This number is conceded to be the prettiest Irish ballad written in recent years. When Miss Gladys Leslie, famous Vitagraph star, heard the song, she was so elated that she volunteered to pose especially for the title page. The result of her inspiration is the typically Irish frontispiece. In the melody, in the lyric, and in the picture is portrayed that true Irish sentiment. Its altogether picturesque get-up will make it a popular seller. (J. W. Stern.)

3—"I'll Say She Does" fox-trot. Al Jolson's smashing success. (J. H. Remick, 227 W. 46th St., N. Y.)

4—"The Enchanting Waltz," by Herbert W. Lowe. Mr. Lowe has proved by his "On to Plattsburg" march and "Overseas" march that he is some composer. He has the gift—and this waltz will prove it. (Oliver Ditson Co., 178 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.)

5—"Burmah Moon." The greatest Oriental fox-trot of all time, by Lieut. Gitz Rice. (Henry Burr Music Corp., 1604 Broadway, N. Y.)

6—"Break the News to Mother," by Chas. K. Harris. The patriotic song hit of the world which is being used as the THEME of the new film "Break the News to Mother," being released by Select Pictures Corp. (Chas. K. Harris, Columbia Theatre Bldg., N. Y.)

7—"Johnny's in Town"—Welcome him home with this "pippin" of a dance number. One-step by Yellen, Meyer and Olman. (Feist Edition, 237 W. 40th St., N. Y.)

8—"How Can You Tell?" The hit song of Raymond Hitchcock's successful revue, "Hitchy Koo, 1918" one-step by Harold Orlob. (Feist.)

9—"Mary Ann"—Big one-step hit. Don't fail to get this sensational novelty. It is the quickest and most sensational hit ever published and New York is simply going wild over it. Every jazz orchestra in the East is working it over time and still they are all yelling for more. Don't fail to get your copy and watch what a hit it will make with the dancers. Don't wait until all the live wires are playing it—be the first one to do it in your locality. (Artmusic, Inc., 145 W. 45th St., N. Y.)

10—"Forever Is a Long, Long Time"—The ballad supreme. The waltz arrangement of this national ballad success is being asked for everywhere. This is a splendid, effective arrangement and introduces the popular "Somewhere Someone is Waiting." For band it is arranged as a cornet solo, or octette, or saxophone quartette. If you haven't played this yet, then get it today and watch yourself make a hit with the dancers. (Artmusic, Inc.)

Tom Mix Writes Waltz in Memory of Horse

In memory of his favorite horse, Old Blue, which died recently, Tom Mix has written the "Old Blue Waltz," which is being published by a New York music publishing house. Experienced critics say the waltz not only carries the sentiment which Mix intended it should carry, but also is uncommonly good music.

The composition found its inspiration in the wonderful companionship that for nineteen years existed between the famous Fox screen star and his horse. Old Blue died several weeks ago after having been "pensioned off" by Mix because of age.

Mix is having words written to accompany the waltz, so that it may be sung by the various Tom Mix quartettes which have been formed to sing during the exhibitions of Tom Mix pictures.

Musical Settings for Comedies

THE editor is in receipt of a very interesting letter from the Christie Film Company, stating that they have started a new innovation, that of furnishing musical cue sheets for their comedies. The letter is given in detail.

The Christie Film Company is to be commended upon its progressive ideas, and this merely proves that the producers are ever on the alert to help the exhibitor in giving an appropriate presentation of their films.

Music Editor,
The Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir: I thought it might interest you to know that we are undertaking what we believe is a new departure in endeavoring to furnish photoplay music for comedies. We are trying this out with the first of the two-reel specials, which will be released April 20 under the title, Sally's Blighted Career, featuring Fay Tincher, Molly Malone, Patricia Palmer, Harry Depp, and others.

As far as we know, musical accompaniments have not been tried yet with comedies. I doubt if we could attempt this with our regular one-reel releases, but in trying to make these new pictures specials, in every sense of the word, I believe that musical accompaniments should also be included.

Musical arrangement, which we are securing, should be particularly appropriate with this first release of the specials, since it deals with back-stage life and has a lot of corking chorus-girl scenes, with dancing, etc.

Yours cordially,

Pat Dowling.

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS
Read What Josiah Pearce & Sons Say About Our Goods

Gentlemen:

Now that you have completed equipment in our new theatres here in New Orleans and Houston, Texas, we wan to take this means of expressing to you our appreciation of the manner in which we have done business with you, also as to the character of your goods. You have, without exception, filled our orders just as promptly as we could ever expect and probably quicker than we had anticipated, and the fact of your having supplied us with brass frames and various other equipment in our fifteen theatres is evidence that we are pleased with your goods, for they are the most attractive, durable and practical that we have as yet found.

We wish you good luck in the prosecution of your work.

Yours very truly,
JOSIAH PEARCE & SONS,

Theatres Worth While

Description of Modern Wiring Installation in New People's Theatre in Chicago

THE People's Theatre, recently completed in Chicago, contains many features typical of the more advanced developments in theatre construction, especially with regard to the electrical installation. It is located near 47th Street and Ashland Avenue, in the heart of the stockyards business district. It was built by the People's Theatre Co., an organization of business men of this community, for the presentation of vaudeville and variety shows, and will be managed by James Schaeffer.

The building is fireproof, of concrete and brick construction throughout, and contains in addition to the theatre four small one-story stores, which have a depth corresponding to the depth of the foyer of the theatre. The facade is faced with terra cotta and a canopy extends over the sidewalk in front of the entrance. The theater itself is 91 by 121 ft., and has a seating capacity of 2,200.

The interior is pleasingly decorated and no expense has been spared in providing every convenience and comfort for the patrons. All objectionable posts and pillars have been eliminated in the design, and a full view of the stage may be had from any seat in the house. The stage is one of the largest in the country, being 35 ft. deep, with a proscenium opening of 53 ft.

The outside of the theatre is brilliantly illuminated by seven floodlights installed along the top containing 250-watt, type C lamps, equipped with reflectors. In addition, 75 75-watt, type C lamps are installed around the edges of the canopy. The sign installed over the canopy contains 780 10-watt lamps, of various colors, which spell the name "PEOPLE'S," surrounded by an attractive flashing border.

Six massive pendant fixtures, bronze finished, provide the lighting for the lobbies. These fixtures contain 100-watt, type C lamps, inclosed in suitable glass shades which soften and diffuse the light and are studded with numerous round frosted bulbs which add greatly to their appearance. The foyer and rest rooms are lighted by small bracket and ceiling fixtures which harmonize with the decorations.

The main auditorium is illuminated by two rows of lamps concealed in the cove of the large panel over the center.

The result is a very beautiful thing, being much more uniform than it would be possible to imagine. These rows contain 400 40-watt lamps, and the light is projected by suitable reflectors onto the panel, from which it is reflected upon the body of the house, thus giving an indirect lighting. The decorations of the panel blend with the decorations of the rest of the ceiling and are designed to give an effect similar to looking up into a blue sky flecked with white clouds. The lighting has been greatly intensified by covering the surface of the panel with aluminum leaf before painting. A small space, invisible from the main floor or balcony, has been provided between the top and bottom sections of the panel to facilitate the renewal of lamps. This is especially desirable for such a lighting effect is easily spoiled if a small number of the lamps are not lighted.

A very desirable feature has been developed in connection with the control of this lighting. The entire lighting of the cove is controlled by automatic contractors located on the contractor panel, which is described further in this article. These contractors are actuated by push-button switches, the one on the stage is operated by the stage electrician and the other, in the projector booth, controlled by the operator there. The dual control thus effected adds greatly to the safety of the theatre, for it is evident that in the event of a fire or other trouble occurring the possibilities of leaving the house in darkness are minimized. It is also much more convenient for the operators. The wiring of the lights is so arranged that alternate lights are controlled by the switches which permits the total illumination to be reduced one-half without using the dimmers. The entire arrangement, however, may be regulated by dimmers located on the stage.

Many of the latest and most modern developments are to be found in the lighting equipment of the stage. The proscenium and border strips are constructed of galvanized iron, the inside of which has been covered to give adequate reflection. They are equipped with 300-watt, type C lamps, each lamp being set in an individual compartment. Each compartment is provided with a holder on the open side into which may be inserted slides of any desired color. There are four borders and two proscenium strips which contain a total of 175 lamps. The center lamp in each border is controlled by a separate switch, so that it is not necessary to burn the entire border when setting scenes, etc. They are connected by flexible cables to outlet boxes located on the first fly-floor. The foot-lights contain 275 60-watt, type B lamps, of various colors.

Twelve 50-amp, double stage-pockets are provided to accommodate the spot-lights, portable bridges, etc., used on the floor back of the stage. In addition, two permanent bridges equipped with suitable pockets have been built at each side of the stage at the front.

Heating and Ventilating System

The heating and ventilating system is designed to conform to the Chicago requirement, which calls for 25 cu. ft. of air per minute per person. Fresh air is drawn into the basement through a 5 by 10 ft. shaft which extends above the roof of the building by a large blower. This blower is operated by a 20-hp. 1140-r. p. m. slip-ring motor, belt-connected, and has a capacity of 55,000 cu. ft. per min. At the bottom of the shaft 3300 sq. ft. of heating sections have been installed, which heat the air as it passes through. After passing through these coils the air is driven out into the auditorium through 350 mushroom ventilators located under the seats and numerous sidewall registers. The vitiated air passes out into the open air through grilled openings in the ceiling.

Fire Pump Installation and Control

In modern theatre construction fire prevention is a matter of great importance and the "People's" is no exception to this rule. As has been stated the building itself is of fireproof construction and every precaution has been taken to minimize the fire hazard.

An elaborate automatic sprinkler system has been installed, the water for which is supplied from a 2500-gal. tank situated on a steel tower above the roof of the theatre. This tank is filled by a centrifugal pump, located in the basement, having a capacity of 250 r. p. m. which is direct-connected to a 30-hp. 1720-860 r. p. m. slip-ring motor.

This motor is started and controlled by an automatic and hand-operated Sundh fire-pump control panel. This particular board was designed to meet the requirements of the Chicago Bureau of Fire Prevention and Public Safety. It is operated either by hand or automatically by a float switch in the tank on the roof. This float switch, when the water falls below a predetermined level, which in this case is about 18 in. below the top, energizes the contractor shown in the lower right-hand corner of the panel. This contractor in turn operates the upper contractors which close the motor circuit and control the various starting resistances. These resistances are then released by the auxiliary contractors which operate on a cam, timed by the dashpot shown in the upper left corner. In the manual operation the action of the first contractor is eliminated, the large contractor being closed directly by raising the lever 45 degrees.

By using the water pressure in the tank to operate the steel curtain a check is kept on the operation of the float switch. This hydraulic power is obtained through a pipe which extends into the tank to about the same level as that at which the float switch operates. If for any reason, therefore, the switch fails to act when the water has fallen below the proper level, it is impossible to raise the curtain. The water level has been fixed so that the tank must be filled after the curtain has been raised four times, which means after every two performances.

For additional fire protection a large fire damper has been installed in the roof over the stage. This damper is controlled by a closed circuit connection which is operated by closing either one of two single-pole switches located on each side of the stage convenient to the operators.

Other Features and Summary

Numerous other interesting features have been installed in connection with the electrical work. To enable the different sections of the theatre to keep in close touch with each other, a Couch intercommunicating telephone system with 14 stations located in various parts of the building has been installed. The batteries for this system are located at the pilot board on the stage and are charged from the synchronous converter located in the projector booth. This converter is of 10 kw. capacity and is used for converting the 3-phase power current into direct current used for operating the moving picture machines, spot-lights, etc., which are used in the booth. The booth itself is located opposite the stage above the gallery. All the cleaning of the theatre will be done by electrically-operated appliances.—Reprinted by permission of Electrical Review.

Pictures Reviewed in Advance

[In addition to Advance Reviews—covering pictures shown too early to be included in The Complete Plan Book—readers will also find under his heading each week the reviews of short features and serial episodes.]

Government War Loan Pictures

(Thirty-nine Single Reel Subjects)

Now that the Victory Liberty Loan is nearly ready to be pushed ' over the top," the United States Treasury Department is inviting the co-operation of the exhibitors throughout the country toward making the Loan a complete success. As the motion picture theatres have proven one of the most effective means of stimulating interest in the War Loans, it stands to reason that the Government would enlist their enthusiastic co-operation. No one has contributed a greater share in bringing victory and peace to the forces of Democracy than the exhibitor. Through his generosity and patriotism he has more than fulfilled his obligations.

In taking the Government film program he will not only push the Loan over the top, but will offer his patrons a rattling good entertainment. The program is composed of the Victory Liberty Loan Star Series—27 single-reel subjects: Heroic Deed Series—8 single-reel subjects, which are dramatizations of actual heroic conduct on the field of battle and remarkably realistic and colorful; "Knocking Knockers"—a single-reel satire by Douglas Fairbanks in his inimitable style; "With Pershing in Prussia"—a single-reel scenic compiled from pictures taken by the Signal Corps; "A Call for Liberty"—a single-reel which present Julian Eltinge in a humanization of Bartholdi's statue, and "Holding On"—a single-reel human interest story.

The Heroic Deed Series particularly are worth a place on any exhibitor's program. No war pictures have surpassed them in realism and picturesqueness. They are authentic besides. The films are distributed through the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. An exhibitor cannot go wrong if he features them entirely during the Big Drive.—Laurence Reid.

"When a Feller Needs a Friend"

(Briggs Comedies—One Reel)

FEW comedies that have been shown at the Strand theatre have received as warm appreciation from the audiences as did "When a Feller Needs a Friend," the first of the Briggs one-reel pictures. While these are founded on the characters in the Briggs cartoons which appear in the New York Tribune and are syndicated over the country these are not "animated" in any sense, but delightfully human comedies with real players.

While children largely dominate the cast the appeal to the grown-ups is the strongest, and there is not a person who "ever was young" who would fail to enjoy the first of these. It tells the story of "Skinnay's" birthday. A present from his father is a baseball, and as soon as he puts this into play it is batted into a neighbor's yard and destroys a nest of setting eggs. Then we have the preparations for the birthday party, all produced with the wonderful appreciation of country town life, with the be-candled birthday cake, the children "playing post-office," and all that goes with it. But the party is interrupted with the arrival of the neighbor who has found "Skinnay's" name on the baseball. In punishment the father sends him away to bed. Then a feller sure does need a friend.

John Carr as "Skinnay," Stephen Carr as "Buck," and little Rosemary Carr as "Mary," are the leading players, and they are all, to use the expression of the lady in the next seat, "just too cute."—R. E. Pritchard.

"Virtuous Men"

(SL Pictures—Directed by Ralph Ince)

"VIRTUOUS MEN" has plenty of fights, plenty of big mob scenes and a considerable number of fine flashes of comedy relief to back up the drawing power that lies in the two words of its title. The principals fight often and hard, three men stave off a mob of regimental size and of bouts between two there are many. The mob scenes were staged in one of the big ship yards and they are interesting because of their sweep and the unusualness of the backgrounds. These, then are the features to bring out in advertising the picture, these and the title itself.

The story by Arthur B. Sawyer and Ralph Ince tells the adventures of Bob Stokes who fights his way to the foreman's position in a lumber company and then is obliged to fight a nefarious gang of "Red Radicals." E. K. Lincoln makes a likable chap of the hero and to Danny Hayes fall the many opportunities for creating the comedy relief. His lines in the sub-titles and his actions help toward making his scenes the brightest in the picture. The other two prominent members of the cast are Grace Darling, a pretty heroine, and Clara Joel, a sufficiently wicked vampire. William B. Mack as Mockett, one of the leaders of the Reds is in the position to keep the plot moving through his various acts of villainy.

The picture was produced under the direction of Mr. Ince.

"Romany Lass"

(Harma Productions)

GYPSY romances and Scotch kilts are two things that have always proved of interest to American audiences. This picture is based on both. It is a romantic love affair between the hero, the young son of a proud Scotchman, and the heroine, a beautiful Gypsy Queen, in the end resulting in their union.

The production end of the picture comes up very high; in fact, "Romany Lass" has been produced better than any British picture the writer has ever seen. The direction is flawless, and the photography, sharp. The story, on the other hand, has been constructed well within logic; and as it deals with episodes that arouse and hold the interest, the picture should entertain satisfactorily any American audience.—P. S. Harrison.

VARIETY OF ACTION

"Bolshevism on Trial" Promises Much

HEREWITH is a page of characteristic scenes from Select's Special "Bolshevism on Trial." Immediately above is Pinna Nesbit, who appeares as the heroine. To the left she is shown making a spirited speech, and tothe upper left with Robert Fraser, leading man. The mob stuff in the upper right hand corner and the fight below give a good idea of the manner in which physical action is accentuated throughout the picture.

"BOLSHEVISM ON TRIAL"—SELECT SPECIAL

Picture as Good as Its Title; Square Deal

IT'S a corking title, this "Bolshevism on Trial," and every exhibitor who has sensed its possibilities and awaited its booking date will be glad to know that its content is every bit as good as its title. There may be some of you who have thought that you shouldn't touch on this question of Bolshevism in offering your audience entertainment. Forget such qualms, if such were at any time dominant. "Bolshevism on Trial" damns red-handed anarchy and, it is of special interest to note, gives the honest socialist a square deal. In other words, the picture attacks no political party in this country, but gives a merciless and at the same time dramatic expose of the activities of disorganized government as report has it existing in Russia today.

Based on Thomas Dixon's novel, "Comrades," the picture presents a novel story of special dramatic force. So when you herald it as a special release, if such you do, the picture is there to back you up to the last scene. The continuity, prepared by Harry Chandlee, is smooth running and puts every point over with force, and Harley Knoles' direction is of the best when it comes to the staging of every scene, whether mob or intimate.

As for the acting, there are some of the best individual performances in "Bolshevism on Trial" that we have seen lately. Pinna Nesbit's characterization of Barbara, the sincere socialist, is rare. Her dark beauty, her features, somewhat aesthetic, and her emotional ability always held realistically restrained, are qualities that make her role stand out. Leslie Stowe's Herman Wolff, the man whose greed for personal power leads him to misguide a large group of people, is sinister and, as a result, powerful. Robert Frazer is an enthusiastic and convincing hero. The support is in every respect commendable.

Particular mention should be made of the subtitles, these also being written by Mr. Chandlee. They are conservative, present convincing facts devoid of the foolish, sweeping remarks of the usual political picture, and fit the action exactly.

Certainly with the advertising you can get on the title, the cooperation from patriotic societies and newspapers that you can't keep away from you, and with the dramatic goods to back all this up, certainly "Bolshevism on Trial" will make money for you.—Length, 6 reels.—Peter Milne.

PRESS NOTICE

"Bolshevism on Trial," the special feature released by Select Pictures Corporation, will be the stellar attraction at the —— theatre all next ———. This is a picture that has caused a wave of wide-spread comment owing to its timeliness and the fact that it gives Bolshevism a fair trial and finds it guilty. The picture is based on Thomas Dixon's novel called "Comrades." This was written several years ago and was aimed as an attack against Socialism. Today, however, it appears as an expose of Bolshevism at its worst while Socialists are matched as heroes and heroines beside these ultra-radicals who would do away with all laws of God and man.

The story takes up the case of a colony of Socialists who established themselves on an island there to put their principles into practice. The trouble was that they were insincere in their ideas and that they were being misled by a Bolshevist who wanted to run the island for his own pleasure, much on the order that Russia is run today. The various activities of this group of people form an entertainment of a most unusual and dramatically entertaining sort, for a love story runs its course throughout the film, a love story in which two sincere people are the protagonists. Their happiness is for a time menaced by the lustful leader of the colony, but justice is finally restored by the use of hard fists.

Pinna Nesbit in the role of the girl creates a character long-to-be-remembered, while Robert Frazer as the hero and Leslie Stowe as the Bolshevist, head a large cast, every member of which does exceptional work.

PROGRAM READER

A picture that is in a fair way of proving the sensation of the year is "Bolshevism on Trial," a production that will come to this theatre on ——— for an extended run. This picture is not a preachment against or for Bolshevism. It merely presents the facts in the case as they have happened in other quarters of the world, as they might happen on a little island, the locale of the picture. The lust for greed of one man, and such a man is almost sure to be present in any large crowd, completely dominates the somewhat higher ideals of the majority, and he threatens to turn the island into a place of license. How he is prevented through the activities of a returned war hero makes capital entertainment. The returned hero had seen war at its worst. He had come home with a sincere conviction that wars should not be, that the existing order of things which permitted them was all wrong and he turned to Socialism as the answer. But the group of people with whom he was associated proves disappointments. They failed to practice what they preached. It is somewhat impossible to convey the full force of the drama presented in this picture. Suffice it to say that with all its timeliness in its capital entertainment and many timely features have proven dismal failure when it came to the screen. The picture is based on Thomas Dixon's novel "Comrades," and is enacted by a cast of competent players headed by Pinna Nesbit, Robert Frazer and Leslie Stowe.

THE STORY

Norman Worth, veteran of the world war, returns to his native land a broadened man. He is ready to accept any faith, political or religious, that will prevent a recurrence of the terrible disaster, and so he seizes on Socialism as the most likely opportunity. The followers of Herman Wolff, agitator, are discontented with their lot. It is their plan to buy the island of Ventura, where they will establish an ideal community with the principles of socialism as a foundation. When Worth joins them their prospects are bright, and shortly afterward the newcomer receives a year's lease on the island and is elected Comrade Chief of the organization. He is watched jealously by Wolff, whose greed for power quite overcomes the ideals of the others. Barbara Bozenta is an ardent worker in Worth's behalf. On her the wrongs of the world seem to rest their full weight.

All does not go well on the island. There is discontent. The Socialists prove insincere and quarrel about who shall do the dirty work. Disturbers in their midst demand license, not only freedom. In time they replace Worth with Wolff, who has awaited this opportunity for a full month. He imprisons Worth and declares that there shall be no law of man or God on the island. He has a hidden purpose in this announcement. For while his followers enter upon a wild revel of license, he announces that he is through with his wife, and commands Barbara to come to him. Worth's chauffeur, who accompanied him to the island on his father's orders, liberates him, and together they attack the guardians of Wolff's room. Worth is just in time to save the girl he loves. Soon after a revenue cutter arrives, summoned by another man of Worth's. The red flag of disorder is brought down and in its stead is raised the Stars and Stripes.

CATCH LINES

Do you think Bolshevism and Socialism are one and the same? See "Bolshevism on Trial."

"Give 'em an inch and they'll take an ell"—the United States permitted this colony of Socialists to go on its way unmolested just to see whether their theories were practical. But from Socialists they turned to Bolshevists—they wanted hideous license as well as freedom! See "Bolshevism on Trial."

Do you know what would happen to the United States if Bolshevism spread to its shores? They wouldn't be united for one day! See "Bolshevism on Trial."

When Herman Wolff told the members of his colony that they would be as free as if in the Garden of Eden, the young women took it literally and decided to do away with the garments of convention! See "Bolshevism on Trial."

See what your town would look like if it weren't for established Law and Order—see it in "Bolshevism on Trial."

A whole island—its inhabitants gone mad with excesses—see "Bolshevism on Trial."

See what Russia is like today.

A gathering of people outwitted by one perfidious man—he claimed to be a Socialist but was in reality a Bolshevist—see "Bolshevism on Trial."

SUGGESTIONS

Certainly the man with any advertising sense at all does not need to be told the value of "Bolshevism on Trial." You would have to go a long way before you found a picture with a more timely title, or one with a greater pulling power. And the best part of it is that with all the publicity that the title will give you you have the goods to back it up. For the contents of the picture are sane and dramatic. They don't insult anyone's intelligence. Most pictures attacking any one political party have been insane and foolish. "Bolshevism on Trial" is sane.

Here are some of the ways to get a good lot of advertising out of the feature:

If there is a patriotic society in your town invite it to view the picture privately. It will gladly indorse it. If there is no such society invite the leading citizens. Use their comments in your advertising.

If you stand in strong with your local paper the editor might easily consent to write an editorial on the picture. A cartoon might also be used. If not this, the paper will be glad to give you a review.

"PITFALLS OF A BIG CITY"—FOX

If You're Looking for Big Melodrama Here It Is

SPEAKING of big melodramas, as everyone seems to be doing these days, William Fox certainly hands out a big fellow in "Pitfalls of a Big City." It's a story of underworld life and crooks and the efforts of two of them to go straight, and it's presented in old fashioned style, with the atmosphere applied by a great, big broad brush. And it is presented with skill, the melodramatic story is exceedingly well knit, its characters are the kind that excite appeal or warrant the intensest sort of hatred.

The title is old fashioned, too, but it will carry its appeal to the class of audience that will sit down at this and gobble it up like a Christmas dinner. Highly seasoned action is the main dish of every course.

Gladys Brockwell's emotional talent is given full play in the role of the girl who reforms and goes through the severest sort of suffering for her sister's sake, while she has two very good aides in William Scott as the hero and Billy Sheer as the heavy.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 13.—Peter Milne.

THE CAST

Molly Moore	Gladys Brockwell
Jerry Sullivan	William Scott
Spike Davis	William Sheer
Marion Moore	Neva Gerber
Dave Garrity	Al Fremont
Ted Pemberton	Ashton Dearholt
Alice Pemberton	Janis Wilson

Story by Bennet R. Cohen.
Directed by Frank Lloyd.

CATCH LINES

Gives a wonderful "closeup" of the underworld life of big cities.

She went to jail rather than spoil her sister's happiness—but love found a way.

Do you know what the underworld life of a big city is like—the underworld life of New York, Chicago or San Francisco for instance? If you don't see "Pitfalls of a Big City," it'll show you—and even if you do know all about it the story presented will thrill you through and through.

A story of New York's dark streets.

A story of high life and low—of rich and poor—of honesty and corruptness—Life in its most variegated scheme is presented in "Pitfalls of a Big City"—see it.

The story of a girl who returned to the straight and narrow path and STAYED there.

PRESS NOTICE

An astonishingly vivid melodrama of underworld life is offered in the William Fox picture "Pitfalls of a Big City," featuring Gladys Brockwell. This is the attraction that is booked to appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week and the management is confident that it will create something of a sensation. Of course melodramas of crooks and the underworld are a frequent occurrence on the screen today. But "Pitfalls of a Big City" was made under exceptional circumstances and the people concerned in its production are some of the best in the picture art.

For instance, the story was read and approved by several New York newspapermen before it went into production. This insured a realism that cannot be obtained in any other way. Furthermore, the author, Bennett R. Cohen, based his scenario partly on facts provided by records. Here again is realism assured. Then when it is considered that Gladys Brockwell, one of the leading emotional actresses on the screen today, takes the star part of Molly Moore, and such able players as William Scott, William Sheer and Al Fremont are seen in her support, the true worth of the picture may perhaps be realized.

Mr. Cohen's story deals with the adventures of a girl who determined to go straight for her younger sister's sake and reveals a number of startling and original episodes, the color and power of which cannot be described here. Suffice it to say that patrons of the ——— theatre will find an unusual treat in "Pitfalls of a Big City." A big story is handled in a big way, and there is no praise higher than this.

THE STORY

Molly Moore determines to control her fingers for the sake of her sister. So she deserts the business of picking pockets and opens a restaurant. With the money gained in this way she puts her sister, Marion, through school. She tries to keep her from visiting her, but Marion has too big a heart for that, and one day she arrives, bag and baggage. Jerry Sullivan, another crook, whose love for Molly has resulted in his taking to an honest trade throws Spike Davis out of the restaurant when he make insinuating remarks to Molly. Spike is one of those who laughs at all those who attempt to earn an honest living. One day he attacks Marion, and because of this danger to her Molly insists that she go to spend the summer with the wealthy Pembertons, her friends.

Later Molly is overjoyed to read the announcement of her sister's engagement to Ted Pemberton. But her joy is quickly turned to consternation when Spike comes to her with the demand that she help him turn a "job" or else see her sister dragged to shame through publicity. Molly refuses but then when Spike has gone suddenly changes and follows him. The house he enters is the Pembertons! She also enters it and attempts to argue him out of it. They are surprised by occupants of the place and the police. Spike escapes but Molly is arrested. She refuses to talk because her story will make public the whole story of her sister's people.

It is Jerry who comes to the rescue. He finds Spike and thrashes him in a furious fight. The police break in on them and capture Spike, who then confesses his part in the robbery. Spike goes to prison and the menace of the sisters' happiness is removed. Jerry and Molly are happy together and so are Marion and Pemberton.

PROGRAM READER

"Pitfalls of a Big City," the big William Fox melodrama, will shortly be seen at this house. This is the story of the underworld and its people and moves with a force and sweep that cannot be resisted. It is interesting to note that the story was read and approved by several old New York police reporters, men just about as well acquainted with the underworld as any outside of its denizens. As a consequence of this expert attention when the picture was only a typewritten manuscript, the finished product appears as one of the most realistic and effective photodramas of this type that have ever been released. The story by Bennett R. Cohen shows a most sympathetic heroine surrounded by a varied cast of characters, each one counting largely in the general effectiveness of the drama. Gladys Brockwell is the star and to the role of Molly Moore, the girl who determines to go straight for her sister's sake, she brings all that emotional ability for which she is justly noted. Miss Brockwell really lives the part from first to last. Her support includes William Scott, William Sheer, Neva Gerber and Al Fremont, players selected for their special fitness for the parts they play as well as their histrionic ability. "Pitfalls of a Big City" will come to the ——— theatre on ———.

SUGGESTIONS

The appeal of this feature lies largely in its title and the way that you develop it in your advertising. It suggests, of course, a melodrama and certainly you can promise anything in the melodramatic line for the picture is loaded with action and atmosphere. Get these two elements into your copy—action and atmosphere. The action will take the form of any melodramatic scene, such as a fight (the picture has several and one between a man and a woman) or a burglary. And introduce your atmosphere in word arguments and backgrounds. This course will serve to carry out the implication in the main title to a good degree. We don't think you can overstep with this sort of stuff. The picture itself is painted with a broad brush and advertising calls for the same kind of treatment.

In Gladys Brockwell you have a deserving star. She is an emotional actress of real ability, as you probably know if you have seen her other Fox pictures. Here she has a role that she puts all herself into and you can play up her performance as the best she has ever given to the camera. William Scott, William Sheer and Neva Gerber are all pretty well known, so make the most of them, particularly if you cater to a fan crowd.

But don't forget that action and atmosphere stuff. It is important on dealing with a picture of this kind. William Fox hands you a title that will appeal to the mass of picture-going folk and he backs it up with a good photodramatic yarn. Don't go wrong on advertising it. If you go about it in the right way you should reap big profits.

"A YANKEE PRINCESS"—VITAGRAPH

Bessie Love in Irish Play of Simple Charm

"A YANKEE PRINCESS" may safely be put down as one of the most satisfying Bessie Love pictures that Vitagraph has ever offered. Although not original in theme yet it is developed with a fair measure of novelty so that it seems quite fresh and up-to-date. The picture moves along spontaneously, and though reinforced here and there with dramatic and humorous interludes, still these points are necessary to emphasize the character studies.

Character studies? Indeed! Miss Love portrays one of them with her customary quaintness and charm. The central idea is based upon the rise (and not a subsequent fall) of an Irish family, of whom Miss Love plays the captivating colleen. There you have it in a nut-shell. The picture will rouse the risibilities of an audience more than it will excite them. But that is Bessie Love's way.

Really the piece might have been done in shorter length, yet the wealth of humorous detail with which Director Smith enriches his action and embroiders his characterizations would be missing. This elaboration, this spray of humor, make "A Yankee Princess" decidedly worth while. It has no pretensions to offer; it does not conquer with any dramatic pyrotechnics, but with its simplicity and charm. And humorous characterization. Don't forget that!

A fanciful picture to be sure, but one which is calculated to meet with favorable response from any audience.—Length, 5 reels.—Released April 21.—Laurence Reid.

The French Chef	Max Asher

By Bernard McConvile.
Directed by David Smith.

PRESS NOTICE

Bessie Love, the charming and talented Vitagraph star, will be seen in her latest picture, "A Yankee Princess," at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is an Irish character study full of quaint humor and was written for the star by Bernard McConville. It is considered one of the most entertaining pictures in which Miss Love has appeared, as it is well balanced throughout in points of humor, pathos, characterization and plot. Under the direction of David Smith the feature has been given a fine production, indeed, it is pictorially effective in atmosphere and settings. Among the players who surround the star are Robert Gordon, who gives a sterling performance as the hero, and George Pierce, Aggie Herring and Lydia Yeaman Titus. Most of the members of the cast are character players of exceptional ability and they contribute greatly to the succes of the picture.

Miss Love assumes the role of an Irish girl who lives in Flannigan's Flats with her parents. As Patsy O'Reilly she is her daddy's darlin' as well as the terror of the neighborhood. She has a dream, has Patsy, that she may some day become a lady, and when Michael O'Reilly strikes it rich (he is a contractor) through a certain invention, the girl is on the way to having that dream realized. How the O'Reillys rise in the social scale in New York, their new home, how Patsy cuts up her old-time capers at a fashionable school and meets with a rebuff from her aristocratic friends, how she proves that she is a descendant of Irish kings with a fine ancestral tree and comes out in the end with as good a name as her snobbish companions are events which make up a delightfully amusing photoplay.
